May that Viśnu, who is the existent, imperishable, Brahmā, who is Iśvara,³ who is spirit;⁴ who with the three qualities⁵ is the cause of creation, preservation, and destruction; who is the parent of nature, intellect, and the other ingredients of the universe⁶; be to us the bestrew of understanding, wealth and final emancipation.

Having adored Viśnu⁷, the lord of all, and paid reverence to Brahmā and the rest⁸; having also saluted the spiritual preceptor, I will narrate a Purāṇa equal in sanctity to the Vedas, Maitreya,¹⁰ having saluted him reverentially, thus addressed Parāśara, the excellent sage, the grandson of Vasiṣṭha, who was versed in traditional history and the Purāṇas; who was acquainted with the Vedas and the branches of science dependent upon them; and skilled in law and philosophy; and who had performed the morning rites of devotion.

Maitreya said— Master! I have been instructed by you in the whole of the Vedas, and in the institutes of law and of sacred science; through your favour, other men, even though they be my foes, cannot accuse me of having been remiss in the acquirement of knowledge. I am now desirous, oh you who are profound in piety! to hear from you, how this world was, and how in future it will be? What is its substance, oh Brahman, and whence proceeded animate and inanimate things? Into what has it been resolved, and into what will its dissolution again occur? How were the elements manifested? Whence proceeded the gods and other beings? What are the situation and extent of the oceans and the mountains, the earth, the sun, and the planets?

What are the families of the gods and others, the Manus, the period, called Manvantaras, those termed Kalpas, and their sub-divisions, and the four ages: the events that happen at the close of a Kalpa, and the terminations of the several ages¹¹: the histories, oh great Muni of the gods, the sages, and kings; and how the Vedas were divided into branches (or schools), after they had been arranged by Vyāsa; the duties of the Brāhmaṇas, and the other tribes, as well as of those who pass through the different orders of life ? All these things I wish to hear from you, grandson of Vasiṣṭha. Incline your thoughts benevolently towards me, that I may, through your favour, be informed of all I desire to know.

Parāśara replied— Well inquired, pious Maitreya, You recall to my recollection that which was of old narrated by my father's father, Vasiṣṭha, I had heard that my father had been devoured by a Rākṣasa employed by Viśvāmitra: violent anger seized me, and I commenced a sacrifice for the destruction of the Rākṣasas: hundreds of them were reduced to ashes by the rite, when, as they- were about to be entirely extirpated, my grandfather Vasiṣṭha thus spoke to me: Enough, my child; let your wrath be appeased : the Rākṣasas are not culpable: your father's death was the work of destiny. Anger is the passion of fools; it becomes not a wise man. By whom. It may be asked, is any one killed? Every man reaps the consequences of his own acts. Anger, my son, is the destruction of all that man obtains by arduous exertions, of fame, and of devout austerities; and prevents the attainment of heaven or of emancipation. The chief sages always shun wrath: be not you, my child, subject to its influence. Let no more of these unoffending spirits of darkness be consumed. Mercy is the might of the righteous¹²

Being thus admonished by my venerable grandsire, I immediately desisted from the rite, in obedience to his injunctions, and Vasiṣṭha, the most excellent of sages, was connect with me. Then arrived Pulastyā, the son of Brahmā,¹³ who was received by my grandfather with the customary marks of respect. The illustrious brother of Pulaha said to me: Since, in the violence of animosity, you have listened to the words of your progenitor, and have exercised clemency, therefore you shall become learned in every science: since you have forborne, even though incensed, to destroy my posterity, I will bestow upon you another boon, and you shall become the author of a summary of the Purāṇas;¹⁴ you shall know the true nature of the deities, as it really is; and, whether engaged in religious rites, or abstaining from their performance,¹⁵ your understanding, through my favour, shall be perfect, and exempt from doubts. Then my grandsire Vasiṣṭha added: Whatever has been said to you by Pulastyā, shall assuredly come to pass.

Now truly all that was told me formerly by Vasiṣṭha, and by the wise Pulastyā, has been brought to my recollection by your questions, and I will relate to you the whole, even all you have asked. Listen to the complete compendium of the Purāṇas, according to its tenor. The world was produced from Viṣṇu : it exists in him: he is the cause of its continuance and cessation: he is the world.¹⁶

NOTES

1. ओम् नमो वासुदेवाय An address of this kind, to one or other Hindu divinity, usually introduces Sanskrit compositions, especially those considered sacred. The first term of this mantra or brief prayer. Om or Omkāra, is well known as a combination of letters invested by Hindu mysticism with peculiar sanctity, In the Vedas it is said to comprehend all the gods; and in the Purāṇas it is directed to be prefixed to all such formulae as that of the text. Thus in the Uttara Khaṇḍa of the Padma Purāṇa: 'The syllable Om, the mysterious name, or Brahmā, is the leader of all prayers: let it therefore, O lovely-faced, (Śiva addresses Durgā,) be employed in the beginning of all prayers:' ओङ्कारः प्रणवो ब्रह्म सर्वमन्त्रेषु नायकः। आदौ सर्वत्र युज्ञीत मन्त्राणां च शुभानने॥ According to the same authority, one of the mystical imports of the term is the collective enunciation of Viṣṇu expressed by A, of Śrī his bride intimated by u, and of their joint worshipper designated by M. A whole chapter of the Vāyu Purāṇa is devoted to this term. A text of the Vedas is there cited: ओमित्येकाक्षरं ब्रह्म। 'Om. the monosyllable Brahmā,' the latter meaning either the Supreme Being or the Vedas collectively, of which this monosyllable is the type. It is also said to typify the three spheres of the world, the three holy fires, the three steps of Viṣṇu etc. ओमित्येक त्रयो वेदास्त्रयो लोकास्त्रयोऽग्नयः। विष्णुक्रमास्त्वेतौ॥ Frequent meditation upon it, and repetition of it, ensure release from worldly existence, इत्येतदक्षरं ब्रह्म परमोकारसंहितम्। यस्तु वेदयते सम्यक् तथाध्यायति वा पुनः॥ संसारचक्रमुत्सृज्य मुक्तवचनबन्धनः। अचलं निर्गुणं स्थानं शिवं ग्रानेत्यसंशयः॥ See also Manu, II. 76. Vāsudeva, a name of Viṣṇu or Kṛṣṇa, is according to its grammatical etymology, a patronymic derivative implying son of Vāsudeva. The Vaiṣṇava Purāṇas, however, devise other explanations: see the next chapter, and again, b. VI. c. 5.

2. In this stanza occurs a series of the appellations of Viṣṇu: I. Puṇḍarikākṣa, having eyes like a lotus, or heart-pervading; or Pundarika is explained supreme glory, and Akṣa imperishable:

the first is the most usual etymon, 2. Viśvabhāvana, the creator of the universe, or the cause of the existence of all things. 3. Hṛshikeśa, lord of the senses. 4. Māhapuruṣa, great or supreme spirit; puruṣa meaning that which abides or is quiescent in body (puri sete). 5. Purvaja, produced or appearing before creation; the Orphic 'πρωτογενής'. In the fifth book, c. 18, Viśṇu is described by five appellations, which are considered analogous to these; or, I, Bhūtātmā, one with created things, or Puṇḍarikākṣa; 2. Pradhānātmā, one with crude nature, or Viśvabhāvana : 3. Indriyātmā, one with the senses, or Hṛshikeśa : 4. Paramātma, supreme spirit, or Māhapuruṣa : and Ātmā, soul; living soul, animating nature and existing before it, or Purvaja.

3. Brahmā, in the neuter form, is abstract supreme spirit: and Iṣvara is the Deity in his active nature, he who is able to do or leave undone, or to do any thing in any other manner than that in which it is done: कर्तुमकर्तुमन्यथा कर्तु समर्थः।

4. Puman which is the same with Puruṣa, incorporated spirit. By this and the two preceding terms also the commentator understands the text to signify that Viśṇu is any form of spiritual being that is acknowledged by different philosophical systems, or that he is the Brahmā of the Vedānta, the Iṣvara of the Pātañjala, and the Puruṣa of the Sāṃkhya school.

5. The three qualities, to which we shall have further occasion to advert, are Satya (सत्यं), goodness or purity, knowledge, quiescence; Rajas, foulness, passion, activity; and Tamas, darkness, ignorance, inertia.

6. Pradhanabuddhyādisūḥ. This predicate of the Deity distinguishes most of the Purāṇas from several of the philosophical systems, which maintain, as did the earliest Grecian systems of cosmogony, the eternal and independent existence of the first principle of things, as nature, matter, or chaos. Accordingly, the commentator notices the objection. Pradhāna being without beginning, it is said how can Viśṇu be its parent? To which he replies, that this is not so, for in a period of worldly destruction (Pralaya), when the Creator desists from creating, nothing is generated by virtue of any other energy or parent. Or, if this be not satisfactory, then the text may be understood to imply that intellect (Buddhi) etc, are formed through the materiality of crude nature, or Pradhāna.

7. Viśṇu is commonly derived in the Purāṇas from the root Vis, to enter, entering into, or pervading the universe, agreeably to the text of the Vedas, तत्सूक्ष्मं तदेवानुप्रविशति। "Having created that (world), he then afterwards enters into it; being, as our comment observes, undistinguished by place, time, or property; देशकालस्वरूपतो व्यवच्छेदाभावात्। According to the Matsya Purāṇa the name alludes to his entering into the mundane egg: according to the Pādma Purāṇa, to his entering into or combining with Prakṛti, as Puruṣa or spirit: स एव भगवान् विष्णु प्रकृत्यामाविवेश ह। In the Mokṣa Dharma of the Mahābhārata, s. 165, the word is derived from the root vi. signifying motion, pervasion, production, radiance; or, irregularly, from krama, to go with the particle vi, implying, variously, prefixed.

8. Brahmā and the rest is said to apply to the series of teachers through whom this Purāṇa was transmitted from its first reputed author Brahmā, to its actual narrator, the sage Parāśara. See also b, VI. c. 8.

9. The Guru, or spiritual preceptor, is said to be Kapila or Sārasvata: the latter is included in the series of teachers of the Purāṇa, Parāśara must be considered also as a disciple of Kapila, as a teacher of the Sāṃkhya philosophy.

10. Maitreya is the disciple of Parāśara, who relates the Viśṇu Purāṇa to him; he is also one of the chief interlocutors in the Bhagavata, and is introduced in the Mahābhārata (Vana Parva, s. 10.) as a great Rṣi, or sage, who denounces Duryodhana's death. In the Bhāgavata he is also termed Kaushāravi, or the son of Kusharava.

11. One copy reads Yuga dharma, the duties peculiar to the four 14 ages, or their characteristic properties, instead of Yugānta.

12. Sacrifice of Parāśara. The story of Parāśara's birth is narrated in detail in the Mahābhārata (Adi Parva, s. 176). King Kalmāṣapāda meeting with Śakti, the son of Vasiṣṭha, in a narrow path in a thicket, desired him to stand out of his way. The sage refused: on which the Raja beat him with his whip, and Śakti cursed him to become a Rākṣasa, a man-devouring spirit. The Raja in this transformation killed and ate its author, or Śakti, together with all the other sons of Vasiṣṭha, Śakti left his wife Adrisyanti pregnant, and she gave birth to Parāśara, who was brought up by his grandfather. When he grew up, and was informed of his father's death, he instituted a sacrifice for the destruction of all the Rākṣasas, but was dissuaded from its completion by Vasiṣṭha and other sages or Atri, Pulastyā, Pulaha, and Kratu. The Mahābhārata adds, that; when he desisted from the rite, he scattered the remaining sacrificial fire upon the northern face of the Himalaya mountain, where it still blazes forth at the phases of the moon, consuming Rākṣasas, forests, and mountains. The legend alludes possibly to some trans-Himalayan volcano. The transformation of Kalmaṣapāda is ascribed in other places to a different cause; but he is every where regarded as the devourer of Śakti or Saktri, as the name also occurs. The story is told in the Liṅga Purāṇa (Purvārddha, s. 64) in the same manner, with the addition, conformably to the Śaiva tendency of that work, that Parāśara begins his sacrifice by propitiating Mahādeva Vasiṣṭha's dissuasion, and Pulastyā's appearance, are given in the very words of our text; and the story concludes, 'thus through the favour of Pulastyā and of the wise Vasiṣṭha, Parāśara composed the Vaiṣṇava (Viṣṇu) Purāṇa, containing ten thousand stanzas, and being the third of the Purāṇa compilations (Purāṇasamhitā). The Bhāgavata (b. III. s. 8) also alludes, though obscurely, to this legend. In recapitulating the succession of the narrators of part of the Bhāgavata, Maitreya states that this first Purāṇa was communicated to him by his Guru Purasara, as he had been desired by Pulastyā: प्रोवाच मह्यं स दयालुरुक्तो मुनिः पराशरः (पुलस्त्येन पुराणमाद्यम्) i.e. according to the commentator, agreeably to the boon given by Pulastyā to Parāśara, saying, 'You shall be a narrator of Purāṇas; पुराणवक्ता भविष्यति The Mahābhārata makes no mention of the communication of this faculty to Parāśara by Pulastyā; and as the Bhāgavata could not derive this particular from that source, it here most probably refers unavowedly, as the Liṅga does avowedly, to the Viṣṇu Purāṇa.

13. Pulastyā, as will be presently seen, is one of the Ṛsis. who were the mind-born sons of Brahmā. Pulaha, who is here also named, is another. Pulastyā is considered as the ancestor of the Rākṣasas, as he is the father of Visravas, the father of Rāvana and his brethren, Uttara Rāmāyaṇa, Mahābhārata, Vana Parva. s. 272. Pādma Purāṇa Liṅga Purāṇa s. 63.

14. Purāṇa samhitā karttā bhavān bhaviṣyati. You shall be a maker of the Samhitā or compendium of the Purāṇas or of the Viṣṇu Purāṇa, considered as a summary or compendium of Pauranic traditions, in either sense it is incompatible with the general attribution of all the Purāṇas to Vyāsa.

15. Whether performing the usual ceremonies of the Brāhmaṇas. or leading a life of devotion and penance, which supersedes the necessity of rites and sacrifices.

16. These are, in fact, the brief replies to Maitreya's six questions (p. 3). or. How was the world created? By Viṣṇu how will it be? At the periods of dissolution it will be in Viṣṇu. Whence proceeded animate and inanimate things? From Viṣṇu. Of what is the substance of the world? Viṣṇu. Into what has it been. and will it agnir be. resolved? Viṣṇu. He is therefore both the instrumental and material cause of the universe. 'The answer to the "whence" replies to the query as to the instrumental cause: "He is the world" replies to the inquiry as to the material cause.' अनेन यतश्चैतदस्य निमित्प्रशनस्योत्तरं जगच्च स इत्युपादानप्रशनस्योत्तरं। And by this explanation of the agency of the materiality, etc. of Viṣṇu. as regards the universe, (it follows that) all will be produced from, and all will repose in him:, अनेनैव विष्णोः सर्वजगदुपादान-रूपकर्तृत्वादिकथेन विष्णोरेवोद्दिविष्टति तत्रैव स्थास्यतीति। We have here precisely the TO nav of the Orphic doctrines, and we might fancy that Brucker was translating a passage from a Purāṇa when he describes them in these words: "Continuisse Jovem (lege Viṣnum) sive summum deum in se omnia. omnibus ortum ex se dedisse, omnia ex se genuisse. et ex sua produxisse essentia. Spiritum esse universi qui omnia regit vivificat estque; ex quibus necessario sequitur omnia in eum redditura." Hist. Philos. I. 388. Jamblichus and Proclus also testify that the Pythagorean doctrines of the origin of the material world from the Deity, and its identity with him, were much the same.—Cudworth. I. c. p. 348.

Who can describe him who is not to be apprehended by the senses: who is the best of all things; the supreme soul, self-existent: who is devoid of all the distinguishing characteristics of complexion, caste, or the like; and is exempt from birth, vicissitude, death, or decay: who is always, and alone: who exists every where, and in whom all things here exist; and who is thence named Vāsudeva¹⁰? He is Brahmā,¹¹ supreme, lord, eternal, unborn, imperishable, undecaying; of one essence; ever pure as free from defects. He, that Brahmā, was all things; comprehending in his own nature the indiscreet and discrete, He then existed in the forms of Puruṣa and of Kāla. Puruṣa (spirit) is the first form of the supreme; next proceeded two other forms, the discrete and indiscrete; and Kāla (time) was the last. These four—Pradhāna (primary or crude matter), Puruṣa (spirit), Vyakta (visible substance), and Kāla (time)—the wise consider to be the pure and supreme condition of Viṣṇu.¹² These four forms, in their due proportions, are the causes of the production of the phenomena of creation, preservation, and destruction. Viṣṇu being thus discrete and indiscrete substance, spirit, and time, sports like a playful boy, as you shall learn by listening to his frolics.¹³

That chief principle (Pradhāna), which is the indiscrete cause, is called by the sages also Prākṛti (nature): it is subtle, uniform, and comprehends what is and what is not (or both causes and effects); is durable, self-sustained, illimitable, undecaying, and stable; devoid of sound or touch, and possessing neither colour nor form; endowed with the three qualities (in equilibrium); the mother of the world; without beginning; and that into which all that is produced is resolved.¹⁴ By that principle all things were invested in the period subsequent to the last dissolution of the universe, and prior to creation¹⁵. For Brahmanas learned in the Vedas, and teaching truly their doctrines, explain such passages as the following as intending the production of the chief principle (Pradhāna).

"There was neither day nor night, nor sky nor earth, nor darkness nor light, nor any other things, save only One, unapprehensible by intellect, or That which is Brahmā and Pumān (spirit) and Pradhāna (matter)"¹⁶. The two forms which are other than the essence of unmodified Viṣṇu, are Pradhāna (matter) and Puruṣa (spirit); and his other form, by which those two are connected or separated, is called Kāla (time)¹⁷. When discrete substance is aggregated in crude nature, as in a foregone dissolution, that dissolution is termed elemental (Prakṛta). The deity as Time is without beginning, and his end is not known; and from him the revolutions of creation, continuance, and dissolution uninterruptingly succeeds: (or when, in the latter season, the equilibrium of the qualities (Pradhāna) exists, and spirit (Pumān) is detached from matter, then the form of Viśnu which is Time abide)?¹⁸. Then the supreme Brahmā, the supreme soul, the substance of the world, the lord of all creatures, the universal soul, the supreme ruler, Hari, of his own will having entered into matter and spirit, agitated the mutable and immutable principles, the season of creation being arrived, in the same manner as fragrance affects the mind from its proximity merely, and not from any immediate operation upon mind itself: so the Supreme influenced the elements of creation¹⁹. Puruṣottama is both the agitator and the thing to be agitated; being present in the essence of matter, both when it is contracted and expanded²⁰. Viśnu, supreme over the supreme, is of the nature of discrete forms in the atomic productions, Brahmā and the rest (gods, men, etc.)

Then from that equilibrium of the qualities (Pradhāna) presided over by soul²¹, proceeds the unequal development of those qualities (constituting the principle Mahat or Intellect) at the time of creation²².

The Chief principle then invests that Great principle, Intellect, and it becomes three fold, as affected by the quality of goodness, foulness, or darkness, and invested by the Chief principle (matter) as seed is by its skin. From the Great principle (Mahat) Intellect, threefold Egotism, (Ahaṅkāra)", denominated Vaikārika, 'pure,' Taijasa, 'passionate;;, and Bhutādi, rudimental.²³ is produced; the origin of the (subtile) elements and of the organs of sense; invested, in consequence of its three qualities, by Intellect, as Intellect is by the Chief principle. Elementary Egotism then becoming productive, as the rudiment of round, produced from it Ether, of which sound is the characteristic, investing it with its rudiment of sound. Ether becoming productive, engendered the rudiment of touch; whence originated strong wind, the property of which is touch; and Ether, with the rudiment of sound, enveloped the rudiment of touch.

Then wind becoming productive, produced the rudiment of form (colour); whence light (or fire) proceeded, of which, form (colour) is the attribute; and the rudiment of touch enveloped the wind with the rudiment of colour. Light becoming productive, produced the rudiment of taste; whence proceed all juices in which flavour resides; and the rudiment of colour invested the juices with the rudiment of taste. The waters becoming productive, engendered the rudiment of smell; whence an aggregate (earth) originates, of which smell is the property²⁴. In each several element resides its peculiar rudiment; thence the property of tanmātratā²⁵ (type or rudiment) is ascribed to these elements. Rudimental elements are not endowed with qualities, and therefore they are neither soothing, nor terrific, nor stupefying²⁶. This is the elemental creation, proceeding from the principle of egotism affected by the property of darkness. The organs of sense are said to be the passionate produces of the same principle, affected by foulness; and the ten divinities²⁷ proceed from egotism affected by the principle or goodness; as does Mind, which is the eleventh. The organs of sense are ten: of the ten, five are the skin, eye, nose, tongue, and ear; the object of which, combined with Intellect, is the apprehension of sound and the rest: the organs of excretion and procreation, the hands, the feet, and the voice, form the other five; of which excretion, generation, manipulation, motion, and speaking, are the several acts,

Then, ether, air, light, water, and earth, severally united with the properties of sound and the rest, existed as distinguishable according to their qualities, as soothing, terrific, or stupefying; but possessing various energies, and being unconnected, they could not, without combination, create living beings, not having blended with each other.

Having combined, therefore, with one another, they assumed, through their mutual association, the character of one mass of entire unity; and from the direction of spirit, with the acquiescence of the indiscrete Principle²⁸, Intellect and the rest, to the gross elements inclusive, formed an egg²⁹, which gradually expended like a bubble of water. This vase egg, O sage, compounded of the elements, and resting on the waters, was the excellent natural abode of Viṣṇu in the form of Brahma; and there Viṣṇu, the lord of the universe, whose essence is inscrutable, assumed a perceptible form, and even he himself abided in it in the character of Brahmā.³⁰

Its womb, vast as the mountain Meru, was composed of the mountains; and the mighty oceans were the waters that filled its cavity. In that egg, O Brahman, were the continents and seas and mountains, the planets and divisions of the universe, the gods, the demons, and mankind. And this egg was externally invested by seven natural envelopes, or by water, air, fire, ether, and Ahaṅkāra the origin of the elements, each tenfold the extent of that which it invested; next came the principle of intelligence; and finally, the whole was surrounded by the indiscrte Principle: resembling thus the cocoa-nut, filled ulteriorly with pulp, and exteriorly covered by husk and rind.

Affecting then the quality of activity, Hari, the lord of all, himself becoming Brahmā, engaged in the creation of the universe. Viśṇu with the quality of goodness, and of immeasurable power, preserves created things through successive ages, until the close of the period termed a Kalpa; when the same mighty deity, Janārdhana,³¹ invested with the quality of darkness, assumes the awful form of Rudra, and swallows up the universe. Having thus devoured all things, and converted the world into one vast ocean, the Supreme reposes upon his mighty serpent couch amidst the deep: he awakes after a season, and again, as Brahmā, becomes the author of creation.

Thus the one only god, Janārddana, takes the designation of Brahmā, Viśṇu, and Śiva, accordingly as he creates, preserves, or destroys.³² Viśṇu as creator, creates himself; as preserver, preserves himself; as destroyer, destroys himself at the end of all things. This world of earth, air, fire, water, ether, the senses, and the mind; all that is termed spirit,³³ that also is the lord of all elements, the universal from, and impreishable: hence he is the cause of creation, preservation, and destruction; and the subject of the vicissitudes inherent in elementary nature.³⁴ He is the object and author of creation: he preserves, destroys, and is preserved. He, Viśṇu, as Brahmā, and as all other beings, is infinite form: he is the supreme, the giver of all good, the fountain of all happiness.³⁵

1. The three hypostases of Viśṇu. Hiranyakarba is a name of Brahmā; he who was born from the golden egg. Hari is Viśṇu, and Śāṅkara Śiva. The Viśṇu who is the subject of our text is the supreme being in all these three divinities or hypostases, in his different characters of creator, preserver and destroyer. Thus in the Mārkaṇḍeya: 'Accordingly, as the primal all-pervading spirit is distinguished by attributes in creation and the rest, so he obtains the denomination of Brahmā, Viśṇu, and Śiva. In the capacity of Brahmā he creates the worlds; in that of Rudra he destroys them; in that of Viśṇu he is quiescent. These are the three Avasthās (lit. hypostases) of the self-born. Brahmā is the quality of activity : Rudra that of darkness; Viṣṇu, the lord of the world, is goodness: so. therefore, the three gods are the three qualities They are ever combined with. and dependent upon one another, and they are never for an instant separate; they never quit each other.'

The notion is one common to all antiquity, although less philosophically conceived, or perhaps less distinctly expressed, in the passages which have come down to us. The τρεῖς α'ρικάς νποσΤ áστεis of Plato are said by Cudworth (I. 111), upon the authority of Plotinus, to be an ancient doctrine, παλαιά δσεα and he also observes, "Orpheus, Pythagoras, and Plato have all of them asserted a trinity of divine hypostases; and as they unquestionably derived much of their doctrine from the Egyptians, it may reasonably be suspected that the Egyptians did the like before them." As however the Grecian accounts, and those of the Egyptians, are much more perplexed and unsatisfactory than those of the Hindus, it is most probable that we find amongst them the doctrine in its most original as well as most methodical and significant form.

2. This address to Viṣṇu pursues the notion that he, as the supreme being, is one. whilst he is all: he is Avikāra, not subject to change; Sadaikarūpa, one invariable nature: he is the liberator (tāra), or he who bears mortals across the ocean of existence: he is both single and manifold (ekānekākarūpa); and he is the indiscrete (avyakta) cause of the world, as well as the discrete (vyakta) effect: or the invisible cause, and visible creation.

3. Jagannaya, made up. or consisting substantially (मय). of the world. Māyā in an affix denoting 'made' or consisting of,' as Kāṣṭhā maya., made of wood.' The world is therefore not regarded by the Pauraniks as an emanation or an illusion, but as consubstantial with its first cause.

4. An̄iyansam̄ an̄iyasam̄ 'the most atomic of the atomic;' alluding to the atomic theory of the Nyāya or logical school.

5. Or Acyuta; a common name of Viṣṇu, from a, privative, and chyuta. fallen; according to our comment, 'he who does not perish with created things.' The Mahābhārata interprets it in one place to mean. 'he who is not distinct from final emancipation;'and in another to signify, 'exempt from decay, (क्षयहीनः). A commentator on the Kāśī-knāḍa of the Skanda Purāṇa explains it. -be who never declines (or varies) from his own proper nature;' स्वभावादप्रच्यवते ।

6. This is another commen title of Viṣṇu, implying supreme, best (Uttama), spirit (Puruṣa), or male. or sacrifice, or. according to the Mahābh. Mokṣa Dharma, whatever sense Puruṣa may bear:

पुरुषो यज्ञ इत्येवं यत् परं परिकीर्तिं ।

यच्चान्यत् पुरुषाख्यं स्यात् सर्वं तत्पुरुषोत्तमः ॥

7. Paramārthatas, 'by or through the real object, or sense; through actual truth.'

8. Bhrānti darśanatas 'false appearances,' in opposition to actual truth..By the nature of visible objects, (अर्थस्वरूपेण) : Artha is explained by drīṣya 'visible;; swarūpena by 'the nature of: that is, visible objects are not what they seem to be. independent existences; they are essentially one with their original source: and knowledge of their true nature or relation to Viṣṇu, is knowledge of Viṣṇu himself. This is not the doctrine of Māyā, or the influence of illusion, which alone, according to Vedānta idealism, constitutes belief in the existence of matter: a doctrine foreign to most of the Purāṇas and first introduced amongst them apparently by the Bhāgavata.

9. A different and more detailed account of the transmission of the Viṣṇu Purāṇa is given in the last book. c. 8.

10. The ordinary derivation of Vāsudeva has been noticed above (p. I): here it is derived from Vas, 'to dwell,' from Viṣṇu's abiding in all things, and all in him: सर्वं जगदात्मनि वासयति सर्वं भूतेषु वसतीति वासुः । The Mahābhārata explains Vasu in the same manner, and Deva to signify radiant, shining :

सर्वं जगदात्मनि वासयति सर्वं भूतेषु वसतीति वासुः ।

सुर्यं इव दीपिमा नितिदेवः वासुश्चासो देवश्चेति वासुदेवः ॥

He causes all things to dwell in him, and he abides in all: whence he is named Vasu: being resplendent as the sun, he is called Deva: and he who is both these, is denominated Vāsudeva., See also b. VI. c. 5.

11. The commentator argues that Vāsudeva must be the Brahmā, or supreme being, of the Vedas, because the same circumstances are predicated of both, as eternity, omnipresence, omnipotence, etc.; but he does not adduce any scriptural text with the name Vāsudeva.

12. Time is not usually enumerated in the Purāṇas as an element of the first cause, but the Pādma Purāṇa and the Bhāgavata agree with the Viṣṇu in including it. It appears to have been regarded at an earlier date as an independent cause: the commentator on the Mokṣa Dharma cites a passage from the Vedas, which he understands to allude to the different theories of the cause of creation: कालः स्वभावे नियतिर्यहृच्छ्या भूतानि योनिः पुरुषः। Time, inherent nature, consequence of acts, self-will, elementary atoms, matter, and spirit, asserted severally by the Astrologers, the Buddhists, the Mīmāṃsakas, the Jains, the Logicians, the Sāṃkhya, and the Vedantis. Kṛṣṇoś was also one of the first generated agents in creation, according to the Orphic theogony.

13. The creation of the world is very commonly considered to be the Līlā (लीला), sport or amusement, of the Supreme Being.

14. The attributes of Pradhāna, the chief (principle or element), here specified, conform generally to those ascribed to it by the Sāṃkhya philosophy (Sāṃkhya Kārikā, p. 16, etc,), although some of them are incompatible with its origin from a first cause. In the Sāṃkhya this incongruity does not occur; for there Pradhāna is independent, and coordinate with primary spirit. The Purāṇas give rise to the inconsistency by a lax use of both philosophical and pantheistical expressions. The most incongruous epithets in our text are however explained away in the comment. Thus nitya (नित्य), 'eternal' is said to mean 'uniform, not liable to increase or diminution:' नित्यं सदैकरूपं वृद्धयदहोमः। Sandasadātmaka (सदसदात्मकं), 'comprehending what is and what is not,' means 'having the power of both cause and effect, (कार्यकारणशक्तियुक्तं) as preceding from Viṣṇu, and as giving origin to material things. Anādi, 'without beginning,' means

'without birth' (जन्मशूल्यं), not being engendered by any created things but proceeding immediately from the first cause. 'The mother,' or literally 'the womb of the world (जगद्योनि), means 'the passive agent in creation,' operated on or influenced by the active will of the Creator. The first part of the passage in the text is a favourite one with several of the Purāṇas, but they modify it and apply it after their own fashion. In the Viṣṇu the original is,

अव्यक्तं कारणं यत् तत् प्रधानसृषिसत्तमैः।

प्रोच्यते प्रकृतिः सूक्ष्मा नित्यं सदसदात्मकं॥ rendered as above. The Vāyu, Brahmāṇḍa, and Kūrma Purāṇas have अव्यक्तं कारणं यत्तनित्यं सदसदात्मकं।

प्रधानं प्रकृतिश्वेतं यमाहस्तत्त्वचिन्तकाः॥

The indiscrete cause, which is uniform, and both cause and effect, and whom those who are acquainted with first principles call Pradhāna and Prakṛti— is the unrecognizable Brahmā, who was before all: अविज्ञेयं ब्रह्माये समवर्तत। But the application of two synonyms of Prakṛti to Brahmā seems unnecessary at least. The Brahmā Purāṇa corrects the reading apparently: the first line is as before: second is, प्रधानं पुरुषं यस्मान् निर्ममे विश्वमीदृशां। The passage is placed absolutely; There was an indiscrete cause eternal, and cause and effect, which was both matter and spirit (Pradhāna and Puruṣa), from which this world was made. Instead of इहूः 'such' or 'this,' some copies read ईश्वरः 'from which Isvara or god (the active deity or Brahmā) made the world., The Hari Vaṁśa has the same reading, except in the last term, which it makes ईश्वरं that is, according to the commentator, 'the world, which is Isvara. was made. The same authority explains this indiscrete cause, avyakta kārana, to denote Brahmā, "the creator; तं वै विद्धि ब्रह्माणं स्थारं सर्वभूतानां। an identification very unusual, if not inaccurate, and possibly founded on misapprehension of what is stated by the Bhaviṣya Purāṇa: यत्तत् कारणप्रव्यक्तं नित्यं सदसदात्मकं। तद्विशिष्टः स पुरुषो लोके ब्रह्मेति कीर्त्यते। एवं स भगवानप्त इति। 'That male or spirit which is endowed with that which is the indiscrete cause, etc, is known in the world as Brahmā: he being in the egg, ac.' The passage is precisely the same in Manu, I. 11; except that we have 'viśiṣṭa, instead of 'visiṣṭha:' the latter is a questionable reading, and is probably wrong: the sense of the former is 'detached;' and the whole means very consistently, 'embodied spirit detached from the indiscrete cause of the world is known as Brahmā. The Pādma Purāṇa inserts the first अव्यर्कं line, etc., but has महदाविशं पात्तं सृजतीति विनिश्चयः। 'Which creates undoubtedly Mahat and the other qualities; assigning the first epithets, therefore, as the Viṣṇu does to Prakṛti only. The Linga also refers the expression to Prakṛti alone, but makes it a secondary cause: अव्यर्कं चेष्ट्रात् तस्मादभवत् कारणं प्रधानं

प्रकृतिं चैव यदाहुस्तत्त्वचिन्तनकाः। 'An indiscrete cause, which those acquainted with first principles call Pradhāna and Prakṛti proceeded from that Iśvara (Śiva). This passage is one of very many instances in which expressions are common to several Purāṇas that seem to be borrowed from one another, or from some common source older than any of them, especially in this instance, as the same text occurs in Manu.

15. The expression of the text is rather obscure; 'All was pervaded (or comprehended) by that chief principle before (recreation), after the (last) destruction:' तेनाग्रे सर्वमेवासीद् व्याप्तं वै प्रलयादनु। The ellipses are filled up by the commentator. This, he adds, is to be regarded as the state of things at a Mahā Pralaya, or total dissolution, leaving, therefore, crude matter, nature, or chaos, as a coexistent element with the Supreme. This, which is conformable to the philosophical doctrine, is not however that of the Purāṇas in general, nor that of our text, which states (b. VI. c. 4), that at a Prakṛta, or elementary dissolution. Pradhāna itself merges into the deity. Neither is it apparently the doctrine of the Vedas, although their language is somewhat equivocal.

16. The metre here is one common to the Vedas, Triṣṭubh, but in other respects the language is not characteristic of those compositions. The purport of the passage is rendered somewhat doubtful by its close, and by the explanation of commentator. The former is, एकं प्रधानिकं ब्रह्मं पुमांस्तदासीत्। 'One Pradhānika Brahmā Spirit: that, was. The commentator explains Pradhānika. Pradhāna eva, the same word as Pradhāna; but it is a derivative word, which may be used attributively, implying "having, or conjoined with. Pradhāna.. The commentator, however, interprets it as the substantive; for he adds, There was Pradhāna and Brahmā and Spirit; this triad was at the period of dissolution;' प्रधानिकं ब्रह्मं च पुमांश्चेति त्रयमेव प्रलये आसीत्। He evidently, however, understands their conjoint existence as one only; for he continues, 'So, according to the Vedas, then there was neither the non-existent (invisible cause, or matter) nor the existent (visible effect, or creation): च श्रुतिनांसदासीत्रोसदासत्तदानीं। meaning that there was only One Being, in whom matter and its modifications were all comprehended.

17. Or it might be rendered, 'Those two other forms (which proceed) from his supreme nature; विष्णोः स्वरूपात्परतः that is, from the nature of Viṣṇu, when he is Nirupādhī, or without adventitious attributes: निरूपाधीर्विष्णोः स्वरूपात्। 'other' (अन्ये); the commentator states they are other or separate from Viṣṇu only through Māyā, illusion,' but here implying 'false notion; the elements of creation being in essence one with Viṣṇu, though in existence detached and different.

18. Pradhāna, when unmodified, is, according to the Sāṅkhyas and Paurāṇiks, nothing more than the three qualities in equilibrio, or 15 goodness, foulness, and darkness neutralising each other; (Sāṅkhya Kārikā, p. 52.) so in the Matsya Purāṇa: सत्त्वं रजस्तमशैव गुणत्रयमुदाहतं, साम्यावस्थितरेतेषां प्रकृतिः परिकीर्तिता। This state is synonymous with the non-evolution of material products, or with dissolution; implying however, separate existence, and detached from spirit. This being the case, it is asked what should sustain matter and spirit whilst separate, or renew their combination so as to renovate creation? It is answered, Time, which is when everything else is not; and which, at the end of a certain interval, unites Matter, Pradhāna, and Puruṣa, and produces creation. Conceptions of this kind are evidently comprised in the Orphic triad, or the ancient notion of the co-operation of three such principles in creation, as Phanes or Eros, which is the Hindu spirit or Puruṣa; Chaos, matter or Piadhana : and Chronos, or Kāla time.

19. Pradhāna is styled Vyaya 'that which may be expended,' or Pariṇāmin 'which may be modified,' and Puruṣa is called Avyaya 'inconsumable,' or aparinamin. 'immutable.' The expressions प्रविश्य having entered into,' and क्षोभयामास 'agitated,' recall the mode in which divine intelligence, mens, νοῦς, was conceived by the ancients to operate upon matter:

φρην.....φροντισν κοσμον απαντα
.....κατα σσονσα θοησιν:
as in a more familiar passage:

Spiritus intus alit totamque infusa per artus
Mens agitat molem et magno se corpore miscet:
or perhaps it more closely approximates to the Phoenician cosmogony, in which a spirit mixing with its own principles gives rise to creation. Brucker, I. 240, As presently explained, the mixture is not mechanical; it is an influence or effect exerted upon intermediate agents, which produce effect; as perfumes do not delight the mind by actual contact, but by the impression they make upon the sense of smelling, which communicates it to the mind. The entrance of the supreme Viśnu into spirit as well as matter is less intelligible than the view elsewhere taken of it, as the infusion of spirit, identified with the Supreme, into Prakṛti or matter alone. Thus in the Pradma Purāna:

योऽसौ प्रकृत्या: पुरुषः प्रेच्यते स इहाच्युतः।
स एव भगवान्निष्णु प्रकृत्यामाविवेशह॥

'He who is called the male (spirit) of Prakṛti, is here named Acyuta; and that same divine Viśnu entered into Prakṛti.' So the Brhat Nāradīya: प्रकृतौ क्षेभमापन्ने पुरुषात्त्वे जगदगुरौ। The lord of the world, who is called Puruṣa, producing agitation in Prakṛti. From the notion of influence or agitation produced on matter through or with spirit, the abuse of personification led to actual or vicarious admixture. Thus the Bhāgavata, identifying Māyā with Prakṛti, has,

कालवृत्त्या तु मायायां गुणमध्यामधोक्षजः।
पुरुषेणात्मभूतेन वीर्यमाधत्त वीर्यवान्॥

'Through the operation of time, the Mighty One, who is present to the pure, implanted a seed in Māyā endowed with qualities, as Puruṣa, which is one with himself.' B. III. s. 5. And the Bhaviṣya: 'Some learned men say that the Supreme Being, desirous to create beings, creates in the commencement of the Kalpa a body of soul (or an incorporal substance): which soul created by him enters into Prakṛti: and Prakṛti being thereby agitated, creates many material elements.' अन्ये चेदं महाबाही प्रवदन्ति मनीषिणः॥ योऽसावात्मा परस्तातु कल्पादी सृजते तनुं। पुद्गलस्य महावाहो सिसुक्षिर्विधाः प्रजाः॥ तेन सृष्टः पुद्गलस्तु प्रधानं विशते नृपः प्रधानं क्षोभितं तेन सृजते विकारान् बहून्॥

But these may be regarded as notions of a later date. In the Mahābhārata the first cause is declared to be 'Intellectual,' who creates by his mind or will: मानसो नाम पूर्वाङ्गि विश्रुतो वै महर्षिभिः। अनादिनिधनो देवस्थाभेदोऽजरामः॥ 'The first (Being) is called Mānasa (intellectual), and is so celebrated by great sages: he is God, without beginning or end, indivisible, immortal, undecaying.' And again: प्रजाविसर्गं विविधं मानसो मनसोऽसृजत्। The Intellectual created many kinds of creatures by his mind.'

20. Contraction, Sankoca (संकोचः), is explained by Sāmya (साम्यं), sameness or equilibrium of the three qualities, or inert Pradhāna: and Expansion, Vikāsa (विकाशः), is the destruction of this equipoise, by previous agitation and consequent development of material products.

21. The term here is Kṣetrajña. 'embodied spirit' or that which knows the Kṣetra or 'body' implying the combination of spirit with form or matter, for the purpose of creating.

22. The first product of Pradhāna sensible to divine, though not to mere human organs, is, both according to the Sāṃkhya and Paurānic doctrines, the principle called Mahat, literally 'the Great.' explained in other places, as in our text. "the production of the manifestation of the qualities:" युणव्यञ्जनसम्भूतिः। or, as in the Vāyu, युणभावावध्ययानो महान् प्रादुर्बलभूत ह। We have in the same Purāna, as well as in the Brahmāṇḍa and Linga, a number of synonyms for this term. as, मनो महान् मतिर्व्वा पूर्वद्विः ख्यातिरीश्वरः। प्रजा चितिः स्मृतिः संविद्विपुरं चोच्यते ब्रूपैः। They are also explained, though not very distinctly, to the following purport: Manas is that which considers the consequences of acts to all creatures, and provides for their happiness. Mahat, the Great principle, is so termed from being the first of the created principles, and from its extension being greater than that of the rest. Mati is that which discriminates and distinguishes objects preparatory to their fruition by Soul. Brahmā implies that which effects the development and augmentation of created things. Pur is that by which the confluence of nature occupies and fills all bodies. Buddhi is that which communicates to soul the knowledge of good and evil. Khyāti is the means of individual fruition. or the faculty of discriminating objects by appropriate designations, and the like. Iśvara is that which knows all things as if they were present. Prajñā is that by which the properties of things are known. Citi is that by which the consequences of acts and species of knowledge are selected for the use of soul. Smriti is the faculty of recognising all things, past, present, or to come. Samvit is that in which all things are found or known, and which is found or known in all things: and Vipura is that which is free from the effects of contrarieties, as of knowledge and ignorance, and the like. Mahat is also called Isvara, from, its exercising supremacy over all things; Bhava, from its elementary existence : Eka, or 'the one', from its singleness; Purusa, from its abiding within the body; and from its being ungenerated it is called Swayambhu." Now in this nomenclature we have chiefly two sets of words; one, as Manas, Buddhi, Mati, signifying mind, intelligence, knowledge, wisdom, design . and the other, as Brahmā, Isvara, etc., denoting an active creator and ruler of the universe: as the Vāyu adds. महा॒ सृष्टि॑ विकुरुते॒ चोद्यमानः॒ सिसृक्षया॑ 'Mahat, impelled by the desire to create, causes various creation:, and the Māhabhārata has महात् सप्तर्जाहिकरं॑ 'Mahat created Ahaṅkāra.' The Purāṇas generally employ the same expression, attributing to Mahat or Intelligence the act of creating. Mahat is therefore the divine mind in creative operation, the νοῦς ὁδιακοσμῶν TE καὶ παντῶν δῖτος of Anaxagoras; 'an ordering and disposing mind. which was the cause of all things., The word itself suggests some relationship to the Phoenician Mot, which, like Mahat, was the first product of the mixture of spirit and matter, and the first rudiment of creation: "Ex connexione autem ejus spiritus prodit mot.....hinc seminum omnis creature et omnium rerum creatio." Brucker, I. 240. Mot. it is true, appears to be a purely material substance, whilst Mahat is an incorporeal substance; but they agree in their place in the cosmogony, and are something alike in name. How far also the Phoenician system has been accurately described, is matter of uncertainty. See Sāṃkhya Kārikā, p. 83.

23. The sense of Ahaṅkāra cannot be very well rendered by any European term. It means the principle of individual existence, that which appropriates perceptions, and on which depend the notions, I think. I feel. I am. It might be expressed by the proposition of Descartes reversed: "Sum ergo cogito, sentio." etc. The equivalent employed by Colebrooke, egotism, has the advantage of an analogous etymology, Ahaṅkāra being derived from Aham (अहं), I; as in the Hari Varnśa: अहं चित्ति॑ सहोवाच प्रजा॑ स्त्र्यामि भारत। 'He (Brahmā), oh Bharata, said, I will create creatures,' Sec also Sāṃkhya Kārikā, p. 91. These three varieties of Ahaṅkāra are also described in the Sāṃkhya Kārikā, p. 92. Vaikārika, that which is productive, is the same as the Satvika, or that which is combined with the property of goodness. Taijasa Ahaṅkāra is that which is endowed with Tejas, 'heat, or 'energy,' in consequence of its having the property of Rajas, 'passion' or 'activity;' and the third kind. Bhūtadi, or 'elementary,' is the Tamasa, or has the property of darkness. From the first kind proceed the sense; from the last, the rudimental unconscious elements : both kinds, which are equally of themselves inert, being rendered productive by the cooperation of the second, the energetic or active modification of Ahaṅkāra, which is therefore said to be the origin of both the senscs and the elements.

24. The successive series of rudiments and elements, and their respectively engendering the rudiments and elements next in the order, occur in most of the Purāṇas, in nearly the same words. The Bṛhannāradīya Purāṇa observes, यथाक्रमं कारणतामेकस्योपयन्ति वै॑ 'They (the elements) in successive order acquire the property of causality one to the other.' The order is also the same; or other ākāśa), wind or air (vayu), fire or light (tejas), water and earth : except in one passage of the Māhabhārata (Mokṣa Dharma, c. 9). where it is ether, water, fire, air, earth. The order of Empedocles was ether, fire, earth, water, air. Cudworth, I. 97. The investment (āvaraṇa) of each element by its own rudiment, and of each rudiment by its preceding gross and rudimental elements, is also met with in most of the chief Purāṇas. as the Vāyu, Padma, Liṅga, and Bhāgavata; and traces of it are found amongst the ancient cosmogonists : for Anaximander supposed, that 'when the world was made. a certain sphere or flame of fire, separated from matter (the Infinite), encompassed the air, which invested the earth as the bark does a tree;' Kara τῇ ψευνιν τονδε τον κόσμον αποκριγηναι. καὶ τινα ἔκ τοντον φλογσ αθαίρων περιφνηναι τα περι την γην αερι, τα Τωδένδρω φλοισν Euseb. Pr. 1. 15. Some of the Purāṇas. as the Matsya, Vāyu, Liṅga, Bhāgavata, and Mārkandeya, add a description of a participation of properties amongst the elements, which is rather

Vedānta than Sāṁkhya. According to this notion, the elements add to their characteristic properties those of the elements which precede them. Ākāsa has the single property of sound: air has those of touch and sound: fire has colour, touch, and sound; water has taste, colour, touch, and sound: and earth has smell and the rest, thus having five properties: or, as the Liṅga Purāṇa describes the series, आकाशं शब्दमात्रं यत् तत्पर्यमात्रमाविशत्। द्विगुणस्तु ततो वायुः शब्दस्पर्शस्त्वकोऽभवत्। रूपं तथैवाविशतां शब्दस्पर्शगुणावूभौ। त्रिगुणश्च ततोऽग्निः स शब्दस्पर्शरूपवान्। शब्दस्पर्शरूपमात्रं रसमात्रं समाविशत्। तस्माच्चतुर्गुणा आपो विजेयास्तु रसात्मिकाः। शब्दस्पर्शश्च रूपं च रसश्च गन्धमाविशत्। तस्मात् पञ्चगुणा भूमिः स्थूलभूतेषु शस्यते॥

25. Tanmātra, 'rudiment, or 'type,' from Tad 'that.' for Tasmin 'in that' gross element, and mātra 'subtile or rudimental form' (मात्रासूक्ष्मं रूपं)। The rudiments are also the characteristic properties of the elements: as the Bhāgavata; तस्य मात्रा गुणः शब्दो लिङ्गं यद्यद्दृश्ययोः। 'The rudiment of it (ether) is also its quality, sound; as a common designation may denote both a person who sees an object which is to be seen:' that is, according to the commentator, suppose a person behind a wall called aloud, "An elephant! an elephant!" the term would equally indicate an elephant was visible, and that somebody saw it, Bhāg. II. 5.

26. The properties here alluded to are not those of goodness etc. but other properties assigned to perceptible objects by the Sāṁkhya doctrines, or Santi. 'placidity'; Ghorata, 'terror; and Moha, 'dulness' or 'stupefaction.' v. Kārikā. v. 38. p. 112.

27. The Bhāgavata, which gives a similar statement of the origin of the elements, senses, and divinities, specifies the last to be Dis (space), air, the sun, Pracetas, the Aśvins, fire, Indra, Upendra, Mitra, and Ka or Prajāpati, presiding over the senses, according to the comment, or severally over the ear, skin, eye, tongue, nose, speech, hands, feet, and excretory and generative organs. Bhag. II. 5. 31.

28. Avyaktānugraheṇa. The expression is something equivocal, as Avyakta may here apply either to the First Cause or to matter. In either case the notion is the same, and the aggregation of the elements is the effect of the presidency of spirit, without any active interference of the indiscrete principle. The Avyakta is passive in the evolution and combination of Mahat and the rest. Pradhāna is, no doubt, intended, but its identification with the Supreme is also implied. The term Anugraha may also refer to a classification of the order of creation, which will be again adverted to.

29. It is impossible not to refer this notion to the same origin as the widely diffused opinion of antiquity, of the first manifestation of the world in the form of an egg. "It seems to have been a favourite symbol, and very ancient, and we find it adopted among many nations." Bryant, III. 165. Traces of it occur amongst the Syrians, Persians and Egyptians; and besides the Orphic egg amongst the Greeks, and that described by Aristophanes, Τέκτεν part of the ceremony in the πρωτιστὸν νημηνῆμιον ννξ η μελανσπέρος ωόν, part of the ceremony in the Dionysiaca and other mysteries consisted of the consecration of an egg; by which according to Porphyry, was signified the world: Ερμηνεύει δὲ τό ωόν τόν κόσμον, Whether this egg typified the ark, as Bryant and Faber suppose, is not material to the proof of the antiquity and wide diffusion of the belief that the world in the beginning existed in such a figure. A similar account of the first aggregation of the elements in the form of an egg is given in all the Purāṇas, with the usual epithet Haima or Hiranya, 'golden.' as it occurs in Manu, I. 9.

30. Here is another analogy to the doctrines of antiquity relating to the mundane egg: and as the first visible male being, who, as we shall hereafter see, united in himself the nature of either sex, abode in the egg, and issued from it; so "this first-born of the world, whom they represented under two shapes and characters, and who sprung from the mundane egg, was the person from whom the mortals and immortals were derived. He was the same as Dionusus, whom they styled. पूर्वजमर्द्दनारीशं त्रिगुणञ्च प्रजापतिं। अवाच्यं कृष्णमव्यक्तं ब्रह्माणं च द्विमूर्तिकं॥

31. Janārddana is derived from Jana, 'men,' and Arddana, 'worship;' the 'object of adoration to mankind.'

32. This is the invariable doctrine of the Purāṇas, diversified only according to the individual divinity to whom they ascribe identity with Paramātman or Parameśvara. In our text this is Vishnu: in the Śaiva Purāṇas, as in the Liṅga, it is Śiva: in the Brahmanavaivartta it is Kṛṣṇa. The identification of one of the hypostases with the common source of the triad was an incongruity not unknown to other theogonies; for Cneph, amongst the Egyptians, appears on the one hand to have been identified with the Supreme Being, the indivisible unity, whilst on the other he is confounded with both Emeph and Ptha, the second and third persons of the triad of hypostases. Cudworth, 1.4.18,

33. 'The world that is termed spirit;' पुरुषात्मं जगत्। explained by the commentator, पुरुषसंज्ञमेव। 'which indeed bears the appellation spirit; conformably to the text of the Vedas. पुरुष एवेदं सर्वे। this universe is indeed spirit.' This is rather Vedānta than Sāṃkhya, and appears to deny the existence of matter: and so it does as an independent existence; for the origin and end of infinite substance is the Deity or universal spirit: but it does not therefore imply the non-existence of the world as real substance.

34. Viṣṇu is both Bhuteśa. "lord of the elements." or of created things, and Viśvarūpa 'universal substance':, he is therefore, as one with sensible things, subject to his own control.

35. Varenya, 'most excellent'; being the same, according to the commentator, with supreme felicity: परमानन्दरूपत्वात्।

Parāśara said—The essential properties of existent things are objects of observation, of which no foreknowledge is attainable; and creation, and hundreds of properties, belong to Brahmā, as inseparable parts of his essence, as heat, oh chief of sages, is inherent in fire.¹ Hear then how the deity Nārāyaṇa, in the person of Brahmā, the great parent of the world, created all existent things.

Oh best of sages! fifteen twinklings of the eye make a Kāṣṭhā; thirty Kāṣṭhās, one Kāla; and thirty Kalās, one Muhūrtta³. Thirty Muhūrttas constitute a day and night of mortals: thirty such days make a month, divided into two half-months: six months form an Ayana (the period of the sun's progress north or south of the ecliptic): and two Ayanas compose a year. The southern Ayana is a night and the northern a day, of the gods, Twelve thousand divine years, each composed of (three hundred and sixty) such days, constitute the period of the four Yugas, or ages. They are thus distributed: the Kṛta age has four thousand divine years; the Tretā three thousand; the Dvāpara two thousand; and the Kali age one thousand: so those acquainted with antiquity have declared. The period that precedes a Yuga is called a Sandyā, and it is of as many hundred years as there are thousands in the Yuga: and the period that follows a Yuga, termed the Sandyāmsa, is of similar duration. The interval between the Sandyā and the Sandyāmsa is the Yuga, denominated Kṛta, Tretā, etc. The Kṛta, Tretā, Dvāpara, and Kali constitute a great age, or aggregate of four ages: a thousand such aggregates are a day of Brahmā, and fourteen Manus reign within that term. Hear the division of time which they measure⁴.

Seven R̄sis, certain (secondary) divinities, Indra, Manu, and the kings his sons, are created and perish at one period⁵; and the interval, called a Manvantara, is equal to seventy-one times the number of years contained in the four Yugas, with some additional years: this is the duration of the Manu, the (attendant) divinities, and the rest, which is equal to 852,000 divine years, or to 306,720,000 years of mortals, independent of the additional period. Fourteen times this period constitutes a Brahmā day, that is, a day of Brahmā; the term (Brahmā) being the derivative form. At the end of this day a dissolution of the universe occurs, when all the three worlds, earth, and the regions of space, are consumed with fire.

The dwellers of Maharloka (the region inhabited by the saints who survive the world), distressed by the heat, repair then to Janaloka (the region of holy men after their decease). When the three worlds are but one mighty ocean, Brahmā, who is one with Nārāyaṇa, satiate with the demolition of the universe, sleeps upon his serpent-bed-contemplated, the lotus born, by the ascetic inhabitants of the Janaloka-for a night of equal duration with his day; at the close of which he creates anew. Of such days and nights is a year of Brahmā composed; and a hundred such years constitute his whole life.¹ One Pararddha², or half his existence, has expired, terminating with the Mahā Kalpa³ called Pādma. The Kalpa (or day of Brahmā) termed Vārāha is the Rest of the second period of Brahmā's existence.

NOTES

1. Agency depends upon the Raja guṇa, the quality of foulness or passion, which is an imperfection. Perfect being is void of all qualities, and is therefore inert.

Omnis enim per se divom natura necesse est
Immortali aevo summa cum pace fruatur :
but if inert for ever, creation could not occur. The objection is rather evaded than answered. The ascribing to Brahmā of innumerable and unappreciable properties is supported by the commentator with vague and scarcely applicable texts of the Vedas. 'In him there is neither instrument nor effect : his like, his superior, is nowhere seen : न तस्य कार्यं करुणं च विद्यते न तत्समश्वाप्यधिकश्च दृश्यते। That supreme soul is the subjugator of all, the ruler of all, the sovereign of all : स चायमात्मा सर्वस्य वर्षी सर्वस्य शासनः सर्वस्याधिपतिः। In various places of the Vedas also it is said that his power is supreme, and that wisdom, power, and action are his essential properties : परास्य शक्तिविविधैश्च श्रूयते स्वाभाविकी ज्ञानबलक्रिया च। The origin of creation is also imputed in the Vedas to the rise of will or desire in the Supreme: सोऽकामयत बहु स्यां प्रजायेय। He wished I may become manifold. I may create creatures.' The Bhāgavata expresses the same doctrine : 'The Supreme Being was before all things alone, the soul and lord of spiritual substance : in consequence of his own will he is secondarily defined, as if of various minds: भगवानेक आसेदमप्य आत्मात्मनां विभुः। आत्मेच्छानुगतावात्मा नानामत्युपलक्षणः॥ This will however, in the mysticism of the Bhāgavata, is personified as Māyā : सा वा एतस्य संदृष्टः शक्तिः सदसदात्मिका। माया नाम महाभाग यथेऽनि निमित्ते विभुः॥ 'She (that desire) was the energy of the Supreme, who was contemplating (the uncreated world); and by her, whose name is Māyā, the Lord made the universe.' This, which was at first a mere poetical personification of the divine will, came, in such works, as the Bhāgavata, to denote a female divinity, co-equal and co-eternal with the First Cause. It may be doubted if the Vedas authorize such a mystification, and no very decided vestige of it occurs in the Viṣṇu Purāṇa,

2. This term is also applied to a different and still more protracted period. See b. VI. c. 3.

3. The last proportion is rather obscurely expressed : तास्तु त्रिशत्मौहूर्तिको विधिः। 'Thirty of them (Kalās) are the rule for the Muhūrtta.' The commentator says it means that thirty Kalās make a Ghaṭikā (or Ghari), and two Ghaṭikās a Muhūrtta, but his explanation is gratuitous, and is at variance with more explicit passages elsewhere, as in the Matsya Ṛśiśat् कलाश्चै भवेन्मुहूर्तः। : Muhūrtta is thirty Kalās. In these divisions of the twenty-four hours the Kūrma, Mārkanḍeya, Matsya, Vāyu and Liṅga Purāṇas exactly agree with our authority. In Manu. 1, 64, we have the same computation, with a difference in the first article, eighteen Nimeśas being one Kāṣṭhā. The Bhavisya Purāṇa follow Manu in that respect, and agrees in the rest with the Pādma, which has,

15 Nimeśas = 1 Kāṣṭhā	30 Kāṣṭhās = 1 Kalā
30 Kalās = 1 Kṣana	12 Kṣanas = 1 Muhūrtta
30 Muhūrttas = 1 day and night.

In the Mahābhārata, Mokṣa Dharma, it is said that thirty Kalis and one-tenth, or, according to the commentator, thirty Kalis and three Kāṣṭhās make a Muhūrtta. A still greater variety, however, occurs in the Bhāgavata and in the Brahmā Vaivarta Purāṇa. These have,

2 Paramāṇus	= 1 Aṇu	3 Anus	= 1 Trasarenu
3 Trasareṇus	= 1 Truti	100 Trutis	= 1 Vedha
3 Vedhas	= 1 Lava	3 Lavas	= 1 Nimeśa
3 Nimeśas	= 1 Kṣana	5 Kṣanas	= 1 Kāṣṭhā
15 Kāṣṭhās	= 1 Laghu	15 Laghus	= 1 Nārikā
2 Nārikās	= 1 Muhūrtta	6 or 7 Nārikās	= 1 Yama. Or watch of the day or night

Allusions to this or either of the proceeding computations, or to any other, have not been found in either of the other Purāṇas: yet the work of Gopāla Bhāṭṭa, from which Colebrooke states he derived his information on the subject of Indian weights and measures (A. R. 5. 105); the Sāṁkhyā Parimāṇa, cities the Vārāha Purāṇa for a peculiar computation, and quotes another from the Bhaviṣya, different from that which occurs in the first chapter of that work, to which we have referred. The principle of the calculation adopted by the astronomical works is different: it is, 6 respirations (Prāṇa)=1 Vikalā; 60 Vikalās=1 Daṇḍa; 60 Daṇḍas=1 sydereal day. The Nimeṣa, which is the base of one of the Paurāṇik modes, is a twinkle of the eye of a man at rest; whilst the Paramāṇu which is the origin of the other, and apparently more modern system, considering the works in which it occurs, is the time taken by a Paramāṇu, or mote in the sun-beam, to pass through a crevice in a shutter. Some indications of this calculation being in common currency, occur in the Hindustani terms Reṇu (Trasareṇu) and Lamhu (Laghu) in Indian horometry (A.R.5.81); whilst the more ordinary system seems derived from the astronomical works, being 60 Tilas=1 Vipala; 60 Vipalas=1 Pala; 60 Palas=1 Daṇḍa or Ghari. Ibid.

4. These calculations of time are found in most of the Purāṇas, with some addition, occasionally, of no importance, as that of the year of the seven Rsis, 3030 mortal years, and the year of Dhruva, 9090 such years, in the Liṅga Purāṇa in all essential points the computations accord, and the scheme, extravagant as it may appear, seems to admit of easy explanation. We have, in the first place, a computation of the years of the gods in the four ages, or,

Kṛta Yuga 4000
Sandyānsa 400

		4800
Tretā Yuga		3000

		3600
Dvāpara Yuga		2000
Sandyā		200

		2800
Kali Yuga		1000

	12000

If these divine years are converted into years of mortals, by multiplying them by 360. a year of men being a day of the gods, we obtain the years of which the Yugas of mortals are respectively said to consist:

4800×360	=	1,728,000
3600×360	=	1,296,000
2400×360	=	864,000
1200×360	=	432,000

4,320,000 a Mahāyuga.

So that these periods resolve themselves into very simple elements: the notion of four ages in a deteriorating series expressed by descending arithmetical progression, as 4, 3, 2, 1; the conversion of units into thousands; and the mythological fiction, that these were divine years, each composed of 360 years of men. It does not seem necessary to refer the invention to any astronomical computations, or to any attempt to represent actual chronology.

5. The details of these, as occurring in each Manvantara, are given in the third book. c. 1 and 2.

6. चतुर्युगानां संख्याता साधिका हैकसप्तति। One and seventy enumerations of the four ages, with a surplus.' A similar reading occurs in several other Purāṇas, but none of them state of what the surplus or addition consists; but it is, infact, the number of years required to reconcile two computations of the Kalpa. The most simple, and probably the original calculation of a Kalpa, is its being 1000 great ages, or ages of the gods: एतदद्वा दशसाहस्रं देवानां युगमुच्यते। दैविकानां युगानां तु सहस्रं परिसंख्यया। ब्राह्मणे कमर्हेण्यं तावती रात्रिरुच्यते॥ Bhaviṣya Purāṇa Then 4,320,000 years, or a divine age, $\times 1000=4,320,000,000$ years, or a day or night of Brahmā. But a day of Brahmā is also seventy-one times a great age multiplied by fourteen: $4,320,000 \times 71 \times 14 = 4,294,080,000$; or less than the preceding by 25,920,000; and it is to make up for this deficiency that a certain number of years must be added to the computation by Manvantaras. According to the Surya Siddhānta, as cited by Davis (A. R. 2. 231), this addition consists of a

Sandhi to each Manvantara, equal to the Satya age, or 1,728,000 years; and one similar Sandhi at the commencement of the Kalpa:

thus $4,320,000 \times 71 = 306,720,000 + 1,728,000 = 308,448,000 \times 14 = 4318,272,000 + 1,728,000 = 4320,000,000$. The Paurāṇiks, however, omit the Sandhi of the Kalpa, and add the whole compensation to the Manvantaras. The amount of this in whole numbers is 1,851,428 in each Manvantara.

 $4,320,000 \times 71 = 306,720,000 + 1,851,428 =$

$308,571,428 \times 14 = 4319,999,992$: leaving a very small inferiority to the result of the calculation of a Kalpa by a thousand great ages. To provide for this deficiency, indeed, very minute sub-divisions are admitted into the calculation; and the commentator on our text says, that the additional years, if of gods, are 5142 years. 10 months, 8 days, 4 watches, 2 Muhūrtas, 8 Kalās, 17 Kāṣṭhās, 2 Nimeṣas, and 1/7th; if of mortals, 1,851,428 years, 6 months, 24 days. 12 Nāris. 12 Kalās, 25 Kāṣṭhās, and 10 Nimeṣas. It will be observed, that in the Kalpa we have the regular descending series 4, 3, 2, with cyphers multiplied ad libitum.

7. The Brahmā Vaivarita says 108 years, but this is unusual. Brahmā's life is but a Nimeṣa of Kṛṣṇa, according to that work; a Nimeṣa of Śiva, according to the Śaiva Purāṇa.

8. In the last book the Parārddha occurs as a very different measure of time, but it is employed here in its ordinary acceptation.

9. In theory the Kalpas are infinite; as the Bhavisya: कोटिकोटि सहस्राणि कल्पानां मुनिसत्तमाः। गतानि तावच्छेषाणि॥ 'Excellent sages, thousands of millions of Kalpas have passed, and as many are to come.' In the Liṅga Purāṇa, and others of the Śaiva division, above thirty Kalpas are named, and some account given of several but they are evidently sectarian embellishments. The only Kalpas usually specified are those which follow in the text : the one which was the last, or the Pādma. and the present or Vārāha. The first is also commonly called the Brahmā; but the Bhāgavata distinguishes the Brahmā, considering it to be the first of Brahmā's life. whilst the Pādma was the last of the first Parārddha. The term Mahā, or great Kalpa applied to the Pādma is attached to it only in a general sense; or, according to the commentator, because it comprises, as a minor Kalpa, that in which Brahmā was born from a lotus. Properly, a great Kalpa is not a day, but a life of Brahmā; as in the Brahmā Vaivarita: ब्रह्मणश्चायुषा कल्पः कालविद्धिर्मिश्रपितः। क्षुद्रकल्पा बहुतरास्ते सम्बर्तादयः स्मृताः॥ Chronologers compute a Kalpa by the life of Brahmā. Minor Kalpas, as Samvartha and the rest, are numerous.' Minor Kalpas here denote every period of destruction, or those in which the Samvartha wind, or other destructive agents, operate. Several other computations of time are found in different Purāṇas, but it will be sufficient to notice one which occurs in the Hari Varīṣa, as it is peculiar, and because it is not quite correctly given in M. Langlois' translation It is the calculation of the Manava time, or time of a Manu.

10. divine years = a day and night of a Manu.

10 Manava days = his fortnight.

10 Mānava form. = his month.

12 Manava months = his season.

6 Mānava seasons = his year.

Accordingly the commentator says 72000 divine years make up his year. The French translation has, "dix années des dieux font un jour de Manu; dix jours des dieux font un pakcha de Manu," etc. The error lies in the expression "jours des dieux" and is evidently a mere inadvertence : for if ten years make a day, ten days can scarcely make a fortnight.

मैत्रेय उवाच

ब्रह्मा नारायणाख्योऽसौ कल्पादौ भगवान् यथा।

Maitreya said—Tell me, mighty sage. How, in the commencement of the (present) Kalpa, Nārāyaṇa, who is named Brahmā, created all existent things.¹

पराशर उवाच

Parāśara replied— In what manner the divine Brahmā, who is one with Nārāyaṇa, created progeny, and is thence named the lord of progeny (Prajāpati). the lord god. you shall hear.

अतीतकल्पावसाने निशासुमोद्यितः प्रभुः।

इमं चोदाहरन्त्यत्र इलोकं नारायणं प्रति।
ब्रह्मस्वरूपिणं देवं जगतः प्रभवाव्ययम्॥ ५॥

At the close of the past (or Pādma) Kalpa, the divine Brahmā endowed with the quality of goodness, awoke from his night of sleep, and beheld the universe void. He, the supreme Nārāyaṇa, the incomprehensible, the sovereign of creatures, invested with the form of Brahmā, the god without beginning, the creator of all things; of whom, with respect to his name Nārāyaṇa, the god who has the form of Brahmā, the imperishable origin of the world, this verse is repeated.

आपो नारा इति प्रोक्ता आपो वै नरसूनवः।

"The waters are called Nārā, because they were the offspring of Nārā (the supreme spirit); and as in them his first (Ayana) progress (in the character of Brahmā) took place, he is thence named Nārāyaṇa the whose place of moving was the waters)."² He, the lord, concluding that within the waters lay the earth, and being desirous to raise it up, created another form for that purpose; and as in preceding Kalpas he had assumed the shape of a fish or a tortoise, so in this he took the figure of a boar.

Having adopted a form composed of the sacrifices of the Vedas', for the preservation of the whole earth, the eternal, supreme, and universal soul, the great progenitor of created beings, eulogized by Sanaka and the other saints who dwell in the sphere of holy men (Janaloka); he, the supporter of spiritual and material being, plunged into the ocean.

The goddess Earth, beholding him thus descending to the subterranean regions, bowed in devout adoration, and thus glorified the god:

Pṛthvī (Earth) said— Hail to you, who are all creatures; to you, the holder of the mace and shell: elevate me now from this place, as you have upraised me in days of old. From you have I proceeded; of you do I consist; as do the skies, and all other existing things. Hail to you, spirit of the supreme spirit, to you, soul of soul; to you, who are discrete and indiscreet matter; who are one with the elements and with time.

You are the creator of all things, their preserver, and their destroyer, in the forms, oh lord, of Brahmā. Viṣṇu, and Rudra, at the seasons of creation, duration, and dissolution. When you have devoured all things, you reposes on the ocean that sweeps over the world, meditated upon, oh Govinda, by the wise. No one knows your true nature, and the gods adore you only in the forms it has pleased you to assume. They who are desirous of final liberation, worship you as the supreme Brahmā; and who that adores not Vāsudeva, shall obtain emancipation? Whatever may be apprehended by the mind, whatever may be perceived by the senses, whatever may be discerned by the intellect, all is but a form of you.

I am of you, upheld by you; you are my creator, and to you I fly for refuge: hence, in this universe, Mādhavī (the bride of Mādhava or Viṣṇu) is my designation. Triumph to the essence of all wisdom, to the unchangeable, the imperishable: triumph to the eternal; to the indiscreet, to the essence of discrete things: to him who is both cause and effect; who is the universe; the sinless lord of sacrifice; 'triumph. You are sacrifice; you are the oblation; you are the mystic Omkāra; you an the sacrificial fires; you are the Vedas, and their dependent science,; you are, Hari, the object of all worship.' The sun, the stars, the planets, the whole world; all that is formless, or that has form; all that is visible, or invisible; all, Puruṣ ottama, that I have said, or left unsaid; all this, Supreme, you are. Hail to you, again and again! hail! all hail!

Parāśara said—The auspicious supporter of the world, being thus hymned by the earth, emitted a low murmuring sound, like the chanting of the Sāma Veda; and the mighty boar, whose eyes were like the lotus, and whose body, vast as the Nīla mountain, was of the dark colour of the lotus leaves, 'uplifted upon his ample tusks the earth from the lowest regions. As he reared up his head, the waters shed from his brow purified the great sages, Sanandana and others, residing in the sphere of the saints. Through the indentations made by his hoofs, the waters rushed into the lower worlds with a thundering noise. Before his breath, the pious denizens of Janaloka were scattered, and the Munis sought for shelter amongst the bristles upon the scriptural body-of the boar, trembling as he rose up, supporting the earth, and dripping with moisture. Then the great sages, Sanandana and the rest, residing continually in the sphere of saints, were inspired with delight, and bowing lowly they praised the stern-eyed upholder of the earth.

The Yogis said— Triumph, lord of lords supreme; Keśava, sovereign of the earth, the wielder of the mace, the shell, the discus, and the sword: cause of production, destruction, and existence. You are, oh god : there is no other supreme condition, but you. You, lord, are the person of sacrifice: for your feet are the Vedas; your tusks are the stake to which the victim is bound; in your teeth are the offerings; your mouth is the altar; your tongue is the fire; and the hairs of your body are the sacrificial grass. Thine eyes, oh omnipotent are day and night; your head is the seat of all, the place of Brahmā; your mane is all the hymns of the Vedas; your nostrils are all oblations: oh you, whose snout is the ladle of oblation; whose deep voice is the chanting of the Sāma Veda; whose body is the hall of sacrifice; whose joints are the different ceremonies; and whose ears have the properties of both voluntary and obligatory riles;⁷ do you who are eternal, who are in size a mountain, be propitious. We acknowledge you, who has traversed the world, oh universal form, to be the beginning, the continuance, and the destruction of all things: you are the supreme god. Have pity on us, oh lord of conscious and unconscious beings. The orb of the earth is seen seated on the tip of your tusks, as if you had been sporting amid a lake where the lotus floats, and had borne away the leaves covered with soil. The space between heaven and earth is occupied by your body, oh you of unequalled glory, resplendent with the power of pervading the universe, oh lord, for the benefit of all. You are the aim of all: there is none other than you, sovereign of the world: this is your might, by which all things, fixed or movable, are pervaded.

universe is of the nature of wisdom, and Judge of it as an object of perception only, are lost in the ocean of spiritual ignorance. But they who know true wisdom, and whose minds are pure, behold this whole world as one with divine knowledge, as one with you, oh god. Be favorable, oh universal spirit: raise up this earth, for the habitation of created beings. Inscrutable deity, whose eyes are like lotuses, give us felicity.

Having then divided the earth into seven great portions or continents, as it was before, he constructed in like manner the four (lower) spheres, earth, sky, heaven, and the sphere of the sages (Maharloka). Thus Hari, the four-faced god, invested with the quality of activity, and taking the form of Brahmā, accomplished the creation: but he (Brahmā) is only the instrumental cause of things to be created; the things that are capable of being created arise from nature as a common material cause: with the exception of one instrumental cause alone, there is no need of any other cause, for (imperceptible) substance becomes perceptible substance according to the powers with which it is originally imbued.⁸

1. This creation is of the secondary order, or Pratisarga; water, and even the earth, being in existence, and consequently having been preceded by the creation of Mahat and the elements. It is also a different Pratisarga from that described by Manu, in which Svayambhu first creates the waters, then the egg : one of the simplest forms, and perhaps therefore one of the earliest in which the tradition occurs.

2. This is the well known verse of Manu. I. 8, rendered by Jones. "The waters are called Nārā, because they were the production of Nārā, or 'the spirit' of God; and since they were his first Ayana, or place of motion, he thence is named Nārāyaṇa, or 'moving on the waters.' Now although there can be little doubt that this tradition is in substance the same as that of Genesis, the language of the translation is perhaps more scriptural than is quite warranted. The waters, it is said in the text of Manu, were the progeny of Nārā. which Kullūka Bhaṭṭa explains Paramātmā, the supreme soul; that is, they were the first productions of God in creation. Ayana, instead of 'Place of motion,' is explained by Āśraya, 'place of abiding.' Nārāyaṇa means, therefore, he whose place of abiding was the deep. The verse occurs in several of the Purāṇas, in general in nearly the same words, and almost always as a quotation, as in our text: इमं चोदाहरन्त्यत्र श्लोकं। The Linga, Vāyu, and Mārkandeya Purāṇas, citing the same, have a somewhat different reading; or. आपो नारा वै तनव इत्यपा नाम श्रुत्वमः। अप्सु शेते यतस्तस्मात् तेन नारायणः स्मृतः। 'Apā (is the same (as) Nārā, or bodies (Tanava); such, we have heard (from the Vedas), is the meaning of Apā. He who sleeps in them, is thence called Nārāyaṇa.' The ordinary sense of Tanu is either 'minute' or 'body,' nor does it occur amongst the synonyms of water in the Nirukta of the Vedas. It may perhaps be intended to say, that Nārā or Apā has the meaning of 'bodily forms, in which spirit is enshrined, and of which the waters, with Viśnu resting upon them are a type; for there is much mysticism in the Purāṇas in which the passage thus occurs. Even in them, however, it is introduced in the usual manner, by describing the world as water alone, and Viśnu reposing upon the deep : एकाणि तदा तस्मिन्.... कृष्णो नारायणाख्यस्तु। सुखाप सलिले तथा॥। Vāyu Purāṇa The Bhāgavata has evidently attempted to explain the ancient text: पुरुषोऽण्डं विनिर्भृतं यदादौ स विनिर्गतः। आत्मनोऽयमपन्त्वच्छन्नपोऽस्त्राक्षीच्छुचिः शुचीः। तासर्ववात्सीत् स्वसृष्टासु सहस्रपरिवत्सरान्। तेन नारायणो नाम यदापः पुरुषोद्भवाः। 'When the embodied god in the beginning divided the mundane egg, and issued form, then, requiring an abiding place, he created the waters: the pure created the pure. In them, his own created abode for a thousand years, and thence received the name of Nārāyaṇa : the waters being the product of the embodied deity : i. e. they were the product of Nārā or Viśnu, as the first male or Virāt, and were therefore termed Nārā : and from there being his Ayana or Sthāna, his 'abiding place' comes his epithet of Nārāyaṇa.

3. The Vāraha form was chosen, says the Vāyu Purāṇa because it is an animal delighting to sport in water, but it is described in many Purāṇas, as it is in the Viśnu, as, a type of the ritual of the Vedas, as we shall have further occasion to remark. The elevation of the earth from beneath the ocean in this form, was, therefore, probably at first an allegorical representation of the extrication of the world from a deluge of iniquity by the rites of religion. Geologists may perhaps suspect, in the original and unmystified tradition, an allusion to a geological fact, or the existence of lacustrine mammalia in the early periods of the earth.

4. Yajñapati, 'the bestower of the beneficial results of sacrifices.,

5. Yajñapurusa, "the male or soul of sacrifice;" explained by Yajñamūrtti, 'the form or personification of sacrifice ;' or Yajñārādhya, 'he who is to be propitiated by it.'

6. Vāraha Avatāra. The description of the figure of the boar is much more particularly detailed in other Purāṇas. As in the Vāyu: "The boar was ten Yojanas in breadth, a thousand Yojanas high; of the colour of a dark cloud; and his roar was like thunder; his bulk was vast as a mountain; his tusks were white, sharp, and fearful; fire flashed from his eyes like lightning, and he was radiant as the sun; his shoulders were round, fat and large; he strode along like a powerful lion; his haunches were fat, his loins were slender, and his body was smooth and beautiful." The Matsya Purāṇa describes the Vāraha in the same words, with one or two unimportant varieties. The Bhāgavata indulges in that amplification which marks its more recent composition, and describes the Vāraha as issuing from the nostrils of Brahmā, at first of the size of the thumb, or an inch long, and presently increasing to the stature of an elephant. That work also subjoins a legend of the death of the demon Hiranyākṣa, who in a preceding existence was one of Viśnu's doorkeepers, at his palace in Vaikuṇṭha. Having refused admission to a party of Munis, they cursed him, and he was in consequence born as one of the sons of Diti. When the earth, oppressed by the weight of the mountains, sunk down into the waters, Viśnu was beheld in the subterranean regions, or Rasātala, by Hira-nyākṣa in the act of carrying it off. The demon claimed the earth, and defied Viśnu to combat; and a conflict took place, in which Hiranyākṣa was slain. This legend has not been met with in any other Purāṇa, and certainly does not occur in the chief of them, any more than in our text. In the Mokṣa Dharma of the Mahābhārata, c. 35, Viśnu destroys the demons in the form of the Vārāha, but no particular individual is specified, nor does the elevation of the earth depend upon their discomfiture. The Kālikā Upapurāna has an absurd legend of a conflict between Śiva as a Sarabha, a fabulous animal, and Viṣṇu as the Vārāha, in which the latter suffers himself and his offspring begotten upon earth to be slain.

7. This, which is nothing more than the development of the notion that the Vārāha incarnation typifies the ritual of the Vedas, is repeated in most of the Purāṇas in the same or nearly the same words.

8. This seems equivalent to the ancient notion of a plastic nature: "All parts of matter, by reason of a certain life in them, being supposed able to form themselves artificially and methodically to the greatest advantage of their present respective capabilities." This, which Cudworth (c. III) calls hylozoism, is not incompatible with an active creator: "not that he should, αὐτονύμων απάντα, set his own hand to every work, which, as Aristotle says, would be, unbecoming God; but, as in the case of Brahmā and other subordinate agents, that they should occasion the various developments of crude nature to take place, by supplying that will, of which nature itself is incapable. Action being once instituted by an instrumental medium, or by the will of an intellectual agent, it is continued by powers or a vitality inherent in nature or the matter of creation itself. The efficiency of such subordinate causes was advocated by Plato, Aristotle, and others; and the opinion of Zeno, as stated by Laertius, might be taken for a translation of some such passage as that in our text : "Ἐατ δε φυαιξ εζ αντηξ κωμενη κατα απερματκονξ λογονξ, αποτωλονωα τε κω ανεξοναα τα εξ αντηδ εν ορωμενοιξ ξροθνοιξ, και τοιαντα δρωαα α'φ οων απεκιθη Nature is a habit moved from itself, according to seminal principles; perfecting and containing those several things which in determinate times are produced from it, and acting agreeably to that from which it was secreted.' Intell, system, I. 328. So the commentator illustrates our text by observing that the cause of the budding of rice is in its own seeds, and its development is from itself, though its growth takes place only at a determinate season , in consequence of the instrumental agency of the rain.

Maitreya said— Now unfold to me, O Brahman, how this deity created the gods, sages, progenitors, demons, men, animals, trees, and the rest, that abide on earth, in heaven, or in the waters: how Brahmā at creation made the world with the qualities, the characteristics, and the forms of things¹, is called the first creation.

Parāśara said— I will explain to you, Maitreya, listen attentively, how this deity, the lord of all, created the gods and other beings.

Whilst he (Brahmā) formerly, in the beginning of the Kalpas, was meditating on creation, there appeared a creation beginning with ignorance, and consisting of darkness. From that great being appeared fivefold ignorance, consisting of obscurity, illusion, extreme illusion, gloom, utter darkness.² The creation of the creator thus plunged in abstraction, was the fivefold (immovable) world, without intellect or reflection, void of perception or sensation, incapable of feeling, and destitute of motion,³

Since immovable things were first created, this is called the first creation. Brahmā, beholding that it was defective, designed another; and whilst he thus meditated, the animal creation was manifested, to the products of which the term Tiryaksrotas is applied, from their nutrient following a winding course⁴. These were called beasts, etc., and their characteristic was the quality of darkness, they being destitute of knowledge, uncontrolled in their conduct, and mistaking error for wisdom; being formed of egotism and self-esteem, labouring under the twenty-eight kinds of imperfection⁵, manifesting inward sensations, and associating with each other (according to their kinds).

Beholding this creation also imperfect, Brahmā again medicated, and a third creation appeared, abounding with the quality of goodness, termed Ūrdhvatasrotas.⁶ The beings thus produced in the Ūrdhvatasrotas creation were endowed with pleasure and enjoyment, unencumbered internally or externally, and luminous within and without. This, termed the creation of immortals, was the third performance of Brahmā, who, although well pleased with it, still found it incompetent to fulfil his end. Continuing therefore his medications, there sprang, in consequence of his infallible purpose, the creation termed Arvāksrotas⁷, from indiscrete nature. The products of this are termed Arvāksrotasas, from the downward current (of their nutrient). They abound with the light of knowledge, but the qualities of darkness and of foulness predominate. Hence they are afflicted by evil, and are repeatedly impelled to action. They have knowledge both externally and internally, and are the instruments (of accomplishing the object of creation, the liberation of soul). These creatures were mankind.

I have thus explained to you, excellent Muni, six⁸ creations. The first creation was that of Mahat or Intellect, which is also called the creation of Brahmā⁹. The second was that of the rudimentary principles (Tanmātras), thence termed the elemental creation (Bhūtasarga). The third was the modified form of egotism, termed the organic creation, or creation of the senses (Aindriyaka). These threc were the Prakṛta creations, the developments of indiscrete nature, preceded by the indiscrete principle¹⁰. The fourth or fundamental creation (of perceptible things) was that of inanimate bodies. The fifth, the Tairyag yonya creation, was that of animals. The sixth was the Orddhasrotas creation, of that of the divinities.

The creation of the Arvāksrotas beings was the seventh, and was that of man. There is an eighth creation, termed Anugraha, which possesses both the qualities of goodness and darkness.¹¹ Of these creations, five are sccondary, and threc are primary¹². But there is a ninth, the Kaumāra creation, which is both primary and secondary¹³.

These are the nine creations of the great progenitor of all, and both as primary and secondary, are the radical causes of the world, proceeding from the sovereign creator. What else dost you desire to hear ?

Parāśara said— Created beings, although they are destroyed (in their individual forms) at the periods of dissolution, yet being affected by the good or evil acts of former existence, they are never exempted from their consequences; and when Brahmā creates the world anew, they are the progeny of his will, in the fourfold condition of gods, men, animals, or inanimate things. Brahmā then, being desirous of creating the four orders of beings, termed gods, demons, progenitors, and men, collected his mind into itself.¹⁴ Whilst thus concentrated, the quality of darkness pervaded his body; and thence the demons (the Asuras) were first born, issuing from his thigh. Brahmā then abandoned that form which was composed of the rudiment of darkness, and which, being deserted by him, became night. Continuing to create, but assuming a different shape, he experienced pleasure; and thence from his mouth proceeded the gods, endowed with the quality of goodness. The form abandoned by him, became day, in which the good quality predominates; and hence by day the gods are most powerful, and by night the demons. He next adopted another person, in which the rudiment of goodness also prevailed; and thinking of himself, as the father of the world, the progenitors (the Pitṛs) were born from his side. The body, when he abandoned it, became the Sandyā (or evening twilight), the interval between day and night.

Brahmā then assumed another person, pervaded by the quality of foulness; and from this, men, in whom foulness (or passion) predominates, were produced. Quickly abandoning that body, it became morning twilight, or the dawn.

At the appearance of this light of day, men feel most vigour; while the progenitors are most powerful in the evening season. In this manner, Maitreya, Jyotsnā (dawn), Rātri (night), Ahar (day), and Sandhyā (evening), are the four bodies of Brahmā invested by the three Qualities¹⁵.

Next from Brahmā, in a form composed of the quality of foulness, was produced hunger, of whom anger was born: and the god put forth in darkness beings emaciate with hunger, of hideous aspects, and with long beards. Those beings hastened to the deity. Such of them as exclaimed, Oh preserve us! were thence called Rākṣasas¹⁶: others, who cried out, Let us eat, were denominated from that expression Yakṣas¹⁷.

Beholding them so disgusting, the hairs of Brahmā were shrivelled up, and first falling from his head, were again renewed upon it: from their falling they became serpents, called Sarpa from their creeping, and Ahi because they had deserted the head.¹⁸ The creator of the world, being incensed, then created fierce beings, who were denominated goblins, Bhūtas, malignant fiends and eaters of flesh. The Gandharvas were next born, imbibing melody drinking of the goddess of speech, they were born, and thence their appellation¹⁹

The divine Brahmā, influenced by their material energies, having created these beings, made others of his own will. Birds he formed from his vital vigour; sheep from his breast, goats from his mouth; kine from his belly and sides; and horses, elephants, Sarabhas, Gavayas, deer, camels, mules, antelopes, and other animals, from his feet: whilst from the hairs of his body sprang herbs, roots, and fruits.

O foremost of the Brāhmaṇas! Brahmā having created, in the commencement of the Kalpa various plants, employed them in sacrifices, in the beginning of the Tretā age. Animals were distinguished into two classes, domestic (village) and wild (forest): the first class contained the cow, goat, the hog, the sheep, the horse, the ass, the mule: the latter, all beasts of prey, and many animals with cloven hoofs, the elephant, and the monkey. The fifth order were the birds; the sixth, aquatic animals; and the seventh, reptiles and insects²⁰.

From his eastern mouth Brahmā then created the Gayatrī metre, the R̄gveda, the collection of hymns termed Trivṛt, the Rathantara portion of the Sāma-veda, and the Agniṣṭoma sacrifice: from his southern mouth he created the Yajurveda, the Triṣṭubh metre, the collection of hymns called Panchadśa, the Bṛhat Sāma, and the portion of the Sāma-veda termed Ukttha: from his western mouth he created the Sāma-veda, the Jayati metre, the collection of hymns termed Saptadaśa, the portion of the Sāma called Vairūpa, and the Atirātra sacrifice: and from his northern mouth he created the Ekavimśa collection of hymns, the Atharva-veda, the Āptyoryāmā rite, the Anuṣṭubh metre, and the Vairāja portion of the Sāma-veda²¹,

In this manner all creatures, great or small, proceeded from his limbs. The great progenitor of the world having termed the gods, demons, and Pitṛs, created, in the commencement of the Kalpa, the Yakṣas, Pisāchas (goblins), Gandharvas and the troops of Apsarasas the nymphs of heaven, Nārās (centaurs, or beings with the limbs of horses and human bodies) and Kinnaras beings with the heads of horses), Rāksasas, birds, beasts, deer, serpents, and all things permanent or transitory, movable or immovable. This did the divine Brahmā, the first creator and lord of all: and these things being created, discharged the same functions as they had fulfilled in a previous creation, whether malignant or benign, gentle or cruel, good or evil, true or false; and accordingly as they are actuated by such propensities will be their conduct.

इति श्रीष्टिपुराणे प्रथमांशे पञ्चमोऽध्यायः

And the creator displayed infinite variety in the objects of sense, in the properties of living things, and in the forms of bodies: he determined in the beginning, by the authority of the Vedas, the names and forms and functions of all creatures, and of the gods; and the names and appropriate offices of the Ṛṣis, as they also are read in Vedas. In like manner as the produces of the seasons designate in periodical revolution the return of the same season, so do the same circumstances indicate the recurrence of the same Yuga, or age; and thus, in the beginning of each Kalpa, does Brahmā repeatedly create the world, possessing the power that is derived from the will to create, and assisted by the natural and essential faculty of the object to be created.

NOTES

1. The terms here employed are for qualities. Gunas; which, as we have already noticed, are those of goodness, foulness, and darkness. The characteristics, or Swabhāvas, are the inherent properties of the qualities, by which they act, as, soothing, terrific, or stupefying: and the forms. Svarūpas. are the distinctions of biped, quadruped, brute, bird, fish, and the like.

2. Or Tamas. Moha, Mahāmoha, Tamisra. Andhatamisra; they are the five kinds of obstruction, viparyyaya, of soul's liberation, according to the Sāṃkhya: they are explained to be, 1. The belief of material substance being the same with spirit; 2. Notion of property or possession, and consequent attachment to objects, as children and the like, as being one's own; 3. Addiction to the enjoyments of sense; 4. Impatience or wrath; and 5. Fear of privation or death. They are called in the Pātañjala philosophy, the five afflictions, Kleśa, but are similarly explained by Avidyā, 'ignorance;' Asmitā, 'selfishness,' literally 'I-am-ness : 'Rāga, 'love;' Dwesha, 'hatred : ' and Abhinivesa, (अभिनिवेशः), 'dread of temporal suffering.' Sāṃkhya Kārikā, p. 148—150. This creation by Brahmā in the Vārāha Kalpa begins in the same way, and in the same words, in most of the Purāṇas. The Bhāgavata reverses the order of these five products, and gives them, Andhatamisra, Tamisra, Mahāmoha, Moha, and Tamas; a variation obviously more immethodical than the usual reading of the text, and adopted, no doubt, merely for the sake of giving the passage an air of originality.

3. This is not to be confounded with elementary creation, although the description would very well apply to that of crude nature, or Pradhāna: but, as will be seen presently, we have here to do with final productions, or the forms in which the previously created elements and faculties are more or less perfectly aggregated. The first class of these forms is here said to be immovable things; that is, the mineral and vegetable kingdoms; for the solid earth, with its mountains and rivers and seas, was already prepared for their reception. The 'fivefold' immovable creation is indeed, according to the comment, restricted to vegetables, five orders of which are enumerated, or, 1. trees : 2. shrubs; 3. climbing plants; 4. creepers : and 5. grasses.

4. Tiryak. 'crooked;' and Srotas, 'a canal.'

5. Twenty-eight kinds of Bādhās (बाधा), which in the Sāṃkhya system mean disabilities, as defects of the senses, blindness, deafness, etc.; and defects of intellect, discontent, ignorance, and the like. S. Kārikā, p. 148, 151. In place of Badha, however, the more usual reading, as in the Bhāgavata, Vārāha, and Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇas, is Vidha (विध), 'kind,' sort., as अष्टाविंशतिद्विभासकः: implying twenty-eight sorts of animals. These are thus specified in the Bhāgavata. III. 10 : Six kinds have single hoofs, nine have double or cloven hoofs, and thirteen have five claws or nails instead of hoofs. The first are the horse, the mule, the ass, the yak, the sarabha, and the gaura, or white deer. The second are the cow, the goat, the buffalo, the hog, the gayal, the black deer, the antelope, the camel, and the sheep. The last are the dog, shacal, wolf, tiger, cat, hare, porcupine, lion, monkey, elephant, tortoise, lizard, and alligator.

6. Urddha, 'above,' and Srotas as before; their nourishment being derived from the exterior, not from the interior of the body : according to the commentator: उद्युपरि देहाद्वहिरेव स्रोत आहारस्य ग्रहण यस्य सः: as a text of the Vedas has it; 'Through satiety derived from even beholding ambrosia; 'अमृतदर्शनादेव तुमे:।

7. Arvak. 'downwards,' and Srotas. 'canal'

8. This reckoning is not very easily reconciled with the creations described; for, as presently enumerated, the stages of creation are seven. The commentator, however, considers the Urddhasrotas creation, or that of the superhuman beings, to be the same with that of the Indriyas, or senses over which they preside; by which the number is reduced to six.

9. This creation being the work of the supreme spirit, ब्रह्म परमात्मा तत् कर्तृकः सर्गो विज्ञेय इत्यर्थः। according to the commentator : or it might have been understood to mean, that Brahmā was then created, being, as we have seen, identified with Mahat, 'active intelligence,' or the operating will of the Supreme. See Ch. II. Note 23.

10. The text is, सर्गः सम्भूतो बुद्धिपूर्वकः। which is, as rendered in the text, 'creation preceded by, or beginning with Buddhi, intelligence.' The rules of euphony would however admit of a mute negative being inserted, or सम्भूतोऽबुद्धिपूर्वकः। 'preceded by ignorance,' that is by the chief principle, crude nature or Pradhāna, which is one with ignorance : but this seems to depend on notions of a later date, and more partial adoption, than those generally prevailing in our authority; and the first reading therefore has been preferred. It is also to be observed, that the first unintellectual creation was that of immovable objects (as in p. 30-31), the original of which is, अबुद्धिपूर्वकः सर्गः प्रादुर्भूतस्तमोमयः। and all ambiguity of construction is avoided. The reading is also established by the text of the Liṅga Purāṇa, which enumerates the different series of creation in the words of the Viṣṇu, except in this passage, which is there transposed, with a slight variation of the reading. Instead of प्रथमो महतः सर्गो विज्ञेयो ब्रह्मणस्तु सः। it is प्रथमो महतः सर्गः सम्भूतो बुद्धिपूर्वकः। 'The first creation was that of Mahat : Intellect being the first in manifestation.' The reading of the Vāyu Purāṇa is still more tautological, but confirms that here preferred : प्रथमो महतः सर्गो विज्ञेयो महतस्तु सः। See also n. 12.

11. The Anugraha creation, of which no notice has been found in the Mahābhārata seems to have been borrowed from the Sāṃkhya philosophy. It is more particularly described in the Pādma, Mārkaṇḍeya, Liṅga and Matsya Purāṇas : as, पञ्चमोऽनुग्रहः सर्गः स चतुर्द्वा व्यवस्थितः। विफर्येणाशक्या च सिद्धया तुष्ट्या तथैव च॥ 'The fish is the Anugraha creation, which is subdivided into four kinds; by obstruction, disability, perfect-ness, and acquiescence. This is the Pratyaya sarga, or intellectual creation, of the Sāṃkhyas (S. Kārikā v. 46. p. 146); the creation of which we have a notion, or to which we give assent (Anugraha), in contradistinction to organic creation, or that existence of which we have sensible perception. In its specific subdivisions it is the notion of certain inseparable properties in the four different orders of beings : obstruction or stolidity in inanimate things; inability or imperfection in animals : perfectibility in man : and acquiescence or tranquil enjoyment in gods. So also the Vāyu Purāṇa : स्थावरेषु विफर्यस्तिर्ययोनिन्वशशक्तिता सिद्धयात्मानो मनुष्यास्तु तुष्ट्येवेषु कृत्स्नशः।

12. Or Vaikṛta, derived meditately from the first principle, through its Vikṛtis, productions or developements; and Prākṛta, derived more immediately from the chief principle itself. Mahat and the two forms of Ahaṅkāra, or the rudimental elements and the senses, constitute the latter class: inanimate beings, etc. compose the former : or the latter are considered as the work of Brahmā, whilst the three first are evolved from Pradhāna. So the Vāyu : प्राकृतास्तु त्रयः सर्गः कृतास्ते बुद्धिपूर्वकाः। बुद्धिपूर्वं प्रवर्तते षट् सर्गः ब्रह्मणस्तु ते। 'The three creations beginning with intelligence are elemental; but the six creations which proceed from the series of which Intellect is the first are the works of Brahmā.'

13. We must have recourse here also to other Purāṇas, for the elucidation of this term. The Kaumāra creation is the creation of Rudra or Nīlalohita, a form of Śiva, by Brahmā, which is subsequently described in our text, and of certain other mind-born sons of Brahmā, of whose birth the Viṣṇu Purāṇa gives no further account : they are elsewhere termed Sanat-kumāra, Sananda, Sanaka, and Sanātana, with sometimes a fifth, Rbhu, added. These, declining to create progeny, remained, as the name of the first implies, ever boys, kumāras; that is, ever pure and innocent: whence their creation is called the Kaumāra. Thus the Vāyu : अप्य ससर्ज वै ब्रह्म मानसानात्मनः समान्। सनन्दनं ससनकं विद्वांसं च सनातनं। सनत्कुमारमेव च न ते लोके तु सज्जन्ते निरपेक्षा। सनातनाः। And the Liṅga has, यथोत्पत्रः सदा एव कुमार स इहोच्यते। तस्मात् सनत्कुमारेति नामास्तीति प्रकीर्तिः। 'Bring ever as he was born, he is here called a youth; and hence his name is well known as Sanatkumāra.' This authority makes Sanatkumāra and Rbhu the two first born of all : ऋभुः सनत्कुमारश्च द्वावेतावृधरितसौ। पूर्वोत्पत्तौ...सर्वेषामपि पूर्वजौ। whilst the text of the Hari Varnśa limits the primogeniture to Sanat-kumāra : सनत्कुमारं च विभुं पूर्वेषामपि पूर्वजं। In another place, however, it enumerates apparently six, or the above four with Sana and either Ṛbhu or another Sanātana; for the passage is-corrupt. The French translation scribes a share in creation to Sanatkumāra : 'Les sept Prajāpatis, Raudra, Scanda, et Sanatkaumala, se mirent à produire les etres repandant partout l'inepuisable energie de dieu.' The original is, सप्तैते जनयन्ति स्म प्रजा रुद्रश्च भारत। स्कन्दः सनत्कुमारश्च तेजः संक्षिप्य तिष्ठतः। Sankṣipya is not 'repandant,' but 'restraining.' and Tiṣṭhataḥ being in the dual number, relates of course to only two of the series. The correct rendering is. These seven (Prajāpatis) created progeny, and so did Rudra; but Skanda and Sanatkumāra, restraining their power, abstained (from creation).' So the commentator : सृष्टिसामर्थ्यं संक्षिप्य निगृह्ण सृष्टिमुख्यन्तामेव तिष्ठतः। These sages, however, live as long as Brahmā, and they are only created by him in the first Kalpa, although their generation is very commonly, but inconsistently, introduced in the Vārāha or Pādma Kalpas. This creation, says the text, is both primary (Prakṛta) and secondary (Vaikṛta). It is the latter, according to the commentator, as regards the origin of these saints from Brahmā : it is the former as affects Rudra, who, though proceeding from Brahmā, in a certain form was in essence equally an immediate production of the first principle. These notions, the birth of Rudra and the saints, seem to have been borrowed from the Śaivas, and to have been awkwardly engrafted upon the Vaiṣṇava system. Sanatkumāra and his brethren are always described in the Śaiva Purāṇas as Yogis : as the Kūrma, after enumerating them, adds, पञ्चैते योगिनो विप्राः परं वैराग्यमाप्तिः। These five, oh Brāhmaṇas, were Yogis, who acquired entire exemption from passion : and the Hari Varnśa, although rather Vaiṣṇava than Śaiva, observes, that the Yogis celebrate these six, along with Kapila, in Yoga works: ब्रह्माणं कपिलं चैव षडेतांश्च योगिनः। यतयो योगातन्त्रेषु स्तुतिं हि द्विजातयः। The idea seems to have been amplified also in the Śaiva works; for the Liṅga Purāṇa describes the repeated birth of Śiva, or Vāmadeva, as a Kumāra, or boy, from Brahmā, in each Kalpa, who again becomes four. Thus in the twenty-ninth Kalpa Swetalohita is the Kumāra, and he becomes Sananda, Nandana, Viśvananda, Upananda; all of a white complexion: in the thirtieth the Kumāra becomes Virajas, Vivāhu, Visoka, Viśvabhāvana; all of a red colour: in the thirty-first he becomes four youths of a yellow colour: and in the thirty-second the four Kumāras were black. All these are no doubt, comparatively recent additions to the original notion of the birth of Rudra and the Kumāras; itself obviously a sectarian innovation upon the primitive doctrine of the birth of the Prajāpatis, or will-born sons of Brahmā.

14. These reiterated, and not always very congruous accounts of the creation are explained by the Purāṇas as referring to different Kalpas, or renovations of the world, and therefore involving no incompatibility. A better reason for their appearance is the probability that they have been borrowed from different original authorities. The account that follows is evidently modified by the Yogi Śaivas, by its general mysticism, and by the expressions with which it begins: ततो देवासुर-पितृमानुषाचै चतुष्टयं। सिसुक्षरभास्येतानि स्वमातानमयूजन्। 'Collecting his mind into itself,' मनो समाधते। according to the comment, is the performance of the Yoga (Yūjuje). The term Ambhānsi, lit. 'waters,' for the four orders of beings, gods, demons, men, and Piṭrs, is also a peculiar, and probably mystic term. The commentator says it occurs in the Vedas as a synonym of gods, etc.: एतानि चत्वार्यभासि देवा मनुष्याः पितरोऽसुरा इति श्रुतेः। The Vāyu Purāṇa derives it from 'to shine,' because the different orders of beings shine or flourish severally by moonlight, night, day, and twilight: etc. भास्ति यस्मात्तोऽप्यभासि। etc.

15. This account is given in several other Purāṇas : in the Kūrma with more simplicity; in the Pādma, Liṅga, and Vāyu with more detail. The Bhāgavata, as usual, amplifies still more copiously, and mixes up much absurdity with the account. Thus the person of Sandhyā, 'evening twilight,' is thus described: "She appeared with eyes rolling with passion, whilst her lotus-like feet sounded with tinkling ornaments: a muslin vest depended from her waist, secured by a golden zone: her breasts were protuberant, and close together; her nose was elegant: her tongue beautiful; her face was bright with smiles, and she modestly concealed it with the skirts of her robe; whilst the dark curls clustered round her brow." The Asuras address her, and win her to become their bride. To the four forms of our text, the same work adds, Tandri, 'sloth,' Jṛmbhikā, 'yawning;' Nidra, 'sleep;' Unmāda, insanity; Antarddhāna. 'disappearance;' Pratibimba, 'reflexion;' which become the property of Pisāchas, Kinnaras, Bhūtas, Gandharvas, Vidyādharaś, Sadhyas, Pitrs, and Manus. The notions of night, day, twilight, and moonlight being derived from Brahmā, seem to have originated with the Vedas. Thus the commentator on the Bhāgavata observes, याऽस्य तनुरासीत् तामपाहत सा तमिक्षाभवदिति श्रुतिः। 'That which was his body and was left, was darkness: this is the Sruti.' All the authorities place night before day, and the Asuras or Titans before the gods, in the order of appearance; as did Hesiod and other ancient theogonists

16. From Rakṣa, 'to preserve.'
17. From Yakṣa, 'to eat.'
18. From Śrip, srpo, 'to creep,' and from Hā, 'to abandon.'

19. Gaṇ dhayantah, "drinking speech."

20 This and the preceding enumeration of the origin of vegetables and animals occurs in several Purāṇas, precisely in the same words. The Liṅga adds a specification of the Araṇya, or wild animals, which are said to be the buffalo, gayal, bear, monkey, sarabha, wolf, and lion.

21. This specification of the parts of the Vedas that proceed from Brahmā occurs, in the same words, in the Vāyu, Liṅga, Kürma, Pādma, and Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇas. The Bhāgavata offers some important varieties: "From his eastern and other mouths he created the Rik. Yajush. Sāma, and Atharvan vedas; the Sāstra or 'the unuttered incantation;' Ijya 'oblation;' Stuti and Stoma-prayers and hymns; and Prāyaścitta, 'expiation' or 'sacred philosophy' (Brahmā). also the Vedas of medicine, arms, music, and mechanics; and the Itihasas and Purāṇas, which are a fifth Veda: also the portions of the Vedas called Sorasi, Uktha, Puriṣi. Agniṣṭut, Āptoryāmā. Atirātra, Vājapeya, Gosava; the four parts of virtue, purity, liberality, piety, and truth: the orders of life, and their institutes and different religious rites and professions; and the sciences of logic, ethics, and polity. The mystic words and monosyllable proceeded from his heart; the metre Uṣṇiṣ from the hairs of his body; Gāyatrī from his skin; Triṣṭubh from his flesh; Anuṣṭubh from his tendons; Jagatī from his bones; Pañkti from his marrow; Bṛhatī from his breath. The consonants were his life: the vowels his body: the sibilants his senses: the semi-vowels his vigour". This mysticism, although perhaps expanded and amplified by the Paurāṇiks, appears to originate with the Vedas: as in the text, अनुष्टुप् स्नावन्। 'The metre was of the tendons.' The different portions of the Vedas specified in the text are yet, for the most part, uninvestigated.

Maitreya said— You have briefly noticed, illustrious sage, the creation termed Arvāksrotas, or that of mankind : now explain to me more fully how Brahmā accomplished it; how he created the four different castes; what duties he assigned to the Brāhmaṇas and the rest¹.

Parāśara replied— Formerly, oh best of Brāhmaṇas, when the truth-meditating Brahmā was desirous of creating the world, there sprang from his mouth beings especially endowed with the quality of goodness; others from his breast, pervaded by the quality of foulness; others from his thighs, in whom foulness and darkness prevailed; and others from his feet, in whom the quality of darkness predominated. These were, in succession, beings of the several castes, Brāhmaṇas, Kṣatriyas, Vaisyas, and Śūdras, produced from the mouth, the breast, the thighs, and the feet of Brahmā².

These he created for the performance of sacrifices, the four castes being the fit instruments of their celebration. By sacrifices, oh you who know the truth, the gods are nourished; and by the rain which they bestow, mankind are supported³: and thus sacrifices, the source of happiness, are performed by pious men, attached to their duties, attentive to prescribed obligations, and walking in the paths of virtue. Men acquire (by them) heavenly fruition, or final felicity: they go, after death, to whatever sphere they aspire to, as the consequence of their human nature. The beings who were created by Brahmā, of these four castes, were at first endowed with righteousness and perfect faith; they abode wherever they pleased, unchecked by any impediment; their hearts were free from guile, they were pure, made tree from soil by observance of sacred institutes. In their sanctified minds Hari dwelt; and they were filled with perfect wisdom, by which they contemplated the glory of Viśnu.⁴ After a while (after the Tretā age had continued for some period), that portion of Hari which has been described as one with Kāla (time) infused into created beings sin, as yet feeble though formidable, or passion and the like: the impediment of soul's liberation, the seed of iniquity, sprung from darkness and desire. The innate perfectness of human nature was then no more evolved: the eight kinds of perfection, Rasollāsa and the rest, were impaired;⁵ and these being enfeebled, and sin gaining strength, mortals were afflicted with pain, arising from susceptibility to contrast, as heat and cold, and the like.

They therefore constructed places of refuge, protected by trees, by mountains, or by water; surrounded them by a ditch or a wall, and formed villages and cities; and in them erected appropriate dwellings, as defences against the sun and the cold.' Having thus provided security against the weather, men next began to employ themselves in manual labour, as a means of livelihood, (and cultivated) the seventeen kinds of useful grain—rice, barley, wheat, millet, sesamum, panic, and various sorts of lcntils, beans, and peas.⁷

O sage! These are the kinds cultivated for domestic use: but there are fourteen kinds which may be offered in sacrifice; they are, rice, barley, Māsa, wheat, millet, and sesamum; Priyāngu is the seventh, and kulaṭtha, pulse, the eighth: the others are, Śyāmaka, a sort of panic; Nivāra, uncultivated rice; Jartīla, wild sesamum; Gavedhukā (coix); Markaṭa, wild panic; and (a plant called) the seed or barley of the Bamboo (Vēnu-yava). These, cultivated or wild, are the fourteen grains that were produced for purposes of offering in sacrifice; and sacrifice (the cause of rain) is their origin also: they again, with sacrifice, are the great cause of the perpetuation of the human race, as those understand who can discriminate cause and effect. Thence sacrifices were offered daily; the performance of which, oh best of Munis, is of essential service to mankind, and expiates the offences of those by whom they are observed.

Those, however, in whose hearts the dross of sin derived from Time (Kāla) was still more developed, assented not to sacrifices, but reviled both them and all that resulted from them, the gods, and the followers of the Vedas. Those abusers of the Vedas, of evil disposition and conduct, and seceders from the path of enjoined duties, were plunged in wickedness.⁸

The means of subsistence having been provided for the beings he had created—Brahmā prescribed laws suited to their station and faculties, the duties of the several castes and orders, and the regions of those of the different castes who were observant of their duties. The heaven of the Pitrs is the region of devout Brāhmaṇas. The sphere of Indra, of Kṣatriyas who fly not from the field. The region of the winds is assigned to the Vaiśyas who are diligent in their occupations and submissive. Sūdras are elevated to the sphere of the Gandharvas.

Those Brāhmaṇas who lead religious lives go to the world of the eighty-eight thousand saints: and that of the seven Ṛsis is the seat of pious anchorites and hermits. The world of ancestors is that of respectable householders: and the region of Brahmā is the asylum of religious mendicants.¹⁰ The imperishable region of the Yogis is the highest seat of Viṣṇu, where they perpetually meditate upon the supreme being, with minds intent on him alone: the sphere where they reside, the gods themselves cannot behold. The sun, the moon, the planets, shall repeatedly be, and cease to be, but those who internally repeat the mystic adoration of the divinity, shall never know decay. For those who neglect their duties, who revile the Vedas, and obstruct religious rites, the places assigned after death are the terrific regions of darkness, of deep gloom, of fear, and of great terror; the fearful hell of sharp swords, the hell of scourges and of a waveless sea.¹¹

1. The creation of mankind here described is rather out of its place, as it precedes the birth of the Prajāpatis or their progenitors: but this want of method is common to the Purāṇas, and is evidence of their being compilations from various sources.

2. This original of the four castes is given in Manu, and in most of the Purāṇas. We shall see, however, that the distinctions are subsequently ascribed to voluntary election, to accident, or to positive institutions.

3. According to Manu, oblations ascend to and nourish the sun; whence the rain falls upon earth, and causes the growth of corn: burnt-offerings are therefore the final causes of the support of mankind.

4. This description of a pure race of beings is not of general occurrence in the Purāṇas. It seems here to be abridged from a much more detailed account in the Brahmānda, Vāyu, and Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇas. In those works Brahmā is said to create, in the beginning of the Kalpa, a thousand pairs of each of the four classes of mankind, who enjoy perfect happiness during the Kṛta age, and only gradually become subject to infirmities as the Tretā or second age advances.

5. These eight perfections, or Siddhis, are not the supernatural faculties obtained by the performance of the Yoga. They are described, the commentator says, in the Skanda and other works: and from them he extracts their description: 1. Rasollasa, the spontaneous or prompt evolution of the juices of the body, independently of nutriment from without: 2. Tripti, mental satisfaction, or freedom from sensual desire: 3. Sāmya, sameness of degree: 4. Tulyatā, similarity of life, form, and feature: 5. Visokā, exemption alike from infirmity or grief: 6. Consummation of penance and meditation, by attainment of true knowledge: 7. The power of going every where at will: 8. The faculty of reposing at any time or in any place. These attributes are alluded to though obscurely, in the Vāyu, and are partly specified in the Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa.

6. In the other three Purāṇas, in which this legend has been found, the different kinds of inhabited places are specified and introduced by a series of land measures. Thus the Mārkaṇḍeya states, that 10 Paramāṇus=1 Parastūksma; 10 Parasūkṣmas=1 Trasareṇu; 10 Trasareṇus=1 particle of dull, or Mahirajas; 10 Mahirajasas = 1 Bālāgra, hair's point; 10 Bālāgras=1 Likhyā; 10 Likhyās=1 Yūka; 10 Yūkas=1 heart of barley (Yavodara); 10 Yavodaras=1 grain of barley of middle size; 10 barley grains=1 finger, or inch; 6 fingers=a Pada, or foot (the breadth of it); 2 Padas=1 Vitasti, or span; 2 spans =1 Hasta, or cubit; 4 Hastas=a Dhanu, a Danda, or staff, or 2 Nārikas; 2000 Dhanus= a Gavyūti; 4 Gavyūtis-a Yojana. The measurement of the Brahmanāda is less detailed. A span from the thumb to the first finger is a Pradeśa; to the middle finger, a Nīla; to the third finger, a Gokarna; and to the little finger, a Vitasti, which is equal to twelve Angulas, or fingers, understanding thereby, according to the Vāyu, a joint of the finger (अंगुलपञ्चाणि); according to other authorities, it is the breadth of the thumb at the tip. (A. R. 5. 104.) The Vāyu, giving similar measurements upon the authority of Manu (मनोरथनि प्रमाणनि), although such a statement does not occur in the Manu Saṁhitā, adds, that 21 fingers=1 Ratni; 24 finger=1 Hasta, or cubit; 2 Ratnis==1 Kishku; 4 Hastas=1 Dhanu; 2000 Dhanus= 1 Gavyūti; and 8000 Dhanus= 1 Yojana. Durgas, or strongholds, are of four kinds; three of which are natural, from their situation in mountains, amidst water, or in other inaccessible spots; the fourth is the artificial defences of a village (Gramā) a hamlet (Khetaka), or a city (Pura or Nagara), which are severally half the size of the next in the series. The best kind of city is one which is about a mile long by half a mile broad, built in the form of a parallelogram, facing the north-east, and surrounded by a high wall and ditch. A hamlet should be a Yojana distant from a city: a village half a Yojana from a hamlet. The roads leading to the cardinal points from a city should be twenty Dhanus (above 100 feet) broad: a village road should be the same: a boundary road ten Dhanus: a royal or principal road or street should be ten Dhanus (above fifty feet) broad: a cross or branch road should be four Dhanus. Lanes and paths amongst the houses are two Dhanus in breadth: footpaths four cubits: the entrance of a house three cubits: the private entrances and paths about the mansion of still narrower dimensions. Such were the measurements adopted by the first builders of cities, according to the Purāṇas specified.

7. These are enumerated in the text, as well as in the Vāyu and Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa, and are, Udāra, a sort of grain with long stalks (perhaps a holcus); Kodrava (Paspalum kora); Cinaka, - a sort of panic (P. miliaceum); Māṣa. Kidney bean (Phaseolus radiatus); Mudga (Phaseolus mungo); Masūra, lentil (Ervum hirsutum); Niṣpāva, a sort of pulse: Kulattha (Dolichos biflorus). Arhaki (Cytisus Cajan); Caṇaka. chick pea (Cicer arietinum); and Sana (Crotolaria).

8. This allusion to the sects hostile to the Vedas, Buddhists or Jains, does not occur in the parallel passages of the Vāyu and Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇas.

9. The Vāyu goes farther than this, and states that castes were now first divided according to their occupations: having, indeed, previously stated that there was no such distinction in the Kṛta age: वर्णश्चमव्यवस्था न तदासत्रं शंकरः। Brahmanā now appointed those who were robust and violent to be Kṣatriyas, to protect the rest; those who were pure and pious be made Brāhmaṇas: those who were of less power, but industrious, and addicted to cultivate the ground, he made Vaisyas; whilst the feeble and poor of spirit were constituted Śūdras: and he assigned them their several occupations, to prevent that interference with one another which had occurred as long as they recognised duties peculiar to castes: वर्णधर्मरजीवन्त्यो (प्रेजाः) ऽवरुद्ध्यन्ते परस्परं।

10. These worlds, some of which will be more particularly described in a different section, are the seven Lokas or spheres above the earth: 1. Prajāpatya or Pitṛi loka: 2. Indra loka or Swarga: 3. Marutloka or Divaloka, heaven: 4. Gandharva loka, the region of celestial spirits; also called Maharloka: 5. Janaloka, or the sphere of saints; some copies read eighteen thousand; others, as in the text, which is also the leading of the Pādma Purāṇa: 6. Tapaloka, the world of the seven sages: and, Brahmaloka or Satyaloka, the world of infinite wisdom and truth. The eighth, or high world of Viṣṇu. विष्णोः परम् पदं is a sactional addition, which in the Bhāgavata is called Vaikuṇṭha. And in the Brahmanā Vaivartta, Goloka; both apparently, and most certainly the last, modern inventions.

11. The divisions of Nāraka, or hell, here named, are again more particularly enumerated, b. 11. c. 6.

Parāśara said— From Brahmā, continuing to meditate, were born mind-engendered progeny, with forms and faculties derived from his corporeal nature; embodied spirits, produced from the person of that all-wise deity. All these beings, from the gods to inanimate things, appeared as I have related to you,¹ being the abode of the three qualities: but as they did not multiply themselves. Brahmā created other mind-born sons, like himself; namely, Bhṛgu, Pulastyā, Pulaha, Kratu, Angiras, Marīci, Dakṣa, Atri and Vasiṣṭha: these are the nine Brahmās (or Brahmārshis) celebrated in the Purāṇas.²

Sanandana and the other sons of Brahmā were previously created by him, but they were without desire or passion, inspired with holy wisdom, estranged from the universe, and undesirous of progeny. This when Brahmā perceived, he was filled with wrath capable of consuming the three words, the flame of which invested, like a garland, heaven, earth, and hell. Then from his forehead, darkened with angry frowns, sprang Rudra³, radiant as the noon-tide sun, fierce, and of vast bulk, and of a figure which was half male, half female. Separate yourself, Brahmā said to him; and having so spoken, disappeared. Obedient to which command, Rudra became twofold, disjoining his male and female natures, His male being he again divided into eleven persons, of whom some were agreeable, some hideous, some fierce, some mild; and he multiplied his female nature manifold, of complexions black or white.⁴

Then Brahmā⁵ created himself the Manu Svāyambhuva, born of and identical with, his original self, for the protection of created beings; and the female portion of himself he constituted Śatarūpā whom austerity purified from the sin (of forbidden nuptials), and whom the divine Manu Svāyambhuva took to wife. From these two were born two sons, Priyavrata and Uttānapāda⁶, and two daughters, named Prasūti and Ākūti, graced with loveliness and exalted merit⁷. Prasūti he gave to Dakṣa, after giving Ākūti to the patriarch Ruci⁸, who espoused her. Ākūti bore to Ruci twins, Yajñā and Dakṣinā⁹, who afterwards became husband and wife, and had twelve sons, the deities called Yāmas¹⁰, in the Manvantara of Svāyambhuva.

The patriarch Dakṣa had by Prasūti twenty-four daughters¹¹: hear from me their names: Sraddha (faith), Lakṣmī (prosperity), Dhṛti (steadiness), Tuṣṭi (resignation), Puṣṭi (thriving), Medhā (intelligence), Kriyā (action, devotion), Buddhi (intellect), Lajjā (modesty), Vapu (body), Śānti (expiation), Siddhi (perfection), Kīrtti (fame): these thirteen daughters of Dakṣa. Dharma (righteousness) took to wife. The other eleven bright-eyed and younger daughters of the patriarch were, Khyāti (celebrity), Satī (truth), Sambhuti (fitness), Smṛti (memory), Pṛti (affection), Kṣama (patience), Sannati (humility), Anasūyā (charity), Urjjā (energy), with Svāhā (offering), and Svadhā (oblation). These maidens were respectively wedded to the Munis— Bhrgu, Bhava, Marici, Aṅgiras, Pulastyā, Pulaha, Kratu, Atri, and Vasiṣṭha; to Firc (Vahni), and to the Pitṛs (progenitors)¹².

The progeny of Dharma by the daughters of Dakṣa were as follows: by Sraddhā lie had Kāma (desire); by Lakṣmī, Darpa (pride); by Dhṛti, Niyama (precept); by Tuṣṭi, Santoṣa (content); by Puṣṭi, Lobha (cupidity); by Medhā, Śruta (sacred tradition); by Kriyā, Daṇḍa, Naya and Vinaya (correction, polity, and prudence); by Buddhi, Bodha (understanding); by Lajjā, Vinaya (good behaviour); by Vapu, Vyavasāya (perseverance). Śānti gave birth to Kṣema (prosperity); Siddhi to Sukha (enjoyment); and Kīrtti to Yaśas (reputation¹³). These were the sons of Dharma; one of whom, Kāma, had Harṣa (joy) by his wife Nandi (delight).

The wife of Adharma¹⁴ (vice) was Himsā (violence), on whom he begot a son Anṛta (falsehood), and a daughter Nikṛti (immorality): they intermarried, and had two sons, Bhaya (fear) and Nārāka (Hell); and twins to them, two daughters, Mayā (deceit) and Vedanā (torture), who became their wives. The son of Bhaya and Māyā was the destroyer of living creatures, or Mṛtyu (death); and Duḥkha (pain) was the offspring of Nāraka and Vedanā. The children of Mṛtyu were Vyādhi (disease), Jarā (decay), Śoka (sorrow), Trṣṇā (greediness), and Krodha (wrath). These are all called the inflictors of misery, and are characterised as the progeny of Vice (Adharma). They are all without wives, without posterity, without the faculty to procreate; they are the terrific forms of Viśnu, and perpetually operate as causes of the destruction of this world. On the contrary, Dakṣa and the other Ṛsis, the elders of mankind, tend perpetually to influence its renovation: whilst the Manus and their sons, the heroes endowed with mighty power, and treading in the path of truth, as constantly contribute to its preservation.

Parāśara said—Madhusūdana, whose essence is incomprehensible, in the forms of these (partriarchs and Manus), is the author of the uninterrupted vicissitudes of creation, preservation, and destruction. The dissolution of all things is of four kinds; Naimittika, 'occasional;' Prākṛtika, 'elemental;' Ātyantika, 'absolute;' Nitya, 'perpetual'¹⁵. The first, also termed the Brahmā dissolution, occurs when the sovereign of the world reclines in sleep. In the second, the mundane egg resolves into the primary element, from whence it was derived. Absolute non-existence of the world is the absorption of the sage, through knowledge, into supreme spirit. Perpetual destruction is the constant disappearance, day and night, of all that are born. The productions of Pratmi form the creation that is termed the elemental (Prakṛta). That which ensues after a (minor) dissolution is called ephemeral creation: and the daily generation of living things is termed by those who are versed in the Purāṇas, constant creation.

इति श्रीविष्णुपुराणे प्रथमांशे सप्तमोऽध्यायः।

In this manner the mighty Viśnu, whose essence is the elements, abides in all bodies, and brings about production, existence, and dissolution. The faculties of Viśnu to create, to preserve, and to destroy, operate successively, Maitreya, in all corporeal beings and at all seasons; and he who frees himself from the influence of these three faculties, which are essentially composed of the three qualities (goodness, foulness, and darkness), goes to the supreme sphere, from whence he never again returns.

NOTES

1. It is not clear which of the previous narratives is here referred to, but it seems most probable that the account in Ch. V. is intended.

2. Considerable variety prevails in this list of Prajāpatis, Brahmā-putras. Brāhmaṇas, or Brahmārshis; but the variations are of the nature of additions made to an apparently original enumeration of but seven, whose names generally recur. Thus in the Mahābhārata,¹ Mokṣa Dharma, we have in one place, Marīci. Atri, Angiras. Pulastya, Pulaha, Kratu, and Vasiṣṭha, ब्रह्मणः सप्त वै पुत्रां महात्मानः स्वयम्भुवः। 'the seven highminded sons of the self-born Brahmā.' In another place of the same, however, we have Dakṣa substituted for Vasiṣṭha: ब्रह्मानुसंज्ञे पुत्रान् मानसान् दक्षसप्तमान्। मरीचिमत्रङ्गिरसं पुलस्त्यं पुलहं क्रतुं। 'Brahmā then created mind-begotten sons, of whom Dakṣa was the seventh, with Marīci,' etc. These seven sons of Brahmā are also identified with the seven Ṛsis: as in the Vāyu, पूयः सप्तर्षयस्त्वेव उत्पत्ता सप्त मानसाः। पुत्रवे कल्पिताश्वेव स्वयमेव स्वयम्भुवः। although, with palpable inconsistency, eight are immediately enumerated, or, Bhṛgu, Marīci. Atri, Angiras, Pulastya, Pulaha. Kratu, and Vasiṣṭha. The Uttara Khaṇḍa of the Pādma Purāṇa substitutes Kardama for Vasiṣṭha. The Bhāgavata includes Dakṣa, enumerating nine. The Matsya agrees with Manu in adding Nārada to the list of our text. The Kūrma Purāṇa adds Dharma and Saṅkalpa. The Liṅga, Brahmāṇḍa, and Vāyu Purāṇa also add them, and extend the list to Adharma and Ruci. The Hari Vaiśiṣṭa in one place inserts Gautama, and in another Manu. Altogether therefore we have seventeen, instead of seven. But the accounts given of the origin of several of these, show that they were not originally included amongst the Mānasa putras, or sons of Brahmā's mind; for even Dakṣa, who finds a place in all the lists except one of those given in the Mahābhārata, is uniformly said to have sprung from Brahmā's thumb: and the same patriarch, as well as Dharma, is included in some accounts, as in the Bhāgavata and Matsya Purāṇa, amongst a different series of Brahmā's progeny, or virtues and vices: or, Dakṣa (dexterity). Dharma (virtue). Kāma (desire). Krodha (passion). Lobha (covetousness). Moha (infatuation), Mada (insanity), Pramoda (pleasure), Mṛtyu (death). and Aṅgaja (lust). These are severally derived from different parts of Brahmā's body: and the Bhāgavata adding Kardama (soil or sin) to this enumeration, makes him spring from Brahmā's shadow. The simple statement, that the first Prajāpatis sprang from the mind or will of Brahmā, has not contented the depraved taste of the mystics, and in some of the Purāṇas, as the Bhāgavata, Liṅga, and Vāyu, they also are derived from the body of their progenitor: or, Bhṛgu from his skin, Marīci from his mind. Atri from his eyes, Angiras from his mouth. Pulastya from his ear, Pulaha from his navel. Kratu from his hand, Vasiṣṭha from his breath, Dakṣa from his thumb, and Nārada from his hip. They do not exactly agree, however, in the places whence these beings proceed; as for instance, according to the Liṅga, Marīci springs from Brahmā's eyes, not Atri, who there proceeds, instead of Pulastya, from his ears. The Vāyu has also another account of their origin, and states them to have sprung from the fires of a sacrifice offered by Brahmā; an allegorical mode of expressing, their probable origin, considering them to be in some degree real persons, from the Brāhmaṇical ritual, of which they were the first institutors and observers. The Vāyu Purāṇa also states, that besides the seven primitive Ṛsis, the Prajāpatis are numerous, and specifies Kardama. Kaśyapa, Sesha, Vikrānta. Susravas, Bahuputra, Kumāra, Vivaśvat. Sucisravas. Prāchetasa (Daksā), Arīstanemi, Babula. These and many others were Prajāpatis: इत्येवमादयोऽन्येऽपि बहवश्च प्रजेश्वराः। In the beginning of the Mahābhārata (A.P.) we have again a different origin, and first Dakṣa, the son of Pracetasa, it is said, had seven sons, after whom the twenty-one Prajāpatis were born, or appeared. According to the commentator, seven sons of Daksā were the allegorical persona Krodha, Tamas, Dama, Viśṛta, Angiras. Kardama, and Asva; and the twenty-one Prajāpatis, the seven usually specified Marīchi and the rest, and the fourteen Manus. This looks like a blending of the earlier and later notions.

3. Besides this general notice of the origin of Rudra and his separate forms, we have in the next chapter an entirely different set of beings so denominated; and the eleven alluded to in the text are also more particularly enumerated in a subsequent chapter. The origin of Rudra, as one of the agents in creation, is described in most of the Purāṇas, The Mahābhārata, indeed, refers his origin to Viśnu, representing him as the personification of his anger, whilst Brahmā is that of his kindness: अहः क्षये ललाटाच्च सुतौ देवस्य वै तथा। रुतौ द्वौ विबुधश्रेष्ठौ प्रसादक्रोधजावुभौ। तदादेशितपन्थानौ सृष्टिसंहारकारकौ॥ The Kūrma Purāṇa makes him proceed from Brahmā's mouth, whilst engaged in meditating on creation. The Vāraha Purāṇa makes this appearance of Rudra the consequence of a promise made by Śiva to Brahmā, that he would become his son. In the parallel passages in other Purāṇas the progeny of the Rudra created by Brahmā is not confined to the eleven, but comprehends infinite numbers of beings in person and equipments like their parent; until Brahmā, alarmed at their fierceness, numbers, and immortality, desires his son Rudra, or, as the Matsya calls him, Vāmadeva, to form creatures of a different and mortal nature. Rudra refusing to do this, desists; whence his name Sthānu, from Sthā, 'to stay,' Liṅga, Vāyu Purāṇa etc.

4. According to the Vāyu, the female became first twofold, or one half white, and the other black; and each of these, again, becomes manifold, being the various energies, or Śaktis, of Mahādeva, as stated by the Kūrma, after the words स्वरूपैसितैः इतिैः which are those of our text: ता वै विभूतयो विप्रा विश्रुताः शक्यो भुवि। The Liṅga and Vāyu specify many of their names. Those of the white, complexion, or mild nature, include Lakṣmī, Sarasvatī, Gaurī, Umā, etc. Those of the dark hue, and fierce-disposition, Durgā, Kāli, Chandī, Mahārātri, and others.

5. Brahmā, after detaching from himself the property of anger, in the form of Rudra, converted himself into two persons, the first male, or the Manu Svāyambhuva, and the first woman, or Śatarūpa: so in the Vedas; एव आत्मा वै पुत्रो नामसीत्। 'So himself was indeed (his) son.' The commencement of production through sexual agency is here described with sufficient distinctness, but the subject has been rendered obscure by a more complicated succession of agents, and especially by the introduction of a person of a mythic or mystical character, Virāj. The notion is thus expressed in Manu: "Having divided his own substance, the mighty power Brahmā became half male and half female; and from that female he produced Virāj. Know me to be that person whom the male Virāj produced by himself." I. 32. 33. We have therefore a series of Brahmā, Virāj, and Manu, instead of Brahmā and Manu only: also the generation of progeny by Brahmā, begotten on Śatarūpa, instead of her being, as in our text, the wife of Manu. The idea seems to have originated with the Vedas, as Kullūka Bhaṭṭa quotes a text: ततो विडाज्ञायत्। Then (or thence) Virāj was born.' The procreation of progeny by Brahmā, however, is at variance with the whole system, which almost invariably refers his creation to the operation of his will: and the expression in Manu, तस्या स विराजमसृजत्। 'he created Virāj in her,' does not necessarily imply sexual intercourse. Virāj also creates, not begets, Manu. And in neither instance does the name of Śatarūpa occur. The commentator on Manu, however, understands the expression asrijat to imply the procreation of Virāj : मैथुन धर्मेण। and the same interpretation is given by the Matsya Purāṇa, in which the incestuous passion of Brahmā for Śatarūpa, his daughter in one sense, his sister in another, is described; and by her he begets Virāj, who there is called, not the progenitor of Manu, but Manu himself: ततः कालेन महता तस्या: पुत्रोऽभवन्मनुः स्वायम्भुव इति खातः स विराङ्गित नः श्रुतं। This therefore agrees with our text, as far as it makes Manu the son of Brahmā, though not us to the nature of the connexion. The reading of the Agni and Pādma Purāṇa is that of the Viśnu; and the Bhāgavata agrees with it in one place, stating distinctly that the male half of Brahmā was Manu, the other half, Śatarūpa: यस्यु तत्र पुमान् सोऽभूमनुः स्वायम्भुवः स्वराद् स्त्री यासीच्छतरूपाख्या महात्मनः। Bhāgav. III. 12. 35:

and although the production of Virāj is elsewhere described, it is neither as the son of Brahmā, nor the father of Manu. The original and simple idea, therefore, appears to be, the ideality of Manu with the male half of Brahmā, and his being thence regarded as his son. The Kūrma Purāṇa gives the same account as Manu, and in the same words. The Liṅga Purāṇa and Vāyu Purāṇa describe the origin of Virāj and Śatarūpa from Brahmā; and they intimate the union of Śatarūpa with Puruṣa or Virāj, the male portion of Brahmā, in the first instance; and in the second, with Manu, who is termed Vairāja, or the son of Virāj: वैराजस्तु मनुः स्मृतः। The Brahmā Purāṇa the words of which are repeated in the Hari Vaiśṇava, introduces a new element of perplexity in a new name, that of Āpava. According to the commentator, this is a name of the Prajāpati Vasiṣṭha: आपवैः वसिष्ठापरनामः प्रजापतेः। As, however, he performs the office of Brahmā, he should be regarded as that divinity: but this is not exactly the case, although it has been so rendered by the French translator. Āpava becomes twofold, and in the capacity of his male half begets offspring by the female. Again, it is said Viṣṇu created Virāj, and Virāj created the male, which is Vairāja or Manu; who was thus the second interval (Antaram), or stage, in creation. That is, according to the commentator, the first stage was the creation of Āpava, or Vasiṣṭha, or Virāj, by Viṣṇu, through the agency of Hiranyaagarbha or Brahmā; and the next was that of the creation of Manu by Virāj. Śatarūpā appears as first the bride of Āpava, and then as the wife of Manu. This account therefore, although obscurely expressed, appears to be essentially the same with that of Manu; and we have Brahmā, Viraj, Manu, instead of Brahmā and Manu. It seems probable that this difference, and the part assigned to Virāj, has originated in some measure from confounding Brahmā with the male half of his individuality, and considering as two beings that which was but one. If the Puruaha or Virāj be distinct from Brahmā, what becomes of Brahmā? The entire whole and its two halves cannot co-exist, although some of the Paurāṇiks and the author of Manu seem to have imagined its possibility, by making Virāj the son of Brahmā. The perplexity, however, is still more ascribable to the personification of that which was only an allegory. The division of Brahmā into two halves designates, as is very evident from the passage in the Vedas given by Colebrooke, (As. R. VIII. 425.) the distinction of corporeal substance into two sexes: Virāj being all male animals, Śatarūpā all female animals. So the commentator on the Hari Vārīṣa explains the former to denote the horse, the bull, etc.; and the latter, the mare, the cow, and the like. In the Bhāgavata the term Virāj implies, Body, collectively, as the commentator observes; समष्टिरीयं स्वधित्यं प्रतपन् प्राणो बहिश्च प्रतपत्यसौ एवं विराजं प्रतपंस्तपत्यन्तर्ब्द्धेः पुमान्। 'As the sub illuminates his own inner sphere, as well as the exterior regions, so soul, shining in body (Virāja), irradiates all without and within.' विराज् देहं प्रकाशयन् ब्रह्माण्डं प्रकाशयति। All therefore that the birth of Virāj was intended to express, was the creation of living body, of creatures of both sexes: and as in consequence man was produced, he might be said to the son of Virāj, or bodily existence. Again Śatarūpā, the bride of Brahmā, or of Virāj, or of Manu, is nothing more than beings of varied of manifold forms, from Sata, 'a hundred' and रूप, 'form,' explained by the annotator on the Harī Vamsa by Anantarūpa (अनन्तरूपा) 'of infinite,' and Vividharūpa (विविधरूपा), 'of diversified shape;' being, as he stares the same as Māyā, 'illusion,' or the power of multiform metamorphosis: अनेकरूपधारणसामर्थ्यं। The Matsya Purāṇa has a little allegory of its own, on the subject of Brahmā's intercourse with Śatarūpā; for it explains the former to mean, the Vedas, and the latter the Savitri, or holy place, which is their chief text; and in their cohabitation there no evil: वेदराशिः स्मृतो ब्रह्मा सावित्री तदधिष्ठिता। तस्मात्र कञ्चिद्दोषः स्यात् सावित्री गमने विभोः॥

6. The Brahmā Purāṇa has a different order, and makes Vīra the Son of the first pair, who has Uttānapāda, etc. by Kāmyā. The commentator on the Hari Vārīṣa quotes the Vāyu for a confirmation of this account: but the passage there is. वैराजात् युरुषद्वारौ शतरूपा व्यजायत उत्तानपादप्रितव्रतौ। 'Śatarūpā bore to the male Vairāja (Manu) two Viras,' i. e. heroes or heroic sons, Uttānpāda and Priyavrata. It looks as if the compiler of the Brāhma Purāṇa had made some very unaccountable blunder, and invented upon it a new couple, Vīra and Kāmyā: no such person as the former occurs in any other Purāṇa, nor does Kāmyā, as his wife.

7. The Bhāgavata adds a third daughter, Devahūti: for the purpose apparently of introducing a long legend of the Rṣi Kardama, to whom she is married, and of their son Kapila: a legend not met with anywhere else.

8. Ruci is reckoned amongst the Prajāpatis by the Linga and Vāyu Purāṇas.

9. These descendants of Svāyambhuva are all evidently allegorical: thus Yajña is 'sacrifice,' and Dakṣiṇā, 'donation' to Brāhmaṇas.

10. The Bhāgavata (b. IV. c. 1) says the Tushitas, but they are the divinities of the second, not of the first Manvantara, as appears also in another part of the same, where the Yāmas are likewise referred to the Svāyambhuva Manvantara.

11. These twenty-four daughters are of much less universal occurrence in the Purāṇas than the more extensive series of fifty or sixty, which is subsequently described, and which appears to be the more ancient legend.

12. The twenty-four daughters of Dakṣa are similarly named and disposed of in most of the Purāṇas which notice them. The Bhāgavata, having introduced a third daughter of Svāyambhuva, has a rather different enumeration, in order to assign some of them, the wives of the Prajāpatis, to Kardama and Devahūti. Dakṣa had therefore, it is there said (b. IV. c. I), sixteen daughters, thirteen of whom were married to Dharma, named Sraddhā, Maitrī (friendship), Dayā (clemency), Sānti Tuṣṭi, Puṣṭi, Kriyā, Unnati (elevation), Buddhi, Medhā, Titikṣā (patience), Hṛī (modesty), Mūrtti (form): and three, Śati, Svāhā, and Svadhā, married, as in our text. Some of the daughters of Devahūti repeat these appellations, but that is of slight consideration. They are Kālī (a moment), married to Marīchi; Anasūyā to Atri; Sraddhā to Angiras; Havirbhu (oblation-born) to Pulastyā; Gati (movement) to Pulaha : Kriyā to Kratu; Khyāti to Bhṛgu : Arundhatī to Vasiṣṭha; and Sānti to Atharvan. In all these instances the persons are manifestly allegorical, being personifications of intelligences and virtues and religious rites, and being therefore appropriately wedded to the probable authors of the Hindu code of religion and morals, or to the equally allegorical representation of that code, Dharma, moral and religious duty.

13. The same remark applies here. The Purāṇas that give these details generally concur with our text, but the Bhāgavata specifies the progeny of Dharma in a somewhat different manner; or, following the order observed in the list of Dharma's wives, their children are, Rita (truth), Prasāda (favour), Abhaya (fearlessness), Sukha, Muda (pleasure), Smaya (wonder), Yoga (devotion), Darpa, Artha (meaning), Smṛiti (memory), Kshema, Prasraya (affection), and the two saints Nara and Nārāyaṇa, the sons of Dharma by Mūrtti. We have occasional varieties of nomenclature in other authorities; as, instead of Sruta, Sāma: Kūrma Purāṇa, instead of Dañḍanaya, Sāmaya; and instead of Bodha, Apramāda; Liṅga Purāṇa: and Siddha in place of Sukha: Kūrma Purāṇa.

14. The text rather abruptly introduces Adharma and his family. He is said by the commentator to be the son of Brahmā, and the Liṅga Purāṇa enumerates him among the Prajāpatis, as well as Dharma. According to the Bhāgavata, he is the husband of Mrshā (falsehood), and the father of Dambha (hypocrisy) and Māyā (deceit), who were adopted by Nirṛitti. The series of their descendants is also somewhat varied from our text; being in each descent, however, twins which intermarry, or Lobha (covetousness) and Nikṛti, who produce Krodha (wrath) and Himsā: their children are, Kali (wickedness) and Durukti (evil speech); their progeny are, Mṛtyu and Bhī (fear); whose offspring are, Niraya (hell) and Yātanā (torment).

15. The three first of these are more particularly described in the last book: the last, the Nitya, or constant, is differently described by Vans Kennedy (Ancient and Hindu Mythology, p. 224. note). "In the 7th chapter," he observes, "of the Viśnu Purāṇa four kinds of Pralaya are described. The Naimitika takes place when Brahmā slumbers: the Prakṛita when this universe returns to its original nature: Atyantika proceeds from divine knowledge: and Nitya is the extinction of life, like the extinction of a lamp, in sleep at night." For this last characteristic, however, our text furnishes no warrant; nor can it be explained to signify, that the Nitya Pralaya means no more than "a man's falling into a sound sleep at night." All the copies consulted on the present occasion concur in reading, नित्यः सदैव जातानां यो विनाशो दिवानिशः। as rendered above. The commentator supplies the illustration, दीपज्वलावत्! 'like the flame of a lamp,' but he also writes, जातानां दिवानिशं यो विनाशः स नित्यः। 'That which is the destruction of all that are born, night and day, is the Nitya, or constant.' Again, in a verse presently following we have the Nitya Sarga, 'constant or perpetual creation,' as opposed to constant dissolution भूतात्मनुदिनं यत्र जायन्ते मुनिसत्तमाः। नित्यः सर्गः स तु ग्रोकः पुराणार्थविचक्षणैः। 'That in which, oh excellent sages, beings are daily born, is termed constant creation, by those learned in the Purāṇas.' The commentator explains this, अस्मदादिसृष्टिप्रवाहो नित्यः सर्ग इत्यर्थः। 'The constant flow or succession of the creation of ourselves and other creatures is the Nitya or constant creation: this is the meaning of the text.' It is obvious, therefore, that the alternation intended is that of life and death, not of waking and sleep.

Parāśara.—have described to you, oh great Muni, the creation of Brahmā, in which the quality of darkness prevailed. I will now explain to you the creation of Rudra.¹

In the beginning of the Kalpa, as Brahmā purposed to create a son, who should be like himself, a youth of a purple complexion² appeared, crying with a low cry, and running about.³ Brahmā, when he beheld him thus afflicted, said to him, "Why do you weep?" "Give me a name," replied the boy. "Rudra be your name," rejoined the great father of all creatures : "be composed; desist from tears."

एवमुक्तः पुनः सोऽथ सप्तकृत्वे रुरोद वै।

But, thus addressed, the boy still wept seven-times, and Brahmā therefore gave to him seven other denominations; and to these eight persons regions and wives and posterity belong. The eight manifestations, then, are named Rudra, Bhava, Sarva, Isāna, Paśupati, Bhima, Ugra, and Mahādeva, which were given to them by their great progenitor. He also assigned to them their respective stations, the sun, water, ether, air, fire, earth, the ministrant Brahman, and the moon; for these are their several forms.⁴

The wives of the sun and the other manifestations, termed Rudra and the rest were respectively, Suvercalā, Umā, Vikesī, Śivā, Svāhā, Diśā, Dikṣā and Rohinī. Now hear an account of their progeny, by whose successive generations this world has been peopled. Their sons, then, were severally, Sanaiśocara (Saturn), Śukra (Venus), the fiery-bodied Mars, Manojava (Hanumān), Skanda, Swarga, Santāna, and Budha (Mercury).

It was the Rudra of this description that married Sati, who abandoned her corporeal existence in consequence of the displeasure of Dakṣa.⁵ She afterwards was the daughter of Himavān (the snowy mountains) by Menā; and in that character, as the only Umā, the mighty Bhava again married her.⁶ The divinities Dhāti and Viḍhātā were born to Bhṛgu by Khyāti, as was a daughter, Śrī, the wife of Nārāyaṇa, the god of gods.⁷

Maitreya.—It is commonly said that the goddess Śrī was born from the sea of milk, when it was churned for ambrosia; how then can you say that she was the daughter of Bhṛgu by Khyāti ?

Parāśara said— Śrī, the bride of Viṣṇu, the mother of the world, is eternal, imperishable; in like manner as he is all-pervading, so also is she, oh best of Brāhmaṇas, omnipresent. Viṣṇu is meaning; she is speech. Hari is polity (Nyaya); she is prudence (Nīti). Viṣṇu is understanding; she is intellect. He is righteousness; she is devotion. He is the creator; she is creation. Śrī is the earth; Hari the support of it. The deity is concert; the eternal Lakṣmī is resignation. He is desire; Śrī if wish. He is sacrifice; she is sacrificial donation (Dakṣinā). The goddess is the invocation which attends the oblation; Janārddana is the oblation.

Lakṣmī is the chamber where the females are present (at a religious ceremony); Madhusūdana the apartment of the males of the family. Lakṣmī is the altar, Hari the stake (to which the victim is bound). Śrī is the fuel; Hari the holy grass (Kuṣa). He is the personified Sāma-veda; the goddess, lotus-throned, is the tone of its chanting. Lakṣmī is the prayer of oblation (Svāhā); Vāsudeva, the lord of the world, is the sacrificial fire. Sauri (Viṣṇu) is Śāṅkara (Śiva); and Śrī is the bride of Śiva (Gaurī). Keśava, oh Maitreya, is the sun; and his radiance is the lotuses eated goddess. Viṣṇu is the tribe of progenitors (Pitṛgāna); Pādma is their bride (Svadhā), the eternal bestower of nutriment. Śrī is the heavens; Viṣṇu, who is one with all things, is wide extended space. The lord of Śrī is the moon; she is his unfading light. She is called the moving principle of the world; he, the wind which bloweth every wherc.

Govinda is the ocean; Lakṣmī its shore. Lakṣmī is the consort of Indra (Indrāṇī); Madhusūdana is Devendra. The holder of the discus (Viṣṇu) is Yama (the regent of Tartarus); the lotus-throned goddess is his dusky spouse (Dhūmornā). Śrī is wealth; Śridhara (Viṣṇu) is himself the god of riches (Kuvera).

O illustrious Brahman, Lakṣmī is Gauri; and Keśava is the deity of ocean (Varuṇa). Śrī is the host of heaven (Devasena); the deity of war, her lord, is Hari. The wielder of the mace is resistance; the power to oppose is Śrī Lakṣmī is the Kāsthā and the Kala; Hari the Nimesa and the Muhūrtta. Lakṣmī is the light: and Hari, who is all, and lord of all, the lamp. She, the mother of the world, is the creeping vine; and Viṣṇu the tree round which she clings. She is the night; the god who is armed with the mace and discus is the day. He, the bestower of blessings, is the bridegroom; the lotus-throned goddess is the bride.

इति श्रीविष्णुपुराणे प्रथमाशे अष्टमोऽध्यायः॥

The god is one with all male—the goddess one with all female, rivers. The lotus-eyed deity is the standard; the goddess seated on a lotus the banner. Lakṣmī is cupidity; Nārāyaṇa, the master of the world, is covetousness. Oh you who know what righteousners is, Govinda is love; and Lakṣmī, his gentle spouse, is pleasure. But why thus diffusely enumerate their presence?—it is enough to say, in a word, that of gods, animals, and men. Hari is all that is called male; Lakṣmī is all that is termed female: there is nothing else than they.

NOTES

1. The creation of Rudra has been already adverted to, and that seems to be the primitive form of the legend. We have here another account, grounded apparently upon Śaiva or Yoga mysticism.

2. The appearance of Rudra as a Kumāra, 'a boy,' is described as of repeated occurrence in the Liṅga and Vāyu Purāṇas, as already noticed (Ch. V. Note 12); and these Kumāras are of different complexions in different Kalpas. In the Vaiṣṇava Purāṇas, however, we have only one original form, to which the name of Nilalohita, the blue and red or purple complexioned is assigned. In the Kūrma this youth comes from Brahmā's mouth: in the Vāyu, from his forehead,

3. This is the Paurāṇic etymology: रोदनाह चनाच्छैव रुदः। or rud, 'to weep.' and dru, 'to run.' The grammarians derive the name from rud, 'to weep,' with ra affix.

4. The Vāyu details the application of each name severally. These eight Rudras are therefore but one, under as many appellations, and in as many types. The Pādma, Mārkaṇḍeya, Kūrma, Liṅga.. and Vāyu agree with our text in the nomenclature of the Rudras, and their types, their wives, and progeny. The types are those which are enumerated in the Nandi, or opening benedictory verse, of Śākuntalā; and the passage of the Viṣṇu Purāṇa was found by Chezy on the envelope of his copy. He has justly corrected Jones's version of the term होत्री 'the sacrifice is performed with solemnity,' as the word means. 'Brāhmaṇa officiant दीक्षितो ब्राह्मणः।' 'the Brahman who is qualified by initiation (Dikṣā) to conduct the rite.' These are considered as the bodies, or visible forms, of those modifications of Rudra which are variously named, and which, being praised in them, severally abstain from harming them: तेषु पूज्यश्च वन्यः स्यात्। रुद्रस्तोत्र हिनस्ति वै। इति श्रुतिः। Vāyu Purāṇa The Bhāgavata, III. 12. has a different scheme, as usual; but it confounds the notion of the eleven Rudras, to whom the text subsequently adverts, with that of the eight here specified. These eleven it terms Manu, Manu, Mahīnasa, Mahān, Siva, Ṛtadvaja, Ugraretas, Bhava, Kāla, Vāmadeva, and Dhṛtavrata: their wives are. Dhī, Dhṛti, Rasalomā, Niyut, Sarpi, Ilā, Ambikā, Irāvatī, Svadhā, Dikṣā, Rudrāṇi: and their places are the heart, senses, breath, ether, air, fire, water, earth, sun, moon, and tapas, or ascetic devotion. The same allegory or mystification characterises both accounts.

5. See the story of Dakṣa's sacrifice at the end of the chapter.

6. The story of Uma's birth and marriage occurs in the Śiva Purāṇa and in the Kāśī Khaṇḍa of the Skanda Purāṇa: it is noticed briefly, and with some variation from the Purāṇas, in the Rāmāyaṇa, first book: it is also given in detail in the Kumāra Sambhava of Kālidāsa.

7. The family of Bhṛgu is more particularly described in the tenth chapter: it is here mentioned merely to introduce the story of the birth of the goddess of prosperity, Śrī.

SACRIFICE OF DAKṢA¹ (From the Vāyu Purāṇa)

"There was formerly a peak of Meru, named Sāvitra, abounding with gems, radiant as the sun, and celebrated throughout the three worlds; of immense extent, and difficult of access, and an object of universal veneration. Upon that glorious eminence, rich with mineral treasures, as upon a splendid couch, the deity Śiva reclined, accompanied by the daughter of the sovereign of mountains, and attended by the mighty Ādityas, the powerful Vasus, and by the heavenly physicians, the sons of Aśvini; by Kuvera, surrounded by his train of Guhyakas, the lord of the Yaksas, who dwells on Kailāsa. There also was the great Muni Usanas: there, were Ṛṣis of the first order, with Sanatkumāra at their head; divine Ṛṣis, preceded by Angiras; Viśvāvasu, with his bands of heavenly choristers; the sages Nārada and Parvata; and innumerable troops of celestial nymphs. The breeze blew upon the mountain, bland, pure, and fragrant; and the trees were decorated with flowers, that blossomed in every season. The Vidyadharas and Siddhas, affluent in devotion, waited upon Mahādeva, the lord of living creatures; and many other beings, of various forms, did him homage. Rāksasas of terrific semblance, and Piśachas of great strength, of different shapes and features, armed with various weapons, and blazing like fire, were delighted to be present, as the followers of the god. There stood the royal Nandi, high in the favour of his lord, armed with a fiery trident, shining with inherent lustre; and there the best of rivers, Gangā, the assemblage of all holy waters, stood adoring the mighty deity. Thus worshipped by all the most excellent of sages and of gods, abode the omnipotent and all-glorious Mahādeva.

"In former times, Dakṣa commenced a holy sacrifice on the side of Himavān, at the sacred spot Gangadvāra, frequented by the Ṛṣia. The gods, desirous of assisting at this solemn rite, came, with Indra at their head, to Mahādeva, and intimated their purpose; and having received his permission, departed in their splendid chariots to Gangadvara, as tradition reports². They found Dakṣa, the best of the devour, surrounded by the singers and nymphs of heaven, and by numerous sages, beneath the shade of clustering trees and climbing plants; and all of them, whether dwellers on earth, in air, or in the regions above the skies, approached the patriarch with outward gestures of respect. The Adityas, Vasus, Rudras, Maruts, all entitled to partake of the oblations, together with Jiṣṇu, were present. The four classes of Pitrīs, Ushmapās, Somapās, Ajyapts, and Dhūmapās, or those who feed upon the name, the acid juice, the butter, or the smoke of offerings, the Aśvins and the progenitors, came along with Brahmā. Creatures of every class, born from the womb, the egg, from vapour, or vegetation, came upon their invocation; as did all the gods, with their brides, who in their resplendent vehicles blazed like so many fires. Beholding them thus assembled, the sage Dadhicha was filled with indignation, and observed, 'The man who worships what ought not to be worshipped, or pays not reverence where veneration is due, is guilty, most assuredly, of heinous sin.' Then addressing Dakṣa, he said to him, 'Why do you not offer homage to the god who is the lord of life (Pasubhartri)?' Dakṣa spoke; 'I have already many Rudras present, armed with tridents, wearing braided hair, and existing in eleven forms: I recognise no other Mahādeva.' Dadhicha spoke; 'The invocation that is not addressed to Iśa, is, for all, but a solitary (and imperfect) summons. Inasmuch as I behold no other divinity who is superior to Śankara, this sacrifice of Dakṣa will not be completed.' Dakṣa spoke; 'I offer, in a golden cup, this entire oblation, which has been consecrated by many prayers, as an offering ever due to the unequalled Viṣṇu, the sovereign lord of all."³

"In the meanwhile, the virtuous daughter of the mountain king, observing the departure of the divinities, addressed her lord, the god of living beings, and said—Umā spoke—'Whither, oh lord, have the gods, preceded by Indra, this day departed? Tell me truly, oh you who know all truth, for a great doubt perplexes me.' Maheśvara spoke; 'Illustrious goddess, the excellenc patriarch Dakṣa celebrates the sacrifice of a horse, and thither the gods repair.' Devi spoke; 'Why then, most mighty god, dos you also not proceed to this solemnity? by what hindrance is your progress thither impeded?' Maheśvara spoke; 'This is the contrivance, mighty queen, of all the gods. that in all sacrifices no portion should be assigned to me. In consequence of an arrangement formerly devised, the gods allow me, of right, no participation of sacrificial offerings.' Devi spoke; 'The lord god lives in all bodily forms, and his might is eminent through his superior faculties; he is unsurpassable, he is unapproachable, in splendour and glory and power. That such as he should be excluded from his share of oblations, fills me with deep sorrow, and a trembling, oh sinless, seizes upon my frame. Shall I now practise bounty, restraint, or penance, so that my lord, who is inconceivable, may obtain a share, a half or a third portion, of the sacrifice⁴?'

"Then the mighty and incomprehensible deity, being pleased, said to his bride, thus agitated; and speaking; 'Slender-waisted queen of the gods. you know not the purport of what you say; but I know it, oh you with large eyes, for the holy declare all things by meditation. By your perplexity this day are all the gods. with Mahendra and all the three worlds, utterly confounded. In my sacrifice, those who worship me. repeat my praise?, and chant the Rathantara song of the Sāma veda; my priests worship me in the sacrifice of true wisdom, where no officiating Brahman is needed; and in this they offer me my portion.' Devi spoke; 'The lord is the root of all, and assuredly, in every assemblage of the female world, praises or hides himself at will.' Mahādeva spoke; 'Queen of the gods, I praise not myself: approach, and behold whom I shall create for the purpose of claiming my share of the rite.'

"Having thus spoken to his beloved spouse, the mighty Maheśvara created from his mouth a being like the fire of fate; a divine being, with a thousand heads, a thousand eyes, a thousand feet; wielding a thousand clubs, a thousand shafts; holding the shell, the discus, the mace, and bearing a blazing bow and battle-axe; fierce and terrific, shining with dreadful splendour, and decorated with the crescent moon; clothed in a tiger's skin, dripping with blood; having a capacious stomach, and a vast mouth, armed with formidable tusks: his ears were erect, his lips were pendulous, his tongue was lightning; his hand brandished the thunderbolt; flames screamed form his hair; a necklace of pearls wound round his neck; a garland of flame descended on his breast: radiant with lustre, he looked like the final fire that consumes the world. Four tremendous tusks projected from a mouth which extended from ear to ear : he was of vast bulk, vase strength, mighty male and lord, the destroyer of the universe, and like a large fig-tree in circumference; shining like a hundred moons at once; fierce as the fire of love; having four heads, sharp white teeth, and of mighty fierceness, vigour, activity, and courage; glowing with the blaze of a thousand fiery suns at the end of the world; like a thousand undimmed moons; in bulk like Himādri, Kailasa, or Meru, or Mandara, with all its gleaming herbs; bright as the sun of destruction at the end of ages; of irrcisistible prowess, and beautiful aspect; irascible, with lowering eyes, and a countenance burning like fire; clothed in the hide of the elephant and lion, and girt round with snakes; wearing a turban on his head, a moon on his brow; sometimes savage, sometimes mild; having a chaplet of many flowers on his head, anointed with various unguents, and adorned with diffrent ornaments and many sores of jewels; wearing a garland of heavenly Karnikāra flowers, and rolling his eyes with rage. Sometimes he danced; sometimes he laughed aloud; sometimes he stood wrapt in meditation; sometimes he trampled upon the earth; sometimes he sang; sometimes he wept repeatedly; and he was endowed with the faculties of wisdom, dispassion, power, penance, cruch, endurance, fortitude, dominion, and self-knowledge.

"This being, then, knelt down upon the ground, and raising his hands respectfully to his head, said to Mahādeva, 'Sovereign of the gods, command what it is that I must do for you,' To which Maheswara replied, 'Spoil the sacrifice of Dakṣa.' Then the mighty Virabhadra, having heard the pleasure of his lord, bowed down his head to the feet of Prajāpati; and starting like a lion loosed from bonds, despoiled the sacrifice of Dakṣa, knowing that he had been Created by the displeasure of Devi. She too in her wrath, as the fearful goddess Rudrakālī, accompanied him, with all her train, to witness his deeds. Virabhadra the fierce, abiding in the region of ghosts, is the minister of the anger of Devi. And he then created, from the pores of his skin, powerful demigods, the mighty attendants upon Rudra, of equal valour and strength, who started by hundreds and thousands into existence. Then a loud and confused clamour ailed all the expanse of ether, and inspired the denizens of heaven with dread. The mountains tottered, and earth shook, the winds roared, and the depths of the sea were disturbed; the fires lost their radiance, and the sun grew pale; the planets of the firmament shone not, neither did the stars give light; the Rshis ceased their hymns, and gods and demons were mute; and thick darkness eclipsed the chariots of the skies.⁵

"Then from the gloom emerged tearful and numerous forms, shouting the cry of battle; who instantly broke or overturned the sacrificial columns, trampled upon the altars, and danced amidst the oblations. Running wildly hither and thither, with the speed of wind, they tossed about the implements and vessels of sacrifice, which looked like stars precipitated from the heavens. The piles of food and beverage for the gods, which had been heaped up like mountains; the rivers of milk; the banks of curds and butter; the sands of honey and butter-milk and sugar; the mounds of condiments and spices of every flavour; the undulating knolls of flesh and other viands; the celestial liquors, pastes, and confectons, which had been prepared; these the spirits of wrath devoured or defiled or scattered abroad. Then talling upon the host of the gods, these vase and resistess Rudras beat or terrified them, mocked and insulted the nymphs and goddesses, and quickly put an end to the rite, although defended by all the gods; being the ministers of Rudra's wrath, and similar to himself. 'Some then made a hideous clamour, whilst ochers fearfully shouccd, when Yajña was decapitated. For the divine Yajña, the lord of sacrifice, then began to fly up to heaven, in the shape of a deer; and Virabhadra, of immeasurable spirit, apprehending his power, cut off his vast head, after he had mounted into the sky.⁷ Dakṣa the patriarch, his sacrifice being destroyed, overcome with terror, and utterly broken in spirit, fell then upon the ground, where his head was spurned by the feet of the cruel Virabhadra.⁸ The thirty scores of sacred divinities were all presently bound, with a band of fire, by their lion-like foe; and they all then addressed him, crying, 'Oh Rudra, have mercy upon your servants: oh lord, dismiss thine anger.' Thus spoke Brahmā and the other gods, and the patriarch Dakṣa: and raising their hands, they said, 'Declare, mighty being, who you are.' Virabhadra said, 'I am not a god, nor an Aditya; nor am I come hither for enjoyment, nor curious to behold the chiefs of the divinities: know that I am come to destroy the sacrifice of Dakṣa, and that I am called Virabhadra, the issue of the wrath of Rudra. Bhadrakālī also, who has sprung from the anger of Devī, is sent here by the god of gods to destroy this rite. Take refuge, king of kings, with him who is the lord of Umā; for better is the anger of Rudra than the blessings of other gods.'

"Having heard the words of Virabhadra, the righteous Dakṣa propitiated the mighty god, the holder of the trident, Maheśvara. The hearth of sacrifice, deserced by the Brāhmaṇas, had been consumed; Yajña had been metamorphosed to an antelope; the fires of Rudra's wrath had been kindled; the attendants, wounded by the tridents of the servants of the god, were groaning with pain; the pieces of the uprooted sacrificial posts were acattered here and there; and the fragments of the meat-offerings were carried off by flights of hungry vultures, and herds of howling jackals. Suppressing his vital airs, and taking up a posture of meditation, the many-sighted victor of his foes, Dakṣa fixed his eyes every where upon his thoughts. Then the god of gods appeared from the altar, resplendent as a thousand suns, and smiled upon him, and said. Dakṣa, your sacrifice has been destroyed through sacred knowledge: I am well pleased with you:' and then he smiled again, and said, 'What shall I do for you: declare, together with the preceptor of the gods.'

"Then Dakṣa, frightened, alarmed, and agitated, his eyes suffused with tears, raised his hands reverentially to his brow, and said, 'If lord, you are pleased; if I have found favour in your sight; if I am to be the object of your benevolence; if you will confer upon me a boon, this is the blessing I solicit, that all these provisions for the solemn sacrifice, which have been collected with much trouble and during a long time, and which have now been eaten, drunk, devoured, burnt, broken, scattered abroad, may not have been prepared in vain.' 'So let it be,' replied Hara, the subduer of Rudra. And thereupon Dakṣa knelt down upon the earth, and praised gracefully the author of righteousness, the three-eyed god Mahādeva, repeating the eight thousand names of the deity whose emblem is a bull.'

NOTES

1. The sacrifice of Dakṣa is a legend of some interest, from its historical and archaeological relations. It is obviously intended to intimate a struggle between the worshippers of Śiva and of Viṣṇu, in which at first the latter, but finally the former, acquired the ascendancy. It is also a favourite subject of Hindu sculpture, at least with the Hindus of the Śaiva division, and makes a conspicuous figure both at Elephanta and Ellora. A representation of the dispersion and mutilation of the gods and sages by Virabhadra, at the former, is published in the Archeologia, VII. 326. where it is described as the Judgement of Solomon! a figure of Virabhadra is given by Niebuhr, vol. II. tab. 10: and the entire group in the Bombay Transactions, vol. I. p. 220. It is described, p. 229; but Erskine has not verified the subject, although in cannot admit of doubt. The group described. p. 224, probably represents the introductory details given in our text. Of the Ellora sculptures, a striking one occurs in what Sir C. Malet calls the Doomar Leyna cave, where is "Veer Budher, with eight hands. In one is suspended the slain Rajah Dutz," A. R. VI, 396. And there is also a representation of 'Ehr Budr,' in one of the colonades of Kailasa; being, in fact, the same figure as that at Elephanta. Bombay Tr. III, 287. The legend of Dakṣa therefore was popular when those cavern temples were excavated. The story is told in much more detail in several other Purāṇas, and with some variations, which will be noticed: but the above has been selected as a specimen of the style of the Vāyu Purāṇa, and as being a narration which, from its inartificial, obscure, tautological, and uncircumstantial construction, is probably of an ancient date. The same legend, in the same words, is given in the Brahmā Purāṇa

2. Or this may be understood to imply, that the original story is in the Vedas; the term being, as usual in such a reference, इति श्रुतिः। Gangadvāra, the place where the Ganges descends to the plains—or Haridvār, as it is more usually termed—is usually specified as the scene of action. The Liṅga is more precise, calling it Kanakbala, which is the village still called Kankhal, near Haridvār (Megha Dutft, p. 59). It rather inaccurately, however, describes this as upon Harīsa peak;, a point of the Himālaya: हंसशृङ्गे हिमवच्छिखरे।

3. The Kūrma Purāṇa gives also this discussion between Dadhicha and Dakṣa, and their dialogue contains some curious matter. Dakṣa, for instance, states that no portion of a sacrifice is ever allotted to Śiva, and no prayers are directed to be addressed to him, or to his bride: सर्वेष्वेव हि यज्ञेषु न भागः परिकल्पितः। न मन्त्रा भार्यया सार्द्धं शंकरस्येति नेष्टते। Dadhicha apparently evades the objection, and claims a share for Rudra, consisting of the triad of gods, as one with the sun, who is undoubtedly hymned by the several ministering priests of the Vedas: स स्तूयते सहस्राशु सामगाध्वर्यहोत्रभिः। पश्यैनं विश्वकर्माणं रुद्रं मूर्तिर्योपमयं। Dakṣa replies, that the twelve Adityas receive special oblations : that they are all the suns; and that he knows of no other. The Munis, who overbear the dispute, concur in his sentiments: य एते द्वादशादित्या आदित्ययज्ञभागिनः। सर्वे सूर्या इति नहन्यो विद्यते रविः। एवमुक्ते तु मुनयः समायाता दिदृक्षवः। बाढभिल्लब्बुवन् दक्षं तस्य साहाय्यकारिणाः॥ These notions seem to have been exchanged for others in the days of the Pādma Purāṇa and Bhāgavata, as they place Dakṣa's neglect of Śiva to the latter's filthy practices, his going naked, smearing himself with ashes, carrying a skull, and behaving as if he were drunk or crazed: alluding, no doubt, to the practices of Śaiva mendicants, who seem to have abounded in the days of Sankarāchārya, and since, there is no discussion in the Bhāgavata, but Rudra is described as present at a former assembly, when his father-in-law censured him before the guests, and in consequence he departed in a rage. His follower Nandi curses the company, and Bhṛgu retorts in language descriptive of the Vāmāchāris, or left hand worshippers of Śiva. "May all those" he says, "who adopt the worship of Bhava (Śiva), all those who follow the practices of his worshippers, become heretics, and oppugners of holy doctrines; may they neglect the observances of purification; may they be of infirm intellects, wearing clotted hair, and ornamenting themselves with ashes and bones: and may they enter the Śaiva initiation, in which spirituous liquor is the libation."

4. This simple account of Sati's share in the transaction is considerably modified in other accounts. In the Kūrma, the quarrel begins with Dakṣa the patriarch's being, as he thinks, treated by his son-in-law with less respect than is his due. Upon his daughter Sati subsequently visiting him, he abuses her husband, and turns her out of his house.

She in spite destroys herself: ददाहात्मानमात्मना! Śiva, hearing of this, comes to Dakṣa, and curses him to be born as a Kṣatriya, the son of the Pracetasa, and to beget a son on his own daughter: स्वस्यं सुतायां मृडात्प्र पत्रमुत्तादयिष्यस् It is in this subsequent birth that the sacrifice occurs. The Liṅga and Matsya allude to the dispute between Dakṣa and Sati, and to the latter's putting an end to herself by Yoga: भस्मीकृत्यात्मनो देहं योगमार्गेण सापुनः The Pādma, Bhagavata, and Skanda in the Kāśī Khanḍa, relate the dispute between father and daughter in a like manner, and in more detail. The first refers the death of Sati, however, to a prior period; and that and the Bhagavata both ascribe it to Yoga: सती सद्यः प्रजज्वाल समाधिजानिना! The Kāśī Khanḍa, with an improvement indicative of a later age, makes Satī throw herself into the fire prepared for the solemnity.

5. The description of Virabhadra and his followers is given in other Purāṇas in the same strain, but with less detail.

6. Their exploits, and those of Virabhadra, are more particularly specified elsewhere, especially in the Liṅga, Kūrma, and Bhāgavata Purāṇas. Indra is knocked down and trampled on; Yama has his staff broken; Sarasvati and the Mātṛs have their noses cut off; Mitra or Bhaga has his eyes pulled out; Pushā has his teeth knocked down his throat; Candra is pummelled: Vahni's hands are cut off; Bhṛgu loses his beard; the Brāhmaṇas are pelted with stones: the Prajāpatis are beaten . and the gods and demigods are run through with swords or stuck with arrows.

7. This is also mentioned in the Liṅga and in the Hari Varnśa: and the latter thus accounts for the origin of the constellation Mīgośiras; Yajña, with the head of a deer, being elevated to the planetary region, by Brahmā.

8. As he prays to Śiva presently, it could not well be meant here that Dakṣa was decapitated, although that is the story in other places. The Liṅga and Bhāgavata both state that Virabhadra cut off Dakṣa's head, and threw it into the fire. After the fray therefore when Śiva restored the dead to life, and the mutilated to their limbs. Dakṣa's head was not forthcoming : it was therefore replaced by the head of a goat, or, according to the Kāśī Khanḍa, that of a ram. No notice is taken in our text of the conflict elsewhere described between Virabhadra and Viṣṇu. In the Liṅga, the latter is beheaded, and his head is blown by the wind into the fire. The Kūrma, though a Śaiva Purāṇa, is less irreverent towards Viṣṇu, and after describing a contest in which both parties occasionally prevail, makes Brāhma interpose, and separate the combatants. The Kāśī Khanḍa of the Skanda Purāṇa describes Viṣṇu as defeated, and at the mercy of Virabhadra, who is prohibited by a voice from heaven from destroying his antagonist : whilst in the Hari Varnśa, Viṣṇu compels Śiva to fly, after taking him by the throat and nearly strangling him. The blackness of Śiva's neck arose from this throttling, and not, as elsewhere described, from his drinking the poison produced at the churning of the ocean.

Durvāsas, a portion of Śāṅkara (Siva)¹, was wandering over the earth; when he beheld, in the hands of a nymph of air², a garland of flowers culled from the trees of heaven, the fragrant odour of which spread throughout the forest, and enraptured all who dwelt beneath its shade. The sage, who was then possessed by religious frenzy³; when he beheld that garland, demanded it of the graceful and full-eyed nymph, who, bowing to him reverentially, immediately presented it to him. He, as one frantic, placed the choplet upon his brow, and thus decorated resumed his path; when he beheld Indra, the husband of Śacī, the ruler of the three worlds, approach, seated on his infuriated elephant Airāvata, and attended by the gods.

The frenzied sage, taking from his head the garland of flowers, amidst which the bees collected ambrosia, threw it to the king of the gods, who caught it, and suspended it on the brow of Airāvata, where it shone like the river Jāhnavī, glittering on the dark summit of the mountain Kailāsa. The elephant, whose eyes were dim with inebriety, and attracted by the smell, took hold of the garland with his trunk, and case it on the earth.

That chief of sages, Durvāsās, was highly incensed at this disrespectful treatment of his gilt, and thus angrily addressed the sovereign of the immortals: "Inflated with the intoxication of power, Vāsava, vile of spirit, you are an idiot not to respect the garland I presented to you, which was the dwelling of Fortune (Sri), You have not acknowledged it as a largess'; you have not bowed yourself before me; you have not placed the wreath upon your head, with your countenance expanding with delight. Now, tool, for that you have not infinitely prized the gaint that I gave you, your sovereignty over the three worlds shall be subverted. You confoundest me, Śakra, with other Brāhmaṇas, and hence I have suffered disrespect from your arrogance: but in like manner as you have cast the garland I gave you down on the ground, so shall your dominion over the universe be whelmed in ruin. You have offended one whose wrath is dreaded by all created things, king of the gods, even me, by thine excessive pride."

Parāśara said— Descending hastily from his elephant, Mahāndra endeavoured to appease the sinless Durvāsās: but to the excuses and prostrations of the thousand-eyed, the Muni answered.

Durvāsā said— “I am not of a compassionate heart, nor is forgiveness congenial to my nature. Other Munis may relent; but know me, Śakra, to be Durvāsas. You have in vain been rendered insolent by Gautama and others; for know me, Indra, to be Durvāsas, whose nature is a stranger to remorse. You have been flattered by Vasiṣṭha and other tender-hearted saints, whose loud praises have made you so arrogant, that you have insulted me. But who is there in the universe that can behold my countenance, dark with frowns, and surrounded by my blazing hair, and not tremble ? What need of words? I will not forgive, whatever semblance of humility you may assume.”

Parāśara said— Having thus spoken, the Brahman went his way; and the king of the gods, remounting his elephant, returned to his capital Amarāvati. Thence forward, Maitreya, the three worlds and Śakra lost their vigour, and all vegetable products, plants, and herbs were withered and died; sacrifices were no longer offered; devout exercises no longer practised; men were no more addicted to charity or; any moral or religious obligation; all beings became devoid of steadiness ; all the faculties of sense were obstructed by cupidity; and men's desires were excited by frivolous objects. Where there is energy, there is prosperity; and upon prosperity energy depends. How can those abandoned by prosperity be possessed of energy; and without energy, where is excellence ? Without excellence there can be no vigour nor heroism amongst men : he who has neither courage nor strength, will be spurned by all: and he who is universally created with disgrace, must suffer abasement of his intellectual faculties.

The three regions being thus wholly divested of prosperity, and deprived of energy, the Dānavas and sons of Diti, the enemies of the gods, who were incapable of steadiness, and agitated by ambition, put torch their strength against the gods. They engaged in war with the feeble and unfortunate divinities; and Indra and the rest, being overcome in fight, fled for refuge to Brahmā, preceded by the god of flame (Hutāśana). When the great father of the universe had heard all that had come to pass, he said to the deities, Brahmā said— “Repair for protection to the god of high and low, the tamer of the demons, the causeless cause of creation, preservaction, and destruction; the progenitor of the progenitors; the immortal, unconquerable Viṣṇu; the cause of matter and spirit, of his unengendered products; the remover of the grief of all who humble themselves before him: he will give you aid.”

Brahmā said— “We glorify him who is all things, the lord supreme over all, unborn, imperishable; the protector of the mighty ones of creation; the unperceived, indivisible Nārāyaṇa, the smallest of the smallest, the largest of the largest of the elements; in whom are all things, from whom are all things; who was before existence; the god who is all beings, who is the end of ultimate objects, who is beyond final spirit, and is one with supreme soul; who is contemplated as the cause of final liberation by sages anxious to be free; in whom are not the qualities of goodness, foulness, or darkness, that belong to undeveloped nature. May that purest of all pure spirits this day be propitious to us.

May that Hari be propitious to us, whose inherent might is not an object of the progressive chain of moments or of days, that make up time. May he who is called the supreme god, who is not in need of assistance, Hari, the soul of all embodied substance, be favourable unto us.

Then the gods having ended, Bṛhaspati and the divine Ṛsis thus prayed: “We bow down to the being entitled to adoration; who is the first object of sacrifice; who was before the first of things; the creator of the creator of the world; the undefinable: oh lord of all that has been or is to be; imperishable type of sacrifice; have pity upon your worshippers; appear to them. prostrate before you.

Parāśara continued—Thus prayed to, the supreme deity, the mighty holder of the conch and discus, showed himself to them: and beholding the lord of gods, bearing a shell, a discus, and a mace, the assemblage of primeval form, and radiant with embodied light. Pitāmaha and the other deities, their eyes moistened with rapture, first paid him homage and then thus addressed him :

Gods said— “Repeated salutation to you, who are indefinable: you are Brahmā; you are the wonder of the Pināka bow (Śiva); you are Indra; you are fire, air, the god of waters, the sun, the king of death (Yama), the Vasus, the Maruts (the winds), the Sādhyas, and Viśvadevas. This assembly of divinities, that now has come before you, you are; for, the creator of the world, you are every where. You are the sacrifice, the prayer of oblation, the mystic syllable Om, the sovereign of all creatures: you are all that is to be known, or to be unknown: oh universal soul, the whole world consists of you. We, discomfited by the Daityas, have fled to you, oh Viṣṇu, for refuge.

Hari, the creator of the universe, being thus prayed to by the prostrate divinities, smiled, and thus spoke:

Viṣṇu said— “With renovated energy, oh gods, I will restore your strength. Do you act as I enjoin. Let all the gods, associated with the Asuras, cast all sorts of medicinal herbs into the sea of milk; and then taking the mountain Mandara for the churning-Kick, the serpent Vasuki for the rope, churn the ocean together for ambrosia; depending upon my aid.

To secure the assistance of Daityas, you must be at peace with them, and engage to give them an equal portion of the fruit of your associated toil; promising them, that by drinking the Amṛta that shall be produced from the agitated ocean, they shall become mighty an immortal. I will take care that the enemies of the gods shall not partake of the pericious draught; that they shall share in the labour alone."

Being thus inscrucuccd by the god of gods, the divinities entered into alliance with the demons, and they jointly undertook the acquirement of the beverage of immortality. They collected various kinds of medicinal herbs, and cast them into the sea of milk, the waters of which were radiant as the thin and shining clouds of autumn.

They then took the mountain Mandara for the staff; the serpent Vāsuki for the cord; and commenced to churn the ocean for the Amṛta. The assembled gods were stationed by Kṛṣṇa at the tail of the serpent; the Daityas and Dānavas at its head and neck. Scorched by the flames emitted from his inflated hood, the demons were shorn of their glory; whilst the clouds driven towards his tail by the breath of his mouth, refreshed the gods with revivifying showers. In the midst of the milky sea, Hari himself, in the form of a tortoise, served as a pivot for the mountain, as it was whirled around.

The holder of the mace and discus was present in other forms amongst the gods and demons, and assisted to drag the monarch of the serpent race: and in another vast body he sat upon the summit of the mountain. With one portion or his energy, unseen by gods or demons, he sustained the serpent king; and with another, infused vigour into the gods.

From the ocean, thus churned by the gods and Dānavas, first uprose the cow Surabhi, the fountain of milk and curds, worshipped by the divinities, and beheld by them and their associates with minds disturbed, and eyes glistening with delight. Then, as the holy Siddhas in the sky wondered what this could be, appeared the goddess Vāruṇī (the deity of wine), her eyes rolling with intoxication.

Next from the whirlpool of the deep, sprang the celestial Parijāta tree, the delight of the nymphs of heaven, perfuming the world with its blossoms. The troop of Apsarāsas, the nymphs of heaven, were then produced, of surprising loveliness, endowed with beauty and with taste.

The cool-rayed moon next rose, and was seized by Mahādeva: and then poison was engendered from the sea, of which the snake gods (Nagas) took possession. Dhanvantari, robed in white, and bearing in his hand the cup of Amṛta, next came forth: beholding which, the sons of Diti and of Danu, as well as the Munis, were filled with satisfaction and delight.

Then, seated on a full-blown lotus, and holding a water-lily in her hand, the goddess Śrī, radiant with beauty, rose from the waves. The great sages, enraptured, hymned her with the song dedicated to her praise'. Viśvavasu and other heavenly quiristers sang, and Ghṛtācī and other celestial nymphs danced before her, Gaṅgā and other holy streams attended for her ablutions; and the elephants of the skies, taking up their pure waters in vases of gold, poured them over the goddess, the queen of the universal world.

The sea of milk in person presented her with in wreath of never-fading flowers; and the artist of the gods (Viśvakarmā) decorated her person with heavenly ornaments. Thus bathed, attired, and adorned, the goddess, in the view of the celestials, cast herself upon the breast of Hari; and there reclining, turned her eyes upon the deities, who were inspired with rapture by her gaze. Not so the Daityas, who, with Vipracitti at their head, were filled with indignation, as Viṣṇu turned away from them, and they were abandoned by the goddess of prosperity (Lakṣmī).

The powerful and indignant Daityas then forcibly seized the Amṛta-cup, that was in the hand of Dhanvantari; but Viṣṇu, assuming a female form, fascinated and deluded them; and recovering the Amṛta from them, delivered it to the gods. Śakra and the other deities quaffed the ambrosia. The incensed demons, grasping their weapons, fell upon them; but the gods, into whom the ambrosial draught had infused new vigour, defeated and put their host to flight, and they fled through the regions of space, and plunged into the subterraneous realms of Patal. The gods thereat greatly rejoiced, did homage to the holder of the discus and mace, and resumed their reign in heaven.

The sun shone with renovated splendour, and again discharged his appointed task; and the celestial luminaries again circled, oh best of Munis, in their respective orbits. Fire once more blazed aloft, beautiful in splendour; and the minds of all beings were animated by devotion.

The three worlds again were rendered happy by prosperity; and Indra, the chief of the gods, was restored to power. Seated upon his throne, and once more in heaven, exercising sovereignty over the gods, Śakra thus eulogized the goddess who bears a lotus in her hand:

You, beautiful goddess, are knowledge of devotion, great knowledge, mystic knowledge, and spiritual knowledge; which confers eternal liberation. You are the science of reasoning, the three Vedas, the arts and sciences;¹⁰ you are moral and political science. The world is peopled by you with pleasing or displeasing forms. Who else than you, oh goddess, is seated on that person of the god of gods, the wielder of the mace, which is made up of sacrifice, and contemplated by holy ascetics? Abandoned, by you, the three worlds were on the brink of ruin; but they have been reanimated by you. From your propitious gaze, oh mighty goddess, men obtain wives, children, dwellings, friends, harvests, wealth. Health and strength, power, victory, happiness, are easy of attainment to those upon whom you smilest.

You are the mother of all beings, as the god of gods. Hari, is their, father; and this world, whether animate or inanimate, is pervaded by you and Viṣṇu. Oh you who purify all things, forsake not our treasures, our granaries, our dwellings, our dependants, our persons, our wives: abandon not our children, our friends, our lineage, our jewels, oh you who abide on the bosom of the god of gods. They whom you desert are forsaken-by truth, by purity, and goodness, by every amiable and excellent quality; whilst the base and worthless upon whom you look favourably become immediately endowed with all excellent qualifications, with families, and with power. He on whom your countenance is turned is honourable, amiable, prosperous, wise, and of exalted birth; a hero of irresistible prowess: but all his merits and his advantages are converted into worthlessness from whom, beloved of Viṣṇu, mother of the world, you averted your face. The tongues of Brahmā are unequal to celebrate your excellence. Be propitious to me, oh goddess, lotus-eyed, and never forsake me more."

Parāśara proceeded— Thus, Maitreya, in former times the goddess Śrī conferred these boons upon the king of the gods, being pleased by his adorations; but her first birth was as the daughter of Bhṛgu by Khyāti: it was at a subsequent period that she was produced from the sea, at the churning of the ocean by the demons and the gods, to obtain ambrosia.” For in like manner as the lord of the world, the god of gods, Janārdana, descends amongst mankind (in various shapes), so does his coadjutrix Śrī. Thus when Hari was born as a dwarf, the son of Aditi, Lakṣmī appeared from a lotus (as Padmā or Kamalā); when he was born as Rāma, of the race of Bhṛgu (or Parasurama), she was Dharanī; when he was Rāghava (Rāmacandra), she was Sītā; and when he was Kṛṣṇa, she became Rukmini.

In the other descents of Viṣṇu, she is his associate. If he takes a celestial form, she appears as divine; if a mortal, she becomes a mortal too, transforming her own person agreeably to whatever character it pleases Viṣṇu to put on. Whosoever hears this account of the birth of Lakṣmī, whosoever reads it, shall never lose the goddess Fortune from his dwelling for three generations; and misfortune, the fountain of strife, shall never enter into those houses in which the hymns to Śrī are repeated.

Thus, Brahman, have I narrated to you, in answer to your question, how Lakṣmī, formerly the daughter of Bhṛgu, sprang from the sea of milk; find misfortune shall never visit those amongst mankind who daily recite the praises of Lakṣmī uttered by Indra, which are the origin and cause of all prosperity.

NOTES

1. Durvāsas was the son of Atri by Anasūyā, and was an incarnation of a portion of Śiva.

2. A Vidyādhari. These beings, male and female, are spirits of an inferior order, tenanting the middle regions of the atmosphere. According to the Vāyu, the garland was given to the nymph by Devī.

3. He observed the Vrata, or vow of intanily; उन्मत्तत्रत्भृत्, equivalent to the ecstasies of some religious fanatics. ‘In this state,’ says the commentator, ‘even Saints are devils :’ योगिनो हि ब्रतोन्मत्तः पिशाचा इव वर्तते।

4. They became Nih-satwa; and Satwa is explained throughout by Dhairyya, steadiness, fortitude.

5. The first effect of primary cause is nature, or Prakṛti : the effect of the effect, or of Prakṛti, is Mahat : effect in the third degree is Ahāmkāra: in the fourth, or the effect of the effect (Ahāmkāra) of the effect (Mahat) of the effect (Prakṛti), is elementary substance, or Bhūta. Viṣṇu is each and all. So in the succeeding ascending scale, Brahmā is the cause of mortal life : the cause of Brahmā is the egg, or aggregate elementary matter : its cause is, therefore, elementary matter; the cause of which is subtle or rudimental matter, which originates from Ahāmkāra, and so on. Viṣṇu is also each and all of these.

6. With your Śakti, or the goddess Śrī or Lakṣmī.

7. Or with the Sūkta, or hymn of the Vedas, commencing, “Hiranyu varnam,” etc.

8. The churning of the ocean does not occur in several of the Purānas, and is but cursorily alluded to in the Śiva, Liṅga, and Kürma Purānas. The Vāyu and Pādma have much the same narrative as that of our text; and so have the Agni and Bhāgavata, except that they refer only briefly to the anger of Durvāsas, without narrating the circumstances; indicating their being posterior, therefore, to the original tale. The part, however, assigned to Durvāsas appears to be an embellishment added to the original, for no mention of him occurs in the Matsya Purāṇa nor even in the Hari Varmṣa, neither does it occur in what may be considered the oldest extant versions of the story, those of the Rāmāyaṇa and Mahābhārata : both these ascribe the occurrence to the desire of the gods and Daityas to become immortal. The Matsya assigns a similar motive to the gods, instigated by observing that the Daityas slain by them in battle were restored to life by Śukra with the Sanjivinī, or herb of immortality, which he had discovered. The account in the Hari Varmṣa is brief and obscure, and is explained by the commentator as an allegory, in which the churning of the ocean typifies ascetic penance, and the ambrosia is final liberation : but this is mere mystification. The legend of the Rāmāyaṇa is translated, vol. I. p. 410. of the Serampore edition : and that of the Mahābhārata by Wilkins, in the notes to his translation of the Bhāgavata Gita. See also the original text. Cat ed. p. 40. It has been presented 'to general readers in a more attractive form by my friend H. M. Paiker, in his Draught of Immortality, printed with other poems, Lond. 1827. The Matsya Purāṇa has many of the stanzas of the Mahābhārata interspersed with others. There is some variety in the order and number of articles produced from the ocean. As I have observed elsewhere (Hindu Theatre, I. 59. Load. ed.), the popular enumeration is fourteen, but the Rāmāyaṇa specifies but nine; the Mahābhārata. nine; the Bhāgavata. ten; the Pādma. nine; the Vāyu. twelve; the Matsya. perhaps, gives the whole number. Those in which most agree, are, I. the Hālāhala or Kālakūṭa poison, swallowed by Śiva : 2. Vārunī or Surā, the goddess of wine, who being taken by the gods, and rejected by the Daityas, the former were termed Suras, and the latter Asuras: 3. the horse Ucchaiśravas, taken by Indra : 4. Kaustubha, the jewel worn by Viṣṇu : 5. the moon : 6. Dhanvantari, with the Amṛta in his Kamandalu, or vase, and these two articles are in the Vāyu considered as distinct products : 7. the goddess Padmā or Śrī : 8. the Apsarasas, or nymphs of heaven : 9. Surabhi, or the cow of plenty : 10. the Parijāta tree, or tree of heaven : 11. Airāvata, the elephant taken by Indra. The Matsya adds, 12. the umbrella taken by Varuṇa : 13. the earrings taken by Indra, and given to Aditi : and apparently another horse, the white horse of the sun : or the number may be completed by counting the Amṛta separately from Dhanvantari. The number is made up in the popular lists by adding the bow and the conch of Viṣṇu; but there does not seem to be any good authority for this, and the addition is a sectarian one : so is that of the Tulasi tree, plant sacred to Kṛṣṇa, which is one of the twelve specified by the Vāyu Purāṇa. The Uttara Khaṇḍa of the Pādma Purāṇa has a peculiar enumeration, or. Poison; Jyeṣṭha or Alakṣmī, the goddess of misfortune, the elder born to fortune : the goddess of wine; Nidrā, or sloth; the Apsarasas; the elephant of Indra; Lakṣmī; the moon; and the Tulasi plant. The reference to Mohinī, the female form assumed by Viṣṇu, is very brief in our text . and no notice is taken of the story told in the Mahābhārata and some of the Purāṇas, of the Daitya Rāhu's insinuating himself amongst the gods, and obtaining a portion of the Amṛta : being beheaded for this by Viṣṇu, the head became immortal, in consequence of the Amṛta having reached the throat, and was transferred as a constellation to the skies : and as the sun and moon detected his presence amongst the gods, Rāhu pursues them with implacable hatred, and his efforts to seize them are the causes of eclipses; Rāhu typifying the ascending and descending nodes. This seems to be the simplest and oldest form of the legend. The equal immortality of the body, under the name Ketu, and his being the cause of meteorical phenomena, seems to have been an after-thought. In the Pādma and Bhāgavata, Rāhu and Ketu are the sons of Simhikā, the wife of the Dānava Vipracitti.

9. The four Vidyās, or branches of knowledge, are said to be, Yajñavidyā, knowledge or performance of religious rites; Mahāvidyā, great knowledge, the worship of the female principle, or Tāntrika worship; Guhyavidyā, knowledge of mantras, mystical prayers, and incantation . and Ātmā vidyā, knowledge of soul, true wisdom

10. Or Vārttā, explained to mean the Śilpa sāstra, mechanics, sculpture, and architecture : Āyurveda, medicine, etc.

11. The cause of this, however, is left unexplained. The Pādma P. inserts a legend to account for the temporary separation of Lakṣmī from Viṣṇu, which appears to be peculiar to that work Bhṛgu was lord of Lakṣmīpur, a city on the Narmadā, given him by Brahmā. His daughter Lakṣmī instigated her husband to request its being conceded to her, which offending Bhṛgu, he cursed Viṣṇu to be born upon earth ten times, to be separated from his wife, and to have no children. The legend is an insipid modern embellishment.

Parāśara continued— Lakṣmī, the bride of Viṣṇu, was the daughter of Bhṛgu by Khyāti. They had also two sons, Dhātri and Vidhātti, who married the two daughters of the illustrious Meru, Ayati and Niryati: and had by them each a son, named Prāṇa and Mr̥kaṇḍa. The son of the latter was Mārkaṇḍeya, from whom Vedaśiras was born.¹ The son of Prāṇa was named Dyutimat, and his son was Rājavat; after whom, the race of Bhṛgu became infinitely multiplied.

Kratu, Sannati, brought forth the sixty thousand Bālakhilyas, pigmy sages, no bigger than a joint of the thumb, chaste, pious, resplendent as the rays of the sun⁷. Vasiṣṭha had seven sons by his wife Urjjā, Rajas, Gatra, Īrdhvabāhu. Savana, Anagha, Sutapas, and Śukra, the seven pure sages⁸. The Agni named Abhimānī, who is the eldest born of Brahmā, had, by Svāhā, three sons or surpassing brilliancy, Pāvaka, Pavamāna, and Suci, who drinks up water: they had forty-five sons, who, with the original son of Brahmā and his three descendants, constitute the forty-nine fires⁹.

The progenitors (Pitṛs), who as I have mentioned, were created by Brahmā, were the Agniśvāttas and Barhiṣads; the former being devoid of, and the latter possessed of, fires¹⁰. By them, Svadhā had two daughters, Menā and Dhāraṇī, who were both acquainted with theological truth, and both addicted to religious meditation; both accomplished in perfect wisdom, and adorned with all estimable qualities¹¹. Thus has been explained the progeny of the daughters of Dakṣa¹². He who with faith recapitulates the account, shall never want offspring.

NOTES

1. The commentator interprets the text ततो वेदशिरा जज्ञे to refer to Prāṇa: प्राणस्य वेदशिरा जज्ञे. 'Vedaśiras was born the son of Prana.' So the Bhāgavata has मार्कण्डेस्य प्राणादेशिरा मुनिः। The Liṅga, the Vāyu, and Mārkāndeya, however, confirm our reading of the text, making Vedaśiras the son of Mārkāndeya. Prāṇa, or, as read in the two former, Pāṇḍu, was married to Puṇḍarīkā, and had by her Dyutimat, whose sons were Srijāvana and Asruta or Asrutavrāṇa. Mṛkāṇḍa (also read Mṛkāṇḍu) married Maoaswini, and had Mārkāṇḍeya, whose son, by Murddhanyā, was Vedaśiras: he married Pivari, and had many children, who constituted the family, or Brahmanical tribe, of Bhārgavas, sons of Bhṛgu. The most celebrated of these was Uśanas, the preceptor of the Daityas, who, according to the Bhāgavata, was the son of Vedaśiras; but the Vāyu makes him the son of Bhṛgu by Paulomi, and born at a different period.

2. Alluding especially to Kaśyapa, the son of Marīchi, of whose posterity a full detail is subsequently given. The Bhāgavata adds a daughter, Devakulyā: and the Vāyu and Liṅga, four daughters, Tuṣṭi, Puṣṭi, Twisā, and Apaciti. The latter inserts the grandsons of Paurnamāsa, Virajas, married to Gaurī, has Sudhāman, a Lokapāla, or ruler of the east quarter; and Parvasī (quasi Sarvaga) has, by Parvasī, Yajñavāma and Kaśyata, who were both founders of Gotras, or families. The names of all these occur in different forms in different MSS.

3. The Bhāgavata adds, that in the Swārocīṣa Manvantara the sages Uttathya and Vṛhaspati were also sons of Angiras; and the Vāyu, etc, specify Agni and Kṛttimat as the sons of the patriarch in the first Manvantara. Agni, married to Sadwatī, has Parjanya, married to Marīchi; and their son is Hirauyaroman, a Lokapāla. Kṛttimat has, by Dhenukā, two sons, Carisū and Dhṛtimat.

4. The Bhāgavata gives an account of Atri's penance, by which the three gods, Brahmā, Viṣṇu, and Śiva, were propitiated, and became, in portions of themselves, severally his sons, Soma, Datta, and Durvāsas. The Vāyu has a totally different series, or five sons, Satyanetra, Havya, Āpomurtti, Sani, and Soma; and one daughter, Sruti, who became the wife of Kardama.

5. The text would seem to imply that he was called Agastya in a former Manvantara, but the commentator explains it as above. The Bhāgavata calls the wife of Pulastyā, Havirbhū, whose sons were the Muni Agastya, called in a former birth Dahrāgni or Jatharāgni, and Viaravaś. The latter bad by Ilavilā, the deity of wealth, Kuvera; and by Kesinī, the Rākṣusas Rāvana, Kumbhakarṇa, and Vibhīṣaṇa. The Vāyu specifies three sons of Pulastyā, Dattoli, Vedabāhu, and Vinita; and one daughter, Sadwatī, married (see note 3) to Agni.

6. The Bhāgavata reads Karmaśreṣṭha. Varīyas. and Sahiṣṇu. The Vāyu and Liṅga have Kardama and Ambariṣa in place of the two first, and add Vanakapīvat and a daughter. Pīvari. married to Vedaśiras (see note I). Kardama married Śruti (note 4), and had by her Sankhapāda, one of the Lokapālas, and a daughter. Kāmyā, married to Priyavrata (note 6. Ch. VII.). Vana-kapīvat, also read Dhana-k. and Ghana-k., had a son, Sahiṣṇu. married to Yasodharā. and they were the parents of Kāmadeva.

7. The different authorities agree in this place. The Vāyu adds two daughters, Punyā and Sumātī, married to Yajñavāma (see note 2).

8. The Bhāgavata has an entirely different set of names, or Citraketu. Suociṣ, Virajas, Mitra. Ulwana, Vasubhridyāna. and Dyumat. It also specifics Saktri and others, as the issue of a different marriage. The Vāyu and Liṅga have the same sons as in our text, reading Putra and Hasta in place of Gātra : they add a daughter. Pundarikā, married to Pāṇdu (see note I). The eldest son, according to the Vāyu. espoused a daughter of Mārkandeya, and had by her the Lokapāla of the west. Kelumat. The seven sons of Vasiṣṭha are termed in the text the seven Ṛṣis. appearing in that character in the third Manvantara.

9. The eldest son of Brahmā, according to the commentator, upon the authority of the Vedas: ब्रह्मस्तनयोग्रजः मुखादग्निरजायते श्रुतेः। The Vāyu Purāṇa enters into a very long detail of the names and places of the whole forty-nine fires. According to that. also. Pāvaka is electric or Vaidyuta fire; Pavamāna is that produced by friction, or Nirmathya; and Suci is solar. Saura, fire. Pavamāna was the parent of Kavya-vāhana, the fire of the Pitṛs; Suci of Havayavāhana. the fire of the gods; and Pavamāna of Sahasrākṣu. the fire of the Asuras. The Bhāgavata explains these different fires to be so many appellations of fire employed in the invocations with which different oblations to fire are offered in the ritual of the Vedas : वैतानिके कर्मणि यत्रामध्ब्रह्मवादिभिः। आग्नेय इष्यो यज्ञे निरूप्यन्ते उनयस्तु ते। explained by the commentator, वैदिके कर्मणि यज्ञे येषां नामभिरमिदेवताका इष्यो निरूप्यन्ते क्रियन्ते तत्र त अग्नियो न लौकिकाः।

10. According to the commentator, this distinction is derived from the Vedas. The first class, or Agniśvāttas. consists of those house-holders who, when alive, did not maintain their domestic fires, nor offer burnt-sacrifices: the second, of those who kept up the household flame, and presented oblations with fire. Manu calls these Agnidagdhas and the reverse, which Jones renders, 'consumable by fire,' etc. Kuliūka Bhaṭṭa gives no explanation of them. The Bhāgavata adds other classes of Pitṛs; or, the Ajyapas, 'drinkers of ghee;' and 'Somapās. 'drinkers of the acid juice.' The commentator, explaining the meaning of the terms Sāgnayas and Anāgnayas, has, येषामानौकरणमस्ति ते साग्नयः तद्रहिता स्वनाग्नयः। which might be understood to signify, that the Pitṛs who are 'without fire, are those to whom oblations are not offered; and those with fire, are they to whom oblations are presented.

11. The Vāyu carries this genealogy forward. Dharanī was married to Meru, and had by him Mandara and three daughters. Niyati, Āyati, and Velā: the two first were married to Dhriti and Vidhātrī (p. 69). Velā was the wife of Samudra, by whom she had Samudrī, married to Prācīnavarhiṣ, and the mother of the ten Pracetaras, the fathers of Dakṣa, as subsequently narrated. Menā was married to Himāvat, and was the mother of Maināka, and of Gangā. and of Pārvati or Umā.

12. No notice is here taken of Sati. married to Bhava, as is intimated in Ch. VIII, when describing the Rudras. Of these genealogies the fullest and apparently the oldest account is given in the Vāyu Purāṇa : as far as that of our text extends, the two nearly agree, allowing for differences of appellation originating in inaccurate transcription, the names frequently varying in different copies of the same work, leaving it doubtful which reading should be preferred. The Bhāgavata. as observed above (Ch. VII, n. 12), has created some further perplexity by substituting. as the wives of the patriarchs, the daughters of Kardama for those of Dakṣa. Of the general statement it may be observed, that although in some respects allegorical, as in the names of the wives of the Ṛṣis (Ch. VII.); and in others astronomical, as in the denominations of the daughters of Aṅgas (Ch. X.). yet it seems probable that it is not altogether fabulous, but that the persons in some instances had a real existence, the genealogies originating in imperfectly preserved traditions of the families of the first teachers of the Hindu religion, and of the descent of individuals who took an active share in its propagation.

Uttama, by his favourite wife Suruci. By his queen, named Suniti. to whom he was less attached, he also had a son, called Dhruva¹. Observing his brother Uttama on the lap of his father, as he was seated upon his throne, Dhruva was desirous of ascending to the same place; but as Suruci was present, the Raja did not gratify the desire of his son, respectfully wishing to be taken on his father's knee.

Paraiara continued— The boy, having heard the speech of his step-mother, quitted his father, and repaired in a passion to the apartment of his own mother'; who, beholding him vexed, took him upon her lap, and, gently smiling, asked him what was the cause of his anger, who had displeased him, and if any one, forgetting the respect due to his father, had behaved ill to him.

Dhruva, in reply, repeated to her all that the arrogant Suruci had said to him in the presence of the king. Deeply distressed by the narrative of the boy, the humble Suniti, her eyes dimmed with tears, sighed, and said,

Yet be not afflicted, my child, for who shall effact what you have formerly done, or shall assign to you what you have left undone? The regal throne, the umbrella of royalty, horses and elephants, are his whose virtues have deserved them: remember this. my son, and be consoled. That the king favours Suruci is the reward of her merits in a former existence. The name of wife alone belongs to such as I. who have not equal merit. Her son is the progeny of accumulated piety, and is born as Uttama: mine has been born as Dhruva, of inferior moral worth. Therefore, my son. it is not proper for you to grieve; a wise man will be contented with that degree which appertains to him: but if you continue to feel hurt at the words of Suruci. endeavour to augment due religious merit which bestows all good; be amiable, be pious, be friendly. be assiduous in benevolence to all living creatures; for prosperity descends upon modest worth as water Rows towards low ground.”

Dhruva replied to them: "You have told me, humbly bending before you, what deity is to be propitiated: now inform me what prayer is to be meditated by me, that will offer him gratification. May the great Rṣis, looking upon me with favour, instruct me how I am to propitiate the god." The Rṣis answered: "Prince, you deserve to hear how the adoration of Viśnu has been performed by those who have been devoted to his service. The mind must first be made to forsake all external immpressions, and a man must then fix it steadily on that being in whom the world is. By him whose thoughts are thus concentrated on one only object, and wholly filled by it, whose spirit is firmly under concrol; the prayer that we shall repeat to you is to be inaudibly recited: 'Om! glory to Vāsudeva, whose essence is divine wisdom; whose form is inscrutable, or is manifest as Brahmā, Viśnu, and Śiva. This prayer, which was formerly uttered by your grandsire, the Manu Svayambhuva, and propitiated by which, Viśnu conferred upon him the prosperity be desired, and which was unequalled in the three worlds, is to be recited by you. Do you constantly repeat this prayer, for the gratification of Govinda."

NOTES

1. The Matsya, Brahmā, and Vāyu Purāṇas speak of but one wife of Uttānapāda, and call her Sunnītā : they say also that she had four sons. Apaspati (or Vasu). Ayushmanta. Kirttimat, and Dhruva. The Bhātgaveta, Pādma, and Nāradīya have the same account as that of the text.

2. The instructions of the Ṛsis amount to the performance of the Yoga. External impressions are first to be obviated by particular positions, modes of breathing, etc. : the mind must then be fixed on the object of meditation; this is Dhārana: next comes the meditation, or Dhyāna; and then the Japa, or inaudible repetition of a Mantra, or short prayer : as in the text. The subject of the Yoga is more fully detailed in a subsequent book.

brother of Rāma) having stain the Rakṣas Lavaṇa, the son of Madhu, founded a city on the spot, which was named Mathurā. At this holy shrine, the purifier from all sin, which enjoyed the presence of the sanctifying god of gods, Dhruva performed penance, as enjoined by Marīci and the sages: he contemplated Viṣṇu, the sovereign of all the gods, seated in himself. Whilst his mind was wholly absorbed in meditation, the mighty Hari, identical with all beings and with all natures, (took possession of his heart).

The prince, having received these instructions, respectfully saluted the sages, and departed from the forest, fully confiding in the accomplishment of his purposes. He repaired to the holy place, on the banks of the Yamunā, called Madhu or Madhuvana, the grove of Madhu, after the demon of that name, who formerly abided there, Śatruघnā (the younger Viṣṇu being thus present in his mind, the earth, the supporter of elemental life, could not sustain the weight of the ascetic. As he stood upon his left foot, one hemisphere bent beneath him; and when he stood upon his right, the other half of the earth sank down. When he touched the earth with his toes, it shook with all its mountains, and the rivers and the seas were troubled, and the gods partook of the universal agitation.

The celestials called Yāmās, being excessively alarmed, then took counsel with Indra how they should interrupt the devout exercises of Dhruva; and the divine beings termed Kuśmāṇḍas, in company with their king, commenced anxious efforts to distract his meditations. One, assuming the semblance of his mother Sunīti, stood weeping before him, and calling in tender accents, "My son, my son, desist from destroying they strength by this fearful penance. I have gained you, my son, after much anxiouxs hope: you can not have the cruelty to quit me, helpless, alone, and unprotected, on account of the unkindness of my rival. What have you, a child but five years old, to do with rigorous penance? Desist from such fearful practices, that yield no beneficial fruit. First comes the season of youthful pastime; and when that is over, it is the time for study: then succeeds the period of worldly enjoyment: and lastly, that of austere devotion. This is your season of pastime, my child. Have you engaged in these practices to put an end to your existence? Your chief duty is love for me: duties are according to time of life. Lose not thyself in bewildering error: desist from such unrighteous actions. If not, if you will not desist from these austerities, I will terminate my life before you."

But Dhruva, being wholly intent on seeing Viṣṇu, beheld not his mother weeping in his presence, and calling upon him; and the illusion, crying out, "Fly, fly, my child, the hideous spirits of ill are crowding into this dreadful forest with uplifted weapons," quickly disappeared. Then advanced frightful Rakṣasas, wielding terrible arms, and with countenances emitting fiery flame; and nocturnal fiends thronged around the prince, uttering fearful noises, and whirling and tossing their threatening weapons. Hundreds of jackals, from whose mouths gushed flame! as they devoured their prey, were bowling alcud, to appal the boy, wholly engrossed by meditation.

But all these uncouth spectres, appalling cries, and threatening weapons, made no impression upon his 'senses, whose mind was completely intent on Govinda. The son of the monarch of the earth, engrossed by one only idea, beheld uninterruptedly Viṣṇu seated in his soul, and saw no other object.

All their delusive stratagems being thus foiled, the gods were more perplexed than ever. Alarmed at their discomfiture, and afflicted by the devotions of the boy, they assembled and repaired for succour to Hari the origin of the world, who is, without beginning or end; and thus addressed him:

As the moon increases in his orb day by day, so this youth advances incessantly towards superhuman power by his devotions. Terrified by the ascetic practices of the son of Uttānapāda, we have come to you for succour. Do you allay the fervour of his meditations. We know not to what station he aspires: to the throne of Indra, the regency of the solar or lunar sphere, or to the sovereignty of riches or of the deep. Have compassion on us, lord; remove this affliction from our breasts; diverse the son of Uttānapāda from persevering in his penance.”

Return therefore, deities, to your mansions as ye list, and be no more alarmed: I will put an end to the penance of the boy, whose mind is immersed in deep contemplation.”

Whilst lowly bowing, with his hands uplifted to his forehead, Govinda, the lord of the world, touched the son of Uttānapāda with the tip of his conch-shell, and immediately the royal youth, with a countenance sparkling with delight, praised respectfully the imperishable protector of living beings.

Dhruva exclaimed—“I venerate him, whose forms are earth, water, fire, air, ether, mind, intellect, the first element (Ahankāra), primeval nature, and the pure, subtle, all-pervading soul, that surpasses nature. Salutation to that spirit that is void of qualities; that is supreme over all the elements and all the objects of sense, over intellect, over nature and spirit. I have taken refuge with that pure form of thine, oh supreme, which is one with Brahmā, which is spirit, which transcends all the world. Salutation to that form which, pervading and supporting all, is designated Brahman, unchangeable, and contemplated by religious sages.

The lower, and upper, and middle parts of the earth are not independent of you: from you is all this universe, all that has been, and that shall be: and all this world is in you, assuming ⁴ universal form. From thine eyes come the sun; from thine ears, the wind; and from your mind, the moon: the vital airs from your central vein; and fire from your mouth: the sky from your navel; and heaven from your head: the regions from thine ears; the earth from your feet. As the wide-spreading Nyagrodha (Indian fig) tree is compressed in a small seed⁶, so, at the time of dissolution, the whole universe is comprehended in you as its germ. As the Nyagrodha germinates from the seed and becomes first a shoot, and then rises into loftiness, so the created world proceeds from you, and expands into magnitude. As the bark and leaves of the Plantain tree are to be seen in its stem, so you are the seem of the universe, and all things are visible in you. The faculties of the intellect, that are the cause of pleasure and of pain, abide in you as one with all existence; but the sources of pleasure and of pain, singly or blended, do not exist in you who are exempt from all qualities⁷. Salutation to you, the subtle rudiment, which, being single, becomes manifold. Salutation to you, soul of existent things, identical with the great elements. You, imperishable, are beheld in spiritual knowledge as perceptible objects, as nature, as spirit, as the world, as Brahmā, as Manu, by internal contemplation. But you are in all, the element of all; you are all, assuming every form; all is from you, and you are from thyself. I salute you, universal soul: glory be to you. You are one with all things: oh lord of all, you are present in all things.

To this, Dhruva answered : "Lord god of all creatures, who abidest in the hearts of all, how should the wish that I cherish be unknown to you ? I well confess unto you the hope that my presumptuous heart has entertained; a hope that it would be difficult to gratify, but that nothing is difficult when you, creator of the world, are pleased. Through your favour, Indra reigns over the three worlds. इति श्रीविष्णुपुराणे प्रथमांशे द्वादशोऽध्यायः:

Thus the sage Dhruva, having received a boon from Janārddana, the lord of gods, and lord of the world, resides in an exalted station. Beholding his glory, Uśanas, the preceptor of the gods and demons, repeated these verses: "Wonderful is the efficacy of this penance, marvellous is its reward, that the seven R̄ṣis should" be preceded by Dhruva. This too is the pious Sunīti, his parent, who is called Sonītā¹⁰." Who can celebrate her greatness, who, having given birth to Dhruva, has become the asylum of the three worlds, enjoying to all future time an elevated station, a station eminent above all? He who shall worthily describe the ascent into the sky of Dhruva, for ever shall be freed from all sin, and enjoy the heaven of Indra. Whatever be his dignity, whether upon earth or in heaven he shall never fall from it, but shall long enjoy life, possessed of every blessing¹¹.

NOTES

1. A marginal note by a Bengali Pandit asserts it to be a fact, then when a jackal carries a piece of meat in his mouth, it shows in the dark as if it was on fire.

2. The commentator understands this passage to imply merely that the supreme pervades both substance and space, being infinitely vast, and without limit. 'Having a thousand heads' etc. denotes only infinite extension : and the 'ten inches beyond the contact of the universe' expresses merely non-restriction by its boundaries. दशाहूलमित्याधिक्यमात्रं अतोऽयमर्थः सावरणं ब्रह्माण्डं स्पृष्टाभिव्याप्य तदतिक्रम्य निरविर्भगवान् स्थित इति॥

3. Explained severally the Brahmāṇḍa, or material universe; Brahmā, the creator : Manu, the ruler of the period; and supreme or presiding spirit

4. So the inscription upon the temple of Sais : Εγώ αμι παν το γεγονξ, και και ον, και εօσμενον. So the Orphic verse, thed by Eusebius, beginning Εν δε δεμαξ βαοιλειον ιν ω ταδε παντα κνλξιται, κ. τ. λ. One regal body in which all things are comprehended (viz, Virāt). fire. and water, and earth, and air, and night, and day. and Intelligence (viz. Mahat) the first generator, and divine love; for all these does Jupiter include in his expansive form.' It proceeds also. precisely in the Paurānic strain, to describe the members of this universal form : the heaven in his head, the stars his hair, the sun and moon his eyes, etc.

5. A piece of natural history quite correct as applied to the front teeth which in the genus ox occur in the lower jaw only.

6. This is also conformable to the doctrine, that the rudiments of plants exist in their cotyledons.

7. In life. or living beings, perception depends not. according to Hindu metaphysics, upon the external senses, but the impressions made upon them are communicated to the mental organ or sense, and by the mind to the understanding—Samvid (समिद) in the text—by which they are distinguished as pleasurable, painful, or mixed. But pleasure depends upon the quality of goodness, pain on that of darkness, and their mixture on that of foulness, inherent in the understanding. properties. belonging to Jīveswara. or god. as one with life, or to embodied spirit. but not as Paramēśwara. or supreme spirit.

8. The station or sphere is that of the north pole. or of the polar star. In the former case, the star is considered to be Sunīti, the mother of Dhruva. The legend, although as it is related in our text it differs in its circumstances from the story told by Ovid of Callisto and her son Arcas, whom Jove suggcsts some suspicion of an original identity. In ncither of the authorities' have we, perhaps, the primitive fable. It is evident from the quotation that presently follows in the text, of a stanza by Uśanas, that the Purāna has not the oldest version of the legend; and Ovid's representation of it is after a fashion of his own: all that has been retained of the original is the conformity of the chrcters and of the main Incident, the translation of a mother and her son to the heavens as constellations, in which the pole-star is the most conspicuous luminary.

Imposuit Caelo vicinaque sidera fecit,

9. The Vaimānika devas. the deities who travel in Vimānas. 'heavenly car,' or rather 'moving spheres.'

10. The text says merely सुनीतिनाम सूर्ता। the commentator says. 'perhaps formerly so called; पूर्वनाम वा। We have already remarked that some Purānas so denominate her.

1-1 The legend of Dhruva is narrated in the Bhāgāvata, Pādma (Swarga Khanḍa), Agni. and Nārādiya, much to the same purport, and partly in the same words, as our text. The Brahmā and its double the Hari Varnśa, the Matsya. and Vāyu merely allude to Dhruva's having been transferred by Brahmā to the skies, in reward of his austerities. The story of his religious penance, and adoration of Viṣṇu, seems to be an embellishment interpolated by the Vaiṣṇava Purānas. Dhruva being adopted as a Śaint by their sect. The allusion to Sūrtā in our text concurs with the form of the story as it appears elsewhere, to indicate the priority of the more simple legend.

Parāśara continued— The sons of Dhruva, by his wife Śambhu, were Bhavya and Sliṣṭi. Succhāyā, the wife of the latter, was the mother of five virtuous sons, Ripu, Ripnnjaya, Vipra, Vṛkala, and Vṛkatejas. The son of Ripu, by Vṛhati, was the illustrious Cākṣuṣa, who begot the Manu Cākṣuṣa on Puṣkarinī, of the family of Varuṇa, the daughter of the venerable patriarch Anaranya. The Manu had, by his wife Navala, the daughter of the patriarch Vairāja, ten noble sons, Uru, Puru, Satadyumna, Tapaśvī, Satyavāk, Kavi, Agniṣṭoma, Atirācra, Sudyumna, and Abhimanyu. 'You wife of Uru, Āgneyī, bore six excellent sons, Anga, Sumanas, Swati, Kratu, Angiras, and Śiva. Anga had, by his wife Sunītha, only one son, named Veṇa, whose right arm was rubbed by the Ṛsis, for the purpose of producing from it progeny. From the arm of Veṇa, thus rubbed, sprang a celebrated monarch, named Pṛthu, by whom, in olden time, the earth was milked for the advantage of mankind¹.

Parāśara said— Sunīthā was originally the daughter of Mṛtyu, by whom she was given to Anga to wife. She bore him Veṇa, who inherited the evil propensities of his maternal grandfather. When he was inaugurated by the Ṛsis monarch of the earth, he caused it to be every where proclaimed, that no worship should be performed, no oblations offered, no gifts bestowed upon the Brāhmaṇas. "I, the king," said he, " am the lord of sacrifice; for who but I am entitled to the oblations." The Ṛsi, respectfully approaching the sovereign, addressed him in melodious accents, and said, ऋष्य ऊचुः:

भो भो राजन् शृणुष्व त्वं यद् वदामस्तव प्रभो।

Ṛsi replied— "Gracious prince, we salute you; hear what we have to represent. For the preservation of your kingdom and your life, and for the benefit of all your subjects, permit us to worship Hari, the lord of all sacrifice, the god of gods, with solemn and protracted rites²; a portion of the fruit of which will revert to you³. Viṣṇu, the god of oblations, being propitiated with sacrifice by us, will grant you, oh king, all your desires. Those princes have half their wishes gratified, in whose realms Hari, the lord of sacrifice, is adored with sacrificial rites."

Vēṇa said— "Who" is superior to me? who besides me is entitled to worship? who is this Hari, whom you style the lord of sacrifice? Conscious of this. I have issued my commands, and look due you obey them. You are not to sacrifice, not to offer oblations, not to give alms. As the first duty of women is obedience to their lords, so observance of my orders is incumbent, holy men, on you."

ऋषय ऊच्य:

R̄ṣis replied— "Give command, great king" that piety may suffer no decrease. All this world," is but a transmutation of oblations; and if devotion be suppressed, the world is at an end.

Afterwards the Munis beheld a great dust arise, and they said to the people who were nigh, "What is this?" and the people answered and said, "Now that the kingdom is without a king, the dishonest men have begun to seize the property of their neighbours. The great dust that you behold, excellent Munis, is raised by troops of clustering robbers, hastening to fall upon their prey." The sages, hearing this, consulted, and together rubbed the thigh of the king, who had left no offspring, to produce a son. From the thigh, thus nibbled, came forth a being of the complexion of a charred stake, with flattened features (like a Negro), and of dwarfish statute. "What am I to do?" cried he eagerly to the Munis, "Sit down" (Nishida), said they; and thence his name was Nishāda. His descendants, the inhabitants of the Vindhya mountain, great Muni. are still called Niṣ hādas. and are characterized by the exterior tokens of depravity⁴. By this means the wickedness of Veṇa was expelled; those Niṣādas being born of his sins, and carrying them away. The Brāhmaṇas then proceeded to rub the right arm of the king, from which friction was engendered the illustrious son of Veṇa, named Pṛthu, resplendent in person, as it the blazing deity of Fire had been manifested.

There then fell from the sky the primitive bow (of Mahādeva) named Ajagava. and celestial arrows, and panoply from heaven. At the birth of Pṛthu all living creatures rejoiced; and Veṇa, delivered by his being born from the hell named Put, ascended to the realms above. The seas and rivers, bringing Jewels from their depths, and water to perform the ablutions of his installation, appeared. The great parent of all, Brahmā, with the gods and the descendants of Angiras (the fires), and with all things animate or inanimate, assembled and performed the ceremony of consecrating the son of Veṇa. Beholding in his right hand the (mark of the) discus of Viṣṇu, Brahmā recognised a portion of that divinity in Pṛthu, and was much pleased; for the mark of Viṣṇu's discus is visible in the hand of one who is born to be a universal emperor⁵, one whose power is invincible even by the gods.

The mighty Pṛthu, the son of Veṇa, being thus invested with universal dominion by those who were skilled in the rite, soon removed the grievances of the people whom his father had oppressed, and from winning their affections he derived the tide of Rajā or king'. The waters became solid, when he traversed the ocean: the mountains opened him a path; his banner passed unbroken (through the-forests): the earth needed not cultivation; and at a thought food was prepared: all kine were like the cow of plenty: honey was stored in every Bower, At the sacrifice of the birth of Pr̥thu, which was performed by Brahmā, the intelligent Sūta (herald or bard) was produced, in the juice of the monoplant, on the very birth-day⁷: at that great sacrifice also was produced the accomplished Māgadha: and the holy sages said to these two persons, "Praise ye the king Pr̥thu, the illustrious son of Veṇa; for this is your especial function, and here is a fit subject for your praise." But they respectfully replied to the Brāhmaṇas. "We know not the acts of the new-born king of the earth; his merits are not understood by us; his fame is not spread abroad: inform us upon what subject we may dilate in his praise."

Parāśara said— The king, hearing these words, was much pleased, and reflected that persons acquire commendation by virtuous actions, and that consequently his virtuous conduct would be the theme of the eulogium which the bards were about to pronounce: whatever merits, then, they should panegyrize in their encomium, he determined that he would endeavour to acquire; and if they should point out what faults; ought to be avoided, he would try to shun them. He therefore listened attentively, as the sweet-voiced encomiasts celebrated the future virtues of Pr̥thu, the enlightened son of Veṇa.

The virtues thus celebrated by the Sūta and the Māgadha were cherished in the remembrance of the Raja, and practised by him when occasion arose. Protecting this earth, the monarch performed many great sacrificial ceremonies, accompanied by liberal donations. His subjects soon approached him, suffering from the famine by which they were afflicted, as all the edible plants had perished during the season of anarchy. In reply to his question of the cause of their coming, they told him, that in the interval in which the earth was without a king all vegetable products had been withheld, and that consequently the people had perished.

On hearing this, Pṛthu took up his divine bow Ajagava, and his celestial arrows, and in great wrath marched forth to assail the Earth. Earth, assuming the figure of a cow, fled hastily from him, and traversed, through fear of the king, the regions of Brahmā and the heavenly spheres; but wherever went the supporter of living things, there she beheld Vaiṇya with uplifted weapons: at last, trembling with terror, and anxious to escape his arrows, the Earth addressed Pṛthu, the hero of resistless prowess.

Then the Earth overcome with apprehension, and trembling in every limb, respectfully saluted the king, and thus spoke: "All undertakings are successful, if suitable means of effecting them are employed. I will impart to you means of success, which you can make use of if you please. All vegetable produces are old, and destroyed by me; but at your command I will restore them, as developed from my milk. Do you therefore, for the benefit of mankind, most virtuous of princes, give me that calf, by which I may be able to secrete milk. Make also all places level, so that I may cause my milk, the seed of all vegetation, to flow every where around."

Pṛthu accordingly uprooted the mountains, by hundreds and thousands, for myriads of leagues, and they were thenceforth piled upon one another. Before his time there were no defined boundaries of villages or towns, upon the irregular surface of the earth; there was no cultivation, no pasture, no agriculture, no highway for merchants: all these things (or all civilization) originated in the reign of Pṛthu. Where the ground was made level, the king induced his subjects to take up their abode. Before his time, also, the fruits and roots which constituted the food of the people were procured with great difficulty, all vegetables having been destroyed; and he therefore, having made Swāyambhuva Manu the calf milked the Earth, and received the milk into his own hand, for the benefit of mankind.

Thence proceeded all kinds of corn and vegetables upon which people subsist now and perpetually. By granting life to the Earth, Pṛthu was as her father, and she thence derived the patronymic appellation Pṛthivī (the daughter of Pṛthu). Then the gods, the sages, the demons, the Rākṣasas, the Gandharbas, Yakṣus, Pitṛis, serpents, mountains, and trees, took a milking vessel suited to their kind, and milked the earth of appropriate milk, and the milker and the calf were both peculiar to their own species⁹.

इति श्रीविष्णुपुराणे प्रथमांशे त्रयोदशोऽध्यायः।

This Earth, the mother, the nurse, the receptacle, and nourisher of all existent things, was produced from the sole of the foot of Viśnu. And thus was born the mighty Pṛthu, the heroic son of Veṇa, who was the lord of the earth, and who, from conciliating the affections of the people, was the first ruler to whom the title of Rāja was ascribed. Whoever shall recite this story of the birth of Pṛthu, the son of Veṇa, shall never suffer any retribution for the evil he may have committed: and such is the virtue of the tale of Pr̥thu's birth , that those who hear it repeated shall be relieved from affliction¹⁰.

NOTES

1. The descent of Pr̥thu from Dhruva is similarly traced in the Matsya Purāṇa, but with some variety of nomenclature : thus the wife of Dhruva is named Dhanyā; and the eldest son of the Manu, Taru. The Vāyu introduces another generation, making the eldest son of Sliṣṭi, or as there termed Puṣṭi, father of Udāradhī; and the latter the father of Ripu, the father of Cākṣuṣa, the father of the Manu. The Bhāgavata has an almost entirely different set of names, having converted the family of Dhruva into personifications of divisions of time and of day and night The account there given is, Dhruva mad. by his wife Bhrami (revolving), the daughter of Sisumāra (the sphere), Kalpa and Vatsara. The latter married Suvīthi, and had six sons. Pushpārṇa, Tigmaketu, Isha, Urjja, Vasu and Jaya. The first married Prabhā and Doahā, and had by the former, Prātah (dawn), Madhyadina (noon), and Sāya (evening); and by the latter, Pradosha, Nisītha, and Vyūṣṭa. or the beginning, middle, and end of night. The last has, by Puskarini. Cākṣuṣa. mar, ried to Akuti. and the father of Chākṣusha Manu. He has twelve sons Puru, Kritsna, Rita, Dyumna, Satyavat, Dhrita, Vrata. Agniṣṭoma Atirātra, Pradyumna. Sivi, and Ulmuka. The last is the farther of six sons, named as in our text, except the last, who is called Gaya. The eldest, Anga, is the father of Veṇa. the father of Pr̥thu. These additions are evidently the creatures of the author's imagination. The Brāhmā Purāṇa and Hari Varṣa have the same genealogy as the Viṣṇu, reading, as do the Matsya and Vāyu, Pushkarini or Vārani. the daughter of Virana, instead of Varuṇa. They, as well as copies of the text, present several other varieties of nomenclature. The Pādma Purāṇa (Bhūmi Khaṇḍa) says Anga was of the family of Atri, in allusion perhaps to the circumstance mentioned in the Brāhma Purāṇa of Unioapida's adoption by that Rṣi.

2. With the Dirgbasaira, 'long sacrifice,' a ceremony lasting a thousand years.

3. That is, the land will be fertile in proportion as the gods are propitiated, and the king will benefit accordingly, as a sixth part of the merit and of the produce will be his. So the commentator explains the word 'portion:' अंशः पष्ठो भागः।

4. The Matsya says there were born outcast or barbarous races, Mlecchas (म्लेच्छजातयः) as black as collyrium. The Bhāgavata describes an individual of dwarfish stature, with short arms and legs, of a complexion as black as a crow, with projecting chin, broad flat nose, red eyes, and tawny hair; whose descendants were mountaineers and foresters : मिरिकाननगोचराः। The Pādma (Bhu. Kb.) has a similar description, adding to the dwarfish stature and black complexion, a wide mouth, large ears, and a protuberant belly. It also particularizes his posterity as Nishādas, Kirātas, Bhillas. Bahanakas, Bhramaras, Pulindas, and other barbarians, or Mlecchas, living in woods and on mountains. These passages intend, and do not much exaggerate, the uncouth appearance of the Goands, Koles, Bhils, and other uncivilized tribes, scattered along the forests and mountains of central India, from Behar to Kandesh, and who are not improbably the predecessors of the present occupants of the cultivated portions of the country. They are always very black, ill-shapen, and dwarfish, and have countenances of a very African character.

5. A Cakravartī, or, according to the text. one in whom the Cakra, the discus of Viṣṇu, abides (varītate); such a figure being delineated by the lines of the hand. The grammatical etymology is, 'he who abides in, or rules over, an extensive territory called a Cakra.'

6. From rāga (राग), 'passion' or 'affection;' but the more obvious etymology is rāj (राज), to shine' or 'be splendid.

7. The birth of Pr̥thu is to be considered as the sacrifice, of which Brahmā, the creator, was the performer; but in other places, as in the Pādma, it is considered that an actual sacrificial rite was celebrated, at which the first encomiasts were produced. The Bhāgavata does not account for their appearance.

8. 'Having willed or determined the Manu Swayambhuva to be the calf; संकल्पयित्वा वत्सं तु मनुं स्वायुधभुवं। So the Pādma Purāṇa : वत्सं तस्याः प्रकल्पितं। मनुं स्वायुधभुवं पूर्वे परिचित्त्वं पुनः पुनः। The Bhāgavata has 'वत्सं कृत्वा मनुं।—Having made the Manu the calf!' By the 'calf,' or Manu in that character, is typified, the commentator observes, the promoter of the multiplication of progeny : प्रजासन्तानप्रवर्तकः।

9. The Matsya, Brāhma, Bhāgavata, and Pādma enter into a greater detail of this milking, specifying typically the calf, the milker, the milk, and the vessel. Thus, according to the Matsya, the Ṛṣis milked the earth through Vṛhaspati; their calf was Soma; the Vedas were the vessel; and the milk was devotion. When the gods milked the earth, the milker was Mitra (the sun); Indra was the calf: superhuman power was the produce. The gods had a gold, the Pitṛs a silver vessel : and for the latter, the milker was Antaka (death); Yama was the calf; the milk was Swadhā, or oblation. The Nāga, or snake-gods, had a gourd for their pail; their calf was Takṣaka; Dhritarāṣṭra (the serpent) was their milker; and their milk was poison. For the Asuras, Māya was the milk; Virocana, the son of Prahlāda, was the calf; the milker was Dwimurddhā; and the vessel was of iron. The Yakṣus made Vaisravana their calf; their vessel was of unbaked earth, the milk was the power of disappearing. The Rākṣasas and others employed Raupyanābha as the milker : their calf was Sumali; and their milk was blood. Citraratha was the calf, Vasuruci the milker, of the Gandharvas and nymphs, who milked fragrant odours into a cup of lotus leaves. On behalf of the mountains, Meru was the milker; Himavat the calf; the pail was of crystal : and the milk was of herbs and gems. The trees extracted sap in a vessel of the Palisa, the Sāl being the milker, and the Plakṣa the calf. The descriptions that occur in the Bhāgavata, Pādma, and Brahmā Purāṇas are occasionally slightly varied, but they are for the most part in the same words as that of the Matsya. These mystifications are all probably subsequent modifications of the original simple allegory, which typified the earth as a cow, who yielded to every class of beings the milk they desired, or the object of their wishes.

10. Another reading is दुःस्वप्नोपशमं करोति। 'It counteracts evil dreams.' The legend of Pṛthu is briefly given in the Mahābhārata. Rāja Dharma, and occurs in most of the Purāṇas, but in greatest detail in our text, in the Bhāgavata, and especially in the Pādma, Bhumi Khaṇḍa. s. 29, 30. All the versions, however, are essentially the same.

Pṛthu had two valiant sons, Antarddhi and Pali. The son of An-tarḍdhāna,¹ by his wife Sikhaṇḍīnī, was Havirdhāna, to whom Dhishāna, a princess of the race of Agni, bore six sons, Prāchinaverhis, Śukra, Gaya, Kṛṣṇa, Vraja, and Ajina². The first of these was a mighty prince and patriarch, by whom mankind was multiplied after the death of Havirdhāna. He was called Prāchinaverhis from his placing upon the earth the sacred grass, pointing to the east³. At the termination of a rigid penance he married Savarṇā, the daughter of the ocean, who had been previously betrothed to him, and who had by the king ten sons, who were all styled Pracetasaḥ, and were skilled in military science: they all observed the same duties, practised religious austerities, and remained immersed in the bed of the sea for ten thousand years.

Parāśara said— Thus glorifying Viṣṇu and intent in mediation of him, the Pracetosas passed ten thousand years of austerity in the vast ocean; on which Hari, being pleased with them, appeared to them amidst the waters, of the complexion of the full-blown lotus leaf. Beholding him mounted on the king of birds, Garūḍa, the Pracetosas bowed down their heads in devout homage; when Viṣṇu said to them, "Receive the boon you have desired; for I the giver of good, am content with you, and am present." The Pracetosas replied to him with reverence, and told him that the cause of their devotions was the command of their father to effect the multiplication of mankind. The god, having accordingly granted to them the object of their prayers, disappeared, and they came up from the water.

NOTES

1. The text of the Vāyu and Brahmā (or Hari Varnīśa) read like that of the Viṣṇu, पृथोः पुत्रो महावीर्यौ जज्ञतेऽन्तर्द्विपालिनौ। Mons. Langlois understands the two last words as compound epithet: "Se jouirent du pouvoir de se rccdr invariables." The construction would admit of such a sense, but it seems more probable that they are intended for names. The lineage of Pṛthu is immediately continued through one of them, Antarddhāna, which is the same as Antarddhi; as the commentator states with regard to that appellation, अन्तर्द्वानादन्तर्द्विसंजात्। and as the commentator on the Hari Varnīśa remarks of the succeeding name अन्तर्द्वानादन्तर्द्विसंजात्। 'one of the brothers being called Antarddhāna or Antarddhi.' leaves no other sense for Pālin but that of a proper name. The Bhāgavata gives Pṛthu five sons, Vijitāśva, Haryyakṣa, Dhūmrā-keśa, Vṛka, and Dravina. and adds that the elder was also named Antarddhāna, in consequence of having obtained from Indra the power of making himself invisible : अन्तर्द्धानगतिं शक्राल्लब्ध्वा अन्तर्द्धानसंजितः ।

2. The Bhāgavata, as usual, modifies this genealogy : Antarddhāna has by Sikhandinī three sons, who were the three fires. Pāvaka, Pavamāna, and Suci. condemned by a curse of Vasiṣṭha to be born again: by another wife, Nabhasvatī, he has Havirddhāna, whose sons are the same as those of the text, only giving another name, Varhiṣad as well as Prācīnaverhis to the first. According to the Mahābhārata.(Mokṣa Dharma), which has been followed by the Pādma Purāṇa, Prāchīnavarhis was born in the family of Ātri : अत्रिवशे समुत्पत्तो ब्रह्मयोनिः सनातनः । प्राचीनवर्हिर्भगवान् ।

3. The text is, प्राचीनग्रथाः कुशास्तस्य पृथिव्यामभवन् । Kuśa or varhis is properly 'sacrificial grass' (Poa); and Prāchīnāgra, literally, 'having its tips towards the east; the direction in which it should be placed upon the ground, as a seat for the gods on occasion of offerings made to them_ The name therefore intimates, either that the practice originated with him. or, as the commentator explains it, that he was exceedingly devout, offering sacrifices or invoking the gods every where: सर्वत्र यज्ञानुष्ठानात् । The Hari Variṣṭha adds a verse to that or our text reading. प्राचीनग्रथाः कुशास्तस्य पृथिव्यां जनमेजय । प्राचीनवर्हिर्भगवान् पृथिवीतलचारिणः । which Mons. Langlois has rendered, 'Quand il marchoil sur la terre les poinlesde cousta ctoient courbees vers l' Orient,' which he supposes to mean. 'Que ce prince avail toume sea pensdes et porttf sa domination vers l'Qnent : a supposition that might have been obviated by a little further consideration of the verse of Manu to which he refers. "If he have taken his seat on culms of grass with their points towards the east." etc. The commentary explains the passage as above, referring पृथिवीतलचारिणः to कुशा not to तस्य । as पृथिव्यां तस्य प्राचीनग्रथाः कुशाः पृथिवीतलचारिणः भुवः स्वरूपे प्रसरन्तः कृत्स्नभूमण्डलव्याप्तिं आसन् ततः स प्राचीनवर्हिः । 'He was called Prāchīnavarhis. because his sacred grass, pointing east, was going upon the very earth. or was spread over the whole earth.' The text of the Bhāgavata also explains clearly what is meant: यस्येदं देवयजनमुयं वितन्तः । प्राचीनग्रथैः कुशैरासीदास्तृतं वसुधातलं । 'By whose sacred grass, pointing to the east, as be performed sacrifice after sacrifice, the whole earth, his sacrificial ground, was overspread.

Whilst the Pracetases were thus absorbed in their devotions, the tree spread and overshadowed the unprotected earth, and the people perished: the winds could not blow; the sky was shut out by the forests; and mankind was unable to labour for ten thousand years. When the sages, coming forth from the deep, beheld this, they were angry, and, being incensed, wind and flame issued from their mouths. The Strong wind tore up the trees by their roots, and leic them sear and dry. and the fierce fire consumed them, and the forests were cleared away. When Soma (the moon), the sovereign of the vegetable world, beheld all except a few of the trees 'destroyed, he went to the patriarchs, the Pracetosas, and said, "Restrain your indignation, princes, and listen to me. I will form an alliance between you and the trees. Prescient of futurity, I have nourished with my rays this precious maiden, the daughter of the woods. She is called Māriṣā, and is assuredly the offspring of the trees. She shall be your bride, and the multiplier of the race of Dhruva. From a portion of your lustre and a portion of mine, oh mighty sages, the patriarch Dakṣa shall be born or her, who, endowed with a part of me, and composed of your vigour, shall be as resplendent as fire, and shall multiply the human race.

There was formerly (said Soma) a sage named Kaṇḍu, eminent in holy wisdom, who practised pious austerities on the lovely borders of the Gomati river. The king of the gods sent the nymph Pramlochī to disturb his penance, and the sweet-smiling damsel diverted the sage from his devotions. They lived together, in the valley or Mandara, for a hundred and fifty yean; during which, the mind of the Muni was wholly given up to enjoyment. At the expiration of this period the nymph requested his permission to return to heaven; but the Muni, still fondly attached to her, prevailed upon her to remain for some time longer; and the graceful damsel continued to reside for another hundred years, and delight the great sage by her fascinations. Then again she preferred her suit to be allowed to return to the abodes of the gods; and again the Muni desired her to remain. At the expiration of more than a century the nymph once more said to him, with a smiling countenance, 'Brahman. I depart;' but the Muni, detaining the finoe-eyed damsel, replied, 'Nay. stay yet a little; you will go hence for a long period.' Afraid of incurring an imprecation, the graceful nymph continued with the sage for nearly two hundred years more, repeatedly asking his permission to go to the region of the king of the gods, but as often desired by him to remain. Dreading to be cursed by him, and excelling in amiable manners,- well knowing also the pain that is inflicted by separation from an object of affection, she did not quit the Mani, whose mind, wholly subdued by love, became every day more strongly attached to her.

'The day,' he replied, 'is drawing fast to a close: I must perform the Sandhyā worship, or a duty will be neglected.' The nymph smiled mirthfully as she rejoined, 'Why do you talk, grave sir, of this day drawing to a close; your day is a day of many years, a day that must be a marvel to all: explain what this means.'

The trees received the living dews, and the winds collected them into one mass. "This," said Soma. "I matured by my rays, and gradually it increased in size, till the exhalation, that had rested on the tree tops became the lovely girl named Māriṣā. The trees will bear her to you, Pracetasa: let your indignation be appeased. She is the progeny of Kaṇḍu, the child of Pramlochā the nursling of the trees, the daughter of the wind and of the moon.

The holy Kaṇḍu after the interruption of his pious exercises, went, excellent princes, to the Parāśara said—Soma having concluded, the Pracetaras took Māriṣā as he had enjoined them righteously to wife, relinquishing their indignation against the trees: and upon her they begot the eminent patriarch, Dakṣa, who had (in a former life) been born as the son of Brahmā.⁵ This great sage, for the furtherance or creation, and the increase of mankind, created progeny. Obeying the command of Brahmā, he made movable and immovable things, bipeds and quadrupeds; and subsequently, by his will, gave birth to females, ten of whom he bestowed on Dharmā, thirteen on Kaśyapa, and twenty-seven, who regulate the course of time, on the moon⁶. Of these, the gods, the Titans, the snake gods, cattle, and birds, the singers and dancers of the courts of heaven, the spirits of evil, and other beings, were born. From that period forwards living creatures were engendered by sexual intercourse: before the time of Dakṣa they were variously propagated, by the will, by sight, by touch, and by the influence of religious austerities practised by devout sages and holy saints.

Parāśara said— In what manner Dakṣa created living creatures, as commanded by Brahmā, you shall hear. In the first place he willed into existence the deities: the Rsis, quiristers of heaven, the Titans, and the snake-gods. Finding that his will-born progeny did not multiply themselves, he determined, in order to secure their increase, to establish sexual intercourse as the means of multiplication. For this purpose he espoused Asiknī, the daughter of the patriarch Virana,¹ a damsel addicted to devout practice, the eminent supportress of the world. By her the great father of mankind begot five thousand mighty sons, through whom he expected the world should be peopled. Nārada, the divine Rsi, observing them desirous to multiply posterity, approached them, and addressed them in a friendly tone:

Nārada said— "Illustrious Haryasvas, it is evident that your intention is to beget posterity; but first consider this; why should you, who, like fools, know not the middle, the height, and depth of the world,⁹ propagate offspring ? When your intellect is no more obstructed by interval, height, or depth, then how, fools, shall you not all behold the term of the universe ?"

Parásara said— Having heard the words of Nárada, the sons of Dakṣa dispersed themselves through the regions, and to the present day have not returned; as rivers that lose themselves in ocean come back no more. The Haryasvas having disappeared, the patriarch Dakṣa begot, by the daughter of Víraṇa a thousand other sons. They, who were named Savalāsvas, were desirous of engendering posterity, but were dissuaded by Nárada in a similar manner. They said to one another, "What the Muni has observed is perfectly just. We must follow that path that our brothers have travelled, and when we have ascertained the extent of the universe, well will multiply our race." Accordingly they scattered themselves through the regions, and, like rives flowing into the sea, they returned not again. Henceforth brother seeking for brother disappears, through ignorance of the products of the first principle of things. Dakṣa

the patriarch, on finding that all these his sons had vanished, was incensed, and denounced an imprecation upon Nárada.¹⁰

daughter of Vīraṇa;¹¹ ten of whom he gave to Dharma, thirteen to Kaśyapa, and twentyseven to Soma. four to Ariṣṭanemi. two to Bahuputra, two to Angiras, and two to Kṛśāsva. I will tell you their names. Arundhatī, Vasu. Yāmī, Lambā, Bhānū, Marutvatī, Sankalpā, Muhūrttā, Sādhyā, and Viśvā were the ten wives of Dharma,¹² and bore him the following progeny. The sons of Viśvā were the Viśvadevas;¹³ and the Sādhyas. those of Sādhyā. The Māruts, or winds, were the children of Marutvatī; the Vasus, of Vasu. The Bhānus (or suns) of Bhānu, and the deities presiding over moments, of Muhūrtta. Ghoṣa was the son of Lamba (an are of the heavens); Nāgavīttā (the milky way), the daughter of Yāmī (night). The divisions of the earth were born of Arundhatī; and Sankalpā (pious purpose), the soul of all, was the son of Sankalpā. The deities called Vasus, because, preceded by fire, they abound in splendour and might,¹⁵ are severally named Āpa. Dhruva, Soma, Dhava (fire), Anila (wind), Anala (fire), Pratyūsha (day-break), and Prabhāsa (light). The four sons of Āpa were Vaitaṇḍya. Srama (weariness), Srānta (fatigue), and Dhur (burthen). Kāla (time), the cherisher of the world, was the son of Dhruva. The son of Soma was Varchas (light), who was the father of Varcasvi (radiance). Dhava had, by his wife Manoharā (loveliness), Draviṇa, Hutahavyavāha. Śiśra, Prāṇa, and Ramaṇa. The two sons of Anila (wind), by his wife Śivā, were Manoharā (swift as thought) and Avijñatagati (untraceable motion). The son of Agni (fire), Kumāra, was born in a clump of Śara reeds: his sons were Sākha, Viśākha, Naigameya, and Prishṭhaja. The offspring of the Kṛttikās was named Kartikeya. The son of Pratyūsha was the Ṛsi named Devala, who had two philosophic and intelligent sons.¹⁶

The daughters of Dakṣa who were married to Kaśyapa were Aditi, Diti, Danu, Arishṭa, Surasā, Surabhi, Vinata, Tamrā, Krodhavaśā, Idā, Khasā Kadru, and Muni,¹⁹ whose progeny I will describe to you. There were twelve celebrated deities in a former Manvantara, called Tuahkas,²⁰ who, upon the approach of the present period, or in the reign of the last Manu, Cākṣuṣa, assembled, and said to one another, "Come, let us quickly enter into the womb of Aditi, that we may be born in the next Manvantara. for thereby we shall again enjoy the rank of gods:" and accordingly they were born the sons of Kaśyapa, the son of Marīci, by Aditi, the daughter of Dakṣa; thence named the twelve Adityas, whose appellations were respectively, Viṣṇu, Śakra, Aryaman, Dhūti, Tvāṣṭri, Pūshan, Vivasvat, Savitā, Mitra, Varuṇa, Anśa. and Bhaga.²¹ These, who in the Cākṣuṣa Manvantara were the gods called Tuṣitas, were called the twelve Ādityas in the Manvantara of Vaivaśvata.

It has been related to us, that Diti had two sons by Kaśyapa, named Hiranyakaśipu and the invincible Hiranyakṣa: she had also a daughter, Sinhikā, the wife of Vipracitti. Hiranyakaśipu was the father of four mighty sons, Anuhlāda, Hlāda, the wise Prahlāda, and the heroic Sanhlāda. the augmentor of the Daitya race²⁸. Amongst these, the illustrious Prahlāda, looking on all things with indifference, devoted his whole faith to Janārddana. The flames that were lighted by the king of the Daityas consumed not him, in whose heart Vāsudeva was cherished; and all the earth trembled when, bound with bonds, he moved amidst the waters of the ocean.

His firm body, fortified by a mind engrossed by Acyuta, was unwounded by the weapons hurled on him by order of the Daitya monarch; and the serpents sent to destroy him breathed their venomous flames upon him in vain. Overwhelmed with rocks, he yet remained unhurt, for he never forgot Viśnu, and the recollection of the deity was his armour of proof. Hurled from on high by the king of the Daityas, residing in Svarga, earth received him unharmed.

The wind sent into his body to wither him up was itself annihilated by him, in whom Madhusūdana was present. The fierce elephants of the spheres broke their tusks, and vailed their pride, against the firm breast which the lord of the Daityās had ordered them to assault. The ministrant priests of the monarch were baffled in all their rites for the destruction of one so steadily attached to Govinda: and the thousand delusions of the fraudulent Samvara, counteracted by the discus of Kṛṣṇa, were practised without success. The deadly poison administered by his father's officers he partook of unhesitatingly, and without its working any visible change; for he looked upon the world with mind undisturbed, and full of benignity, regarded all things with equal affection, and as identical with himself. He was righteous; an inexhaustible mine of purity and truth; and an unfailing model for all pious men.

NOTES

1. Or. 'immersed in the six ūrmis' (ऊर्मिषट्क); explained hunger thirst, sorrow, stupefaction, decay, and death.

2. There is some confusion here in regard to the person addressed but the context shows that the insertion of Maitreya's name is an inadvertence, and that the passage is a continuation of Soma's speech to the Pracetosas.

3. The phrase is ब्रह्मपारमय जपे। 'made up of the farther boundary of Brahmā;' implying either 'comprehending the supreme, or Brahmā, and transcendental wisdom; Pāra,' or. 'consisting of the farthest limits (Pāra) or truths of the Vedas or Brahmā;' that is, being the essence of the Vedānta philosophy. The hymn that follows is in fact a mantra or mystical prayer, commencing with the reiteration of the word Para and Pāra'; as विष्णुपारपारः परम्परेभ्यः परमार्थरूपी। स ब्रह्मपारः परपारभूतः परः पराणामपि पारपारः। Para means Supreme, infinite; and Pāra. 'the-farther bank or limit,' the point that is to be attained by crossing a river or sea, or figuratively the world or existence. Viśnu, then, is Para, that which nothing surpasses. and Pāra. the end or object of existence : he is Apāra pāra, the farthest bound, of that which is illumitable, or space and time : he is Param parebhyah, above or beyond the highest, being beyond or superior to all the elements : he is Parāmātha rūpi, or identical with final truth, or knowledge of soul: he is Brahmā pāra, the object or essence of spiritual wisdom. Parapātabhūta is said to imply the farther limit (Pāra) of rudimental matter (Para); He is Para, or chief Parānam, of those objects which are beyond the senses; and he is Pārapāra, or the boundary of boundaries, that is. he is the comprehensive investure of, and exterior to, those limits by which soul is confined; be is free from all encumbrance or impediment. The passage may be interpreted in different way, according to the ingenuity with which the riddle is read.

4. This part of the legend is peculiar to our text, and the whole story of Mérishā's birth is nowhere else so fully detailed. The penance of the Pracetasa, and its consequences, are related in the Agni, Bhāgavata. Matsya, Pādma, Vāyu, and Brāhma Purānas, and allusion is briefly made to Mérishā's birth. Her origin from Kaṇḍu and Pralochā in narrated in a different place in the Brāhma Purāna where the austerities of Kaṇḍu and the necessity for their interruption, are described. The story, from that authority, was translated by the late Professor Chezy, and is published in the first number of the Journal Asiatique.

5. The second birth of Dakṣa, and his share in the peopling of the earth, is narrated in most of the Purānas in a similar manner. It is perhaps the original legend, for Dakṣa seems to be an irregular adjunct to the Prajāpatis, or mind-born sons of Brahmā (ch. VII. N. 2); and the allegorical nature of his posterity in the character (Ch. VII.) intimates a more recent origin. Nor does that series of descendants apparently occur in the Mahābhārtam although the existence of two Dakṣas is especially remarked there (Mokṣa Dh.); तस्माद् हे नामनी लोके दक्षः क इति चोत्यते। In the Ādi Parva, which seems to be the freest from subsequent improvements, the Dakṣa noticed is the son of the Pracetasa. The incompatibility of the two accounts is reconciled by referring the two Dakṣas to different Manvantaras. The Dakṣa who proceeded from Brahmā as a Prajāpati being born in the first, or Svāyambhuva. and the son of the Pracetasa in the Chākṣusa-

Manvantara. The latter however, as descended from Uttānapada. should belong to the first period also. It is evident that great confusion has been made by the Purāṇas in Dakṣa's history.

6. That, is. they are the Nakṣatras, or lunar asterisms.

7. 'They are removed' (निरुद्धन्ते), which the commentator explains by सुसुप्तवल्लीयत्वे। 'are absorbed, as if they were fast asleep;' but in every age or Yuga, according to the text—in every Manvantara. according to the comment—the Ṛsis reappear, the circumstances of their origin only being varied. Dakṣa therefore, as remarked in the preceding note, is the son of Brahmā in one period. the son of the Pracetasa in another. So Soma. in the Svāyambhuva Manvantara, was born as the son of Atri; in the Chākṣusha, he was produced by churning the ocean. The words of our text occur in the Hari Vaṁśa, with an unimportant variation :

उत्पत्तिश्च निरोधश्च नित्यं भूतेषु पार्थिवं। ऋष्योऽत्र न मुहूर्णि विद्वांसश्चैव ये जनाः॥ 'Birth and obstruction are constant in all beings, but Ṛsis and those men who are wise are not perplexed by this : that is, not, as rendered above, by the alternation of life and death : but, according to the commentator on the Hari Vaṁśa. by a very different matter, the prohibition the unlawful marriages. Utpatti of birth of progeny,' is the result of their will: Nirodha. 'obstruction,' is the law prohibiting the intermarriage of persons connected by the offering of the funeral cake; निरोधो नित्यमसपिण्डामुद्धरेति नियमः। to which Ṛsis and sages are not subject, either from their matrimonial unions being merely platonic, or from the bad example act by Brahmā, who, according to the Vedas, approached his own daughter; प्रजापतिर्वै स्वदुहितमध्यायादिति श्रुतिः। a mystery we have already had occasion to advert to (Ch. VII. n. 5). The explanation of the text, however, given by the commentator appears forced, and less natural than the interpretation preferred above.

8. This is the usual account of Dakṣa's marriage, and is that of the Mahābbārata, Adi P. and of the Brahmā Purāna, which the Hari Vaṁśa, in the first part, repeats. In another portion, the Puṣkara Māhātmya. however, Dakṣa, it is said. converts half himself into a female, by whom he begets the daughters presently to be noticed: दक्षः प्राचेतस्सत्स्या कन्यायां जनयत्सभुः। देहार्द्धोगविधिना कन्या: पदानिभानना:। This seems to be merely a new edition of an old story.

9. भुवोऽन्तरूद्धर्वमधश्च। The commentator explains it to mean the origin, duration, and termination of subtle rudimental body: but the Pādma and Liṅga Purāṇa distinctly express it, 'the extent of the earth:' भुवः प्रमाणः सर्वत्र ज्ञात्वोद्धर्वमध एव च।

10. Nārada's intercurrence, and the fruitless generation of 'the first progeny of Dakṣa' is an old legend. The Mahābhārata (Adi P.) notices only one set of sons, who, it is said, obtained Mokṣa, or liberation, through Nārada's teaching them the Sāṅkhyā philosophy. The Brāhma, Matsya, Vāyu, Liṅga, Pādma, Agni, and Bhāgavata Purāṇas tell the story much as in the text, and not infrequently in the same words. In general they merely refer to imprecation denounced upon Nārada, as above. The Bhāgavata specifies the imprecation to be perpetual peripateticism. Dakṣa says to him. There shall not be a resting place for you in all these regions:" तस्माल्लोकेषु ते मूढं न भवेद्भूमतः पदं। The Kūrma repeats the imprecation merely to the effect that Nārada shall perish, and gives no legend. In the Brahmā Vaivaitta. Nārada is cursed by Brahmā, on a similar occasion, to become the chief of the Gandharvas, whence his musical propensities: but the Bhāgavata, VI, 7. has the reverse of this legend, and makes him first a Gandharva, then a Sūdra, then the son of Brahmā. The Brahmā Purāṇa, and after it the Hari Vamsa and the Vāyu P., have a different and not very intelligible story. Dakṣa, being about to pronounce an imprecation upon Nārada, was appeased by Brahmā and the Ṛṣis. And it was agreed between them that Nārada should be again born; as the son of Kaśyapa, by one of Dakṣa's daughters. This seems to be the gist of the legend, but it is very confusedly told. The version of the Brāhma Purāṇa, which is the same as that of Hari Vamsa, may be thus rendered: "The smooth-speaking Nārada addressed the sons of Dakṣa for their destruction and his own: for the Muni Kaśyapa begot him as a son, who was the son of Brahmā, on the daughter of Dakṣa, through fear of the latter's imprecation. He was formerly the son of Parameṣṭhi (Brahmā), and the excellent sage Kaśyapa next begot him, as if he were his father, on Asiknī, the daughter of Viśraṇa. Whilst he was engaged to beguiling the sons of the patriarch, Dakṣa, of resistless power, determined on his destruction; but he was solicited by Brahmā, in this presence of the great sages, and it was agreed between them that Nāradā, the son of Barhmā, should be born of a daughter of Dakṣa. Consequently Dakṣa gave his daughter to Parameṣṭhi, and by her was Nārada born.' Now several difficulties occur here. Asiknī is the wife, not the daughter, of Dakṣa: but this may be a blunder of the compiler, for in the parallel passage of the Vāyu no name occurs. In the next place, 'who is this daughter? for, as we shall see, the progeny of all Dakṣa's daughters are fully detailed, and in no authority consulted is Nārada mentioned as the son of either of them, or as the son of Kaśyapa. Dakṣa, too, gives his daughter, not to Kaśyapa, but to Parameṣṭhi, or Brahmā. The commentator of the Hari Varnśa solves this by saying he gives her to Brahmā for Kaśyapa. The same bargain is noticed in the Vāyu, but Nārada is also said there to be adopted by Kaśyapa: स बिप्रः कश्यपस्येति कृत्रिमः। Again, however, it gives Dakṣa's imprecation in the same words as the Hari Varnśa, a passage, by the way, omitted in the Brahmā: नारदं नाशमेहीति गर्भवासं वसेति च। Nārada, (in your present form). and take up your abode in the womb.' Whatever may be the original of this legend, it is evidently imperfectly given by the authorities here cited. The French translation of the passage in the Hari Varnśa can scarcely be admitted as correct: assuredly असिक्यामथैरिण्या भूयो देवर्षिसत्तमः। ते भूयो जनयामास पितेव च मुनिपुण्गवं। is not le Devarchi Dakcha, epoux d'Asikni, fille de Virāna, fut l'aïeul de cet illustri mouni ainsi regenere, देवर्षिसत्तमः: is more consistently said by the commentator to mean Kaśyapa. The Vāyu Purāṇa in another part, a description of the different orders of Ṛṣis, states that the Devarṣis Parvata and Nārada were sons of Kaśyapa : पर्वते नारदश्वेव कश्यपस्यात्मजातुभौ। In the account of Kārttavīrya, in the Brahmā Purāṇa and Hari Varnśa, Nārada is introduced as a Gandharbha, the son of Vāridāsa; being the same, according to the commentator on the latter, as the Gandharva elsewhere called Upavarhana.

11. The prior specification (p. 96) was fifty. The Mahābhārata, Adi P., and, again, Mokṣa Dharma, has the same number. The Bhāgavata, Kurma, Pādma, Liṅga, and Vāyu Purāṇa state sixty. The former is perhaps the original, as the fullest and most consistent details relate to them and their posterity.

12. This is the usual list of Dharma's wives. The Bhāgavata substitutes Kakud for Arundhatī. The Pādma Purāṇa, Matsya Purāṇa, and Hari Vaiṣṇava contain two different account of Dakṣa's descendants: the first agrees with our text: the second, which is supposed to occur in the Pādma Kalpa, is somewhat varied, particularly as to the wives of Dharma, who are said to be five. The nomenclature varies, or Pādma Purāṇa	Hari Vaiṣṇava.	Matsya.

Lakṣmī	Lakṣmī	Lakṣmī
Sarasvatī	Kirttī	Sarasvatī
Gaṅga	Sadhyā	Sādhyā
Viśvēśā	Viśwa	Viśvēśā
Sāvitrī	Marutvatī	Urjjasvatī.

There is evident inaccuracy in all the copies, and the names may in some instances be erroneous. From the succeeding enumeration of their descendants, it appears that Kāma was the son of Lakṣmī; the Sādhyas, of Sādhyā; the Viśvādevas. of Viśvā; the Māruts. of Marutvatī; and the Vasus of Devī, who may be either the Sarasvatī or Sāvitrī of the previous enumeration.

13. The Viśvādevas are a class of gods to whom sacrifices should be offered daily. Manu, III. 121. They are named in some of the Purāṇas, as the Vāyu and Matsya : the former specifying ten; the latter, twelve.

14. The Sādhyas. according to the Vāyu, are the personified rites and prayers of the Vedas, born of the metres, and partakers of the sacrifices: साध्या नाम महाभागा छन्दा यज्ञभागिनः। सर्वे मन्त्रशरीराः। The same work names twelve, which are all names of sacrifice and formulae. as Darsā, Paurnamāsa, Brhadaśva, Rathantara, etc. The Matsya Purāṇa, Pādma Purāṇa, and Hari V. have a different set of seventeen appellations, apparently of arbitrary selection, as Bhava, Prabhava, Iśa, Aruṇi, etc.

15. Or, according to the Pādma Purāṇa, because they are always present in light, or luminous irradiation : ज्योतिषाणां तु ये देवा व्यापका सर्वतो दिशः। वसवस्ते समाव्याताः॥

16. The Vāyu supplies their names Kṣamāvartta (patient) and Manasvia (wise).

17. The passage is, अर्जेकपादहिर्वंधस् त्वद्वा रुद्रश्च बुद्धिमान्। त्वष्टुश्चायात्मजः पुत्रो विश्वरूपो महायशः॥ Whose sons they are does not appear : the object being, according to the comment, to specify only the eleven divisions or modifications of the youngest Rudra. Twashṭṛa : त्वष्टुजस्य रुद्रस्यैकादशधा विभागः। We have, however, an unusual variety of reading here in two copies of the comment : "The eleven Rudras, in whom the family of Twashṭṛi (a synonym, in may be observed, sometimes of Viswakarmā) is included, were born. The enumeration of the Rudra ends with Aparājita, of whom Tryambaka is the epithet : अर्जैकपादशैकादशरुद्रा जज्ञिरे मध्येत्वष्टुवंशयुक्ता रुदसंख्यासमाप्तमपराजित इति अम्बकविशेषणः। Accordingly the three last names in all the other copies of the text are omitted in these two; their places being supplied by the three first, two of whom are always named in the lists of the Rudras. According to the Vāyu and Brāhma Purāṇa the Rudras are the children of Kaśyapa by Surabhi : the Bhāgavata makes them the progeny of Bhūta and Sarūpa : the Matsya, Pādma, and Hari V., in the second series, the offspring of Surabhi by Brahmā. The names in three of the Paurāṇic -authorities run thus :

Vāyu	Matsya	Bhāgavata.
Ajaikapād	Ajaikapād	Ajaikapād
Ahirvrudhn	Ahirvradhnī	Ahirvradhnā
Hara	Hara	Ugra
Nirrita	Niritti	Bhīma
Isvara	Piṅgala	Vāma
Bhuvana	Dahana	Mahān
Angāraka	Aparājita	Bahurūpa
Arddhaketu	Mṛgavyādhā	Vṛṣakapi
Mṛtyu	Senānī	Aja
Sarpa	Sajja	Bhava
Kapālī	Kapāli	Raivata.

The Brahmā or Hari V., the Pādma, the Liṅga, etc. have other varieties; and the Lexicons have a different reading from all. as in that of Jaṭādhara they are Ajaikapad. Ahirvādhna. Virūpākṣu. Sureśvara. Jayanta. Bahurūpaka. Tryambaka, Aparājita, Vaivaswata. Sāvitra, and Hara. The variety seems to proceed from the writers applying to the Rudras, as they may legitimately do, different appellations of the common prototype, or synonyms of Rudra or Śiva, selected at will from his thousand and eight names, according to the Liṅga Purāṇa

18. The posterity of Dakṣa's daughters by Dharma are clearly allegorical personifications chiefly of two classes, one consisting of astronomical phenomena, and the other of portions or subjects of the ritual of the Vedas.

19. There is some, though not much, variation in these names in different Purāṇas. The Bhāgavata has Saramā. Kashtha, and Timi, the parents severally of canine animals, beasts with uncloven hoofs, and fishes, in place of Vinatā, Khasā, and Kadru; disposing of the first and last differently. The Vāyu has Pravā in place of Arishṭa, and Anāyuṣ or Dēnayuṣ for Surasā. The Pādma Purāṇa, second leries, substitutes Kāli, Anāyuṣ Sinhika, Pisāchā, Vāch for Arishṭa, Surasā, Suravī. Tāmrā, and Muni; and omits Idā and Khasā. In the Uttara Khaṇḍa of the same. Kaśyapa's wives are said to be but four, Aditi, Diti, Kadru and Vinatā.

20. In the sixth reign, or that of Chākṣusa Manu, according to the text; but in book III.. ch. I. the Tushitas are the gods of the second or Svārochiṣa Manvantara. The Vāyu has a much more complete legend than any other Purāṇa on this subject. In the beginning of the Kalpa twelve gods, named Jayas, were created by Brahmā, as his deputies and assistants in the creation. They, lost in meditation, neglected his commands : on which he cursed them to be repeatedly born in each Manvantara till the seventh. They were accordingly, in the several successive Manvantaras, Ajitas, Tuśitas, Satyas, Haris, Vaikuṇṭhas, Sādhyas, and Adityas. Our authority and some others, as the Brahmā, have apparent' ly intended to refer to this account, bul have confused the order of the series.

21. The Purāṇas that contain this genealogy agree tolerably well in these names. The Bhāgavata adds many details regarding some of the Adityas and their descendants.

22. The Nakṣutra Yognis, or chief stars of the lunar mansions, or asterisms in the moon's path.

23. None of the authorities are more specific on the subject of Ariṣṭanemis' progeny. In the Mahābhārata this is said to be another name of Kaśyapa : मरीचः कश्यपः पुत्रस्तस्य द्वे नामनि स्मृते। अरिष्टेन्मिरित्येकं कश्यपेत्यपरं विदुः॥ The Bhāgavata substitutes Tārkṣa for this personage, said by the commentator to be likewise another name of Kaśyapa. His wives are. Kadru, Vinatā. Patangi, and Yāmini. mothers of snakes, birds, grasshoppers, and locusts.

24. Enumerated in astrological works as brown, red, yellow, and white; portending severally wind, heat, rain, famine.

25. The Rūhās, or verses, thirty-five in number, addressed to presiding divinities, denominated Pratyangirasas. The Bhāgavata calls the wives of Angiras, Svadhā and Satī. and makes them the mothers of the Pitṛs and the Atharvan Veda severally.

26. The Śastra devatas, 'gods of the divine weapons : ' a hundred are enumerated in the Rāmāyaṇa. and they are there termed the sons of Kriśva by Jayā and Vijayā, daughters of the Prajāpati; that is, of Dakṣa. The Bhāgavata terms the two wives of Krisāswa, Arciṣ (flame) and Dhiṣ anā; the former is the mother of Dhūmaketu (comet); the latter, of four sages, Devala, Vedaśiras, Vayuṇa. and Manu. The allegorical origin of the weapons is undoubtedly the more ancient.

27. This number is founded upon a text of the Vedas, which to the eight Vasus. eleven Rudras, and twelve Adityas. adds Prajāpati, either Brahmā or Dakṣa, and Vaśatkāra 'deified oblation अष्टौ वसव एकदाश रुद्रा द्वादशादित्या: प्रजापतिर्वषट्कारश्चेति श्रुत्युक्ताः। They have the epithet Chhandaजा, as born in different Manvantaras, of their own will : छन्दतः स्वेच्छातो जायन्ते छन्दजाः।

28. The Purāṇas generally concur in this genealogy, reading sometimes Anuhrāda, Hrāda, etc. for Anuhláda and the rest. Although placed second in the order of Kaśyapa's descendants, the Daityas are in fact the elder branch. Thus the Mahābhārata, Mokṣa Dharma, calls Diti the senior wife of Kaśyapa : तासां ज्येष्ठाभवद्वितीः। and the Vāyu terms Hiranyaśipu and Hiranyākṣa the eldest of all the sons of that patriarch: कश्यपस्यात्मजौ तौ वै सर्वेभ्यः पूर्वजौ स्मृतौ। So, "Titan and his enormous brood" were "heaven's first born."

Maitreya said—Venerable Muni, you have described to me the races of human beings and the eternal Viṣṇu, the cause of this world; but who was this mighty Prahlāda, whc whom you have last spoken; whom fire could not burn; who died not, when pierced by weapons; at whose presence in the waters earth trembled, even though in bonds; and who, overwhelmed with rocks, remained unhurt. I am desirous to bear an account of the unequalled might of that sage worshipper of Viṣṇu, to whose marvellous history you have alluded. Why was he assailed by the weapons of the sons of Diti ? why was so righteous a person thrown into the sea? wherefore was he overwhelmed with rocks? why bitten by venomous snakes? why hurled from the mountain crest? why cast into the flames? why was he made a mark for the tusks of the elephants of the spheres ? wherefore was the blast of death directed against him by the enemies of the gods? why did the priests of the Daityas practise ceremonies for his destruction; why were the thousand illusions of Samvara exercised upon him? and for what purpose was deadly poison administered to him by the servants of the king, but which was innocuous as food to his sagacious son?

All this I am anxious to hear: the history of the magnanimous Prahlāda; a legend of great marvels. Not that it is a wonder that he should have been uninjured by the Daityas; for who can injure the man that fixes his whole heart on Viṣṇu? but it is strange that such inveterate hatred should have been shown, by his own sin, to one so virtuous, so unweariedly occupied in worshipping Viṣṇu. You can explain to me for what reason the sons of Diti offered violence to one so pious, so illustrious, so attached to Viṣṇu, so free from guile. Generous enemies wage no war with such as he was, full of sanctity and every excellence; how should his own father thus behave cowards him? Tell me therefore, most illustrious Muni, the whole story in detail: I wish to hear the entire narrative of the sovereign of the Daitya race.

Parāsara said—Listen Maitreya, to the story of the wise and magnanimous Prahlāda, whose adventures are ever interesting and instructive. Hiranyakaśipu, the son of Diti, had formerly brought the three worlds under his authority, confiding in a boon bestowed upon him by Brahmā.¹ He had usurped the sovereignty of Indra, and exercised of himself the functions of the sun, of air, of the lord of waters, of fire, and of the moon. He himself was the god of riches; he was the judge of the dead; and he appropriated to himself, without reserve, all that was offered in sacrifice to the gods. The deities therefore, flying from their seats in heaven, wandered, through fear of the Daitya, upon the earth, disguised in mortal shapes. Having conquered the three worlds, he was inflated with pride, and, eulogized by the Gandharvas, enjoyed whatever he desired. The Gandharvas the Siddhas, and the snake-gods all attended upon the mighty Hiranyakaśipu, as he sat at the banquet. The Siddhas delighted stood before him, some playing on musical instruments, some singing songs in his praise, and others shouting cries of victory; whilst the nymphs of heaven danced gracefull in the crystal palace, where the Asura with pleasure quaffed the inebriating cup.

The illustrious son of the Daitya king, Prahlāda, being yet a boy, resided in the dwelling of his preceptor, where he read such writings as are studied in early years. On one occasion he came, accompanied by his teacher, to the court of his father, and bowed before his feet as he was drinking. Hiranyakaśipu desired his prostrate son to rise, and said to him, Prahlāda replied— “Hear, O sire, what in obedience to your commands I will repeat, the substance of all I have learned: listen attentively to that which wholly occupies my thoughts. I have learned to adore him who if without beginning, middle, or end, increase or diminution; the imperishable lord of the world, the universal causes.”

His father then endeavoured to persuade him to refrain from glorifying his enemy, and promised him immunity if he would not be so foolish as to persevere: but Prahlāda replied, that he felt no fear as long as his immortal guardian against all dangers was present in his mind, the recollection of whom was alone sufficient to dissipate all the perils consequent upon birth or human infirmities.

That the dead are born again, and that it cannot be otherwise, the sacred texts are warrant: but production, cannot be without a material cause; and as long as conception and parturition are the material causes of repeated birth, so long, be sure, is pain inseparable from every period of existence. The simpleton, in his inexperience, fancies that the alleviation of hunger, thirst, cold, and the like is pleasure; but of a truth it is pain; for suffering gives delight to those whose vision is darkened by delusion, as fatigue would be enjoyment to limbs that are incapable of motion.³

The agreeableness of fire is caused by cold; of water, by thirst; of food, by hunger: by other circumstances their contraries are equally agreeable.⁴ The child of the Daitya who takes to himself a wife introduces only so much misery into his bosom; for as many as are the cherished affections of a living creature, so many are the thorns of anxiety implanted in his heart; and he who has large possessions in his house is haunted, wherever he goes, with the apprehension that they may be lost or burnt or stolen. Thus there is great pain in being born: for the dying man there are the tortures of the judge of the deceased, and of passing again into the womb. If you conclude that there is little enjoyment in the embryo state, you must then admit that the world is made up of pain.

If you say, you know nothing of this; 'we are children; embodied spirit in bodies is eternal; birth, youth, decay, are the properties of the body, not of the soul.' But it is in this way that we deceive ourselves. 'I am yet a child; but it is my purpose to exert myself when I am a youth. I am yet a youth; but when I become old I will do what is needful for the good of my soul.'

I am now old, and all my duties are to be fulfilled. How shall I, now that my faculties fail me do what was left undone when my strength was unimpaired? In this manner do men, whilst their minds are distracted by sensual pleasures, ever propose, and never attain final beatitude: they the thirsting. Devoted in childhood to play, and in youth to pleasure, ignorant and impotent they find that old age is come upon them. Therefore even in childhood let the embodied soul acquire discriminative wisdom, and, independent of the conditions of infancy, youth, or age, strive incessantly to be freed.

Let all your thoughts and affections be fixed on him, who is present in all beings, and you shall laugh at every care.

The whole world is suffering under a triple affliction⁷ What wise man would feel hatred towards beings who are objects of compassion? If fortune be propitious to them, and I am unable to partake of the like enjoyments, yet wherefore should I cherish malignity towards those who are more prosperous than myself? I should rather sympathise with their happiness; for the suppression of malignant feelings is of itself a reward.⁸ If beings are hostile, and indulge in hatred, they are objects of pity to the wise, as encompassed by profound delusion.

These are the reasons for repressing hate which are adapted to the capacities of those who see the deity distinct from his creatures. Hear, briefly, what influences those who have approached the truth. This whole world is but a manifestation of Viśṇu, who is identical with all things : and it if therefore to be regarded by the wise as not differing from, but as the same with themselves. Let us therefore lay aside the angry passions of our race, and so strive that we obtain that perfect, pure, and eternal happiness, which shall be beyond the power of the elements or their deities, of fire, of the sun, of the moon, of wind, of Indra, of the regent of the sea; which shall be unmolested by spirits of air or earth; by Yakṣas, Daityas, or their chiefs; by the serpent-gods or monstrous demigods of Svarga; which shall be uninterrupted by men or beasts, or by the infirmities of human nature; by bodily sickness and disease,⁹ or hatred, envy, malice, passion, or desire; which nothing shall molest, and which every one who fixes his whole heart on Keśava shall enjoy.

इति श्रीबिष्णुपुराणे प्रथमांशे सप्तदशोऽध्यायः।

Verily I say unto you, that you shall have no satisfaction in various revolutions through this treacherous world, but that you will obtain placidity for ever by propitiating Viṣṇu, whose adoration is perfect calm. What here is difficult of attainment, when he is pleased ? Wealth, pleasure, virtue, are things of little moment. Precious is the fruit that you shall gather, be assured, from the exhaustless store of the tree of true wisdom."

NOTES

1. The boon, according to the Vāyu Purāṇa, was, that he should not be slain by any created being : the Kūrma adds, except by Viṣṇu. The Bhāgavata has a similar boon as the Vāyu, and therefore, says the commentator. Viṣṇu assumed the form of the Nr̥siṁha, as being that of neither a man nor an animal.

2. The Purāṇas teach constantly incompatible doctrines. According to this passage, the Supreme Being is not the inert cause of creation only.. but exercises the functions of an active Providence. The commentator quotes a text of the Veda in support of this view: शास्ता जनानां सर्वात्मा। Universal soul entering into men, governs their conduct.' Incongruities, however, are as frequent in the Vedas as in the Purāṇas; but apparently the most ancient parts of the Hindu ritual recognised an active ruler in the Creator of the universe; the notion of abstract deity originating with the schools of philosophy.

3. This is the purport of the sentence apparently, and is that which the comment in part confirms. Literally it is, 'A blow is the pleasure of those whose eyes are darkened by ignorance, whose limbs, exceedingly benumbed, desire pleasure by exercise.' The commentator divides the sentence, however, and reads it, 'As fatigue would be like pleasure to paralyzed limbs; and a blow is enjoyment to those who are blinded by delusion; that is, by love; for to them a slap, or even a kick, from a mistress would be a favour.' It is not improbably an allusion to some such venerable pastime as blindman's buff. The interpretation, however, leaves the construction of the first half of the sentence imperfect, unless the nominative and verb apply to both portions : अत्यन्तस्मितांगानां व्यायामेन सुखैषिणां भान्तिज्ञानावृताक्षणां प्रहारोऽपि सुखायते।

4. They are so far from being sources of pleasure in themselves, that, under different contrasts, they become sources of pain. Heat is agreeable in cold weather : cold is agreeable in hot weather; heat would then be disagreeable. Drink is pleasant to a thirsty man : thirst is agreeable to one who has drunk too much; and more drink would be painful. So of food, and of other contrasts.

5. 'Divine knowledge is the province only of those who can separate soul from body : that is, who live independent of bodily infirmities and passions. We have not overcome corporeal vicissitudes, and have therefore no concern with such abstruse inquiries.' This is the commentator's explanation of the passage,

6. पिपासितः। Alluding, says the commentator, to the fable of a washerman, who, whilst washing his clothes in the Ganges, proposed daily to drink of its waters, but forgot his purpose in his occupation : or of a boy, who proposed the same as he pursued fish after fish, and never accomplished his intention, being engrossed by his sport : both died without drinking.

7. The three kinds of affliction of the Sāṃkya philosophy : internal, as bodily or mental distress; external, as injuries from men, animals etc.; and superhuman, or inflictions by gods or demons. See S. Kārikā, ver. 1.

8. The construction of the text is elliptical and brief, but the sense is sufficiently clear. अथ भद्राणि भूतानि हीन शक्तिरहंपरं। मुदं तथापि कुर्व्वत हानिद्वेषफलं यतः॥ The order of the last pāda is thus transposed by the commentator : यतो द्वेषस्य हानेरेव फलं। 'Whence (from feeling pleasure) the abandonment of enmity is verily the consequence.'

9. The orininal rather unpoetically specifies some of these, or fever, ophthalmia, dysentery, spleen, liver, etc. The whole of these defects are the individuals of the three species of pain alluded to before.

The Dānavas, observing the conduct of Prahlāda, reported it to the king, least they should incur his displeasure. He sent for his cooks, and said to them,

O cooks! My vile and unprincipled son is now teaching others his impious doctrines: be quick, and put an end to him. Let deadly poison be mixed up with all his vaids, without his knowledge. Hesitate not, but destroy the wretch without delay,

Accordingly they did so, and administered poison to the virtuous Prahlāda, as his father had commanded them. Prahlāda, repeating the name of the imperishable, ate and digested the food in which the deadly poison had been infused, and suffered no harm from it, either in body or mind for it had been rendered innocuous by the name of the eternal. Beholding the strong poison digested, those who had prepared the food were filled with dismay, and hastened to the king, and fell down before him, and said, Cooks said— “King of the Daityas, the fearful poison given by us to your son has been digested by him along with his food, as if it were innocent.

Your father is the stay of all worlds, as you they self in turn shall be. Desist, then, from celebrating the praises of an enemy; and remember, that of all venerable preceptors, a father is most venerable.

Prahlaða replied to them, "Illusctious Brähmañas, it is true that the Family of Marīchi is renowned in the three worlds; this cannot be denied: and I also admit, what is equally indisputable, that my father is mighty over the universe. There is no error, not the least, in what you have said, 'that a father is the most venerable of all holy teachers.' he is a venerable instructor, no doubt, and is ever to be devoutly reverenced. To all these things I have nothing to object; they find a ready assent in my mind: but when you say, 'Why should I depend upon the eternal?' who can give assent to this as right ? the words are void of meaning."

Having said thus much, he was silent awhile, being restrained by respect to their sacred functions; but he was unable to repress his smiles, and again said, "What need is there of the eternal? admirable! most worthy of you who are my venerable preceptors. Hear what need there is of the eternal. If to hearken will not give you pain. The fourfold objects of men are said to be virtue, desire, wealth, final emancipation. Is he who is the source of all these of no avail ? Virtue was derived from the eternal by Dakṣa, Marīchi, and other patriarchs; wealth has been obtained from him by others; and by others, the enjoyment of their desires: whilst those who, through true wisdom and holy contemplation, have come to know his essence, have been released from their bondage, and have attained freedom from existence for ever. The glorification of Hari, attainable by unity, is the root of all riches, dignity, renown, wisdom, progeny, righteousness, and liberation. Virtue, wealth, desire, and even final freedom, Brahmans, are fruits bestowed by him. How then can it be said, 'What need is there of the eternal ? But enough of this: what occasion is there to say more? You are my venerable preceptors, and speak you good or evil, it is not for my weak judgment to decide."

Thus spoken to by the youth, the priests of the Daitya sovereign were incensed, and instantly had recourse to magic incantations, by which a female form, enwreathed with fierce flame, was engendered: she was of fearful aspect, and the earth was parched beneath her tread, as she approached Prahlāda, and smote him with a fiery trident on the breast. In vain! for the weapon fell, broken into a hundred pieces, upon the ground. Against the breast in which the imperishable Hari resides the thunderbold would be shivered, much more should such a weapon be split in pieces. The magic being, then directed against the virtuous prince by the wicked priests, turned upon them, and, having quickly destroyed them, disappeared. But Prahlāda, beholding them perish, hastily appealed to Kṛṣṇa, the eternal, for succour, and said,

NOTES

1. This is not the doctrine of the impossibility of soul, taught in the Vedas : हन्ता चेभ्यते हन्तुं हतश्चेभ्यते हतं। उभौ तौ न विजानीयो नायं हन्ति न हन्यते 'We do not recognise either the doctrine that supposes the slayer to slay or the slain to be killed; this (spiritual existence) neither kills nor is killed.' The same is inculcated at great length, and with great beauty, in the Bhāgavat Gitā : नैनं छिन्दन्ति शस्त्राणि नैनं दहति पावकः। नै चैनं क्लेदयन्त्यापो न शोषयति मारुतः॥ 'Weapons wound it not; fire doth not consume it; water cannot drown it; nor doth it wither before the winds:' or, as rendered by Schlegel, 'Non illum penetrant tela; non illum comburit flamma; neque illum perfundunt aquae; nec ventus exsiccat,' P.17. new edition. But in the passage of our text, all that the Hindus understand of Fate, is referred to. Death or immunity, prosperity or adversity, are in this life the inevitable consequences of conduct in a prior existence : no man can suffer a penalty which his vices in a preceding state of being have not incurred, nor can he avoid it if they have.

I wish no evil to any, and do and speak no offence; for I behold Keśava in all beings, as in my own soul. Accordingly the Daityas hurled the boy down, and he fell cherishing Hari in his heart, and Earth, the nurse of all creatures, received him gently on her lap, thus entirely devoted to Keśava, the protector of the world.

Then the ignorant Asura Samvara practised subtle wiles for the extermination of the firm-minded Prahlāda: but he, with a tranquil heart, and void of malice towards Samvara, directed his thoughts uninterruptedly to the destroyer of Madhu; by whom the excellent discus, the flaming Sudarsana, was dispatched to defend the youth; and the thousand devices of the evil-destined Samvara were every one foiled by this defender of the prince. The king of the Daityas then commanded the withering wind to breathe its blighting blast upon his son: and, thus commanded, the wind immediately penetrated into his frame, 'cold, cutting, drying, and insufferable. Knowing that the wind had entered into his' body, the Daitya boy applied his whole heart to the mighty upholder of the earth, and Janārddana, seated in his heart, waxed wroth, and drank up the fearful wind, which had thus hastened to its own annihilation.

Hiranyakashipu therefore summoned the prince to his presence, and desired him to repeat what he had learned; how a king should conduct himself towards friends or foes; what measures he should adopt at the three periods (of advance, retrogression, or stagnation); how he should treat his councillors, his ministers, the officers of his government and of his household, his emissaries, his subjects, those of doubtful allegiance, and his foes; with whom should he contract alliance; with whom engage in war; what sort of fortress he should construct; how forest and mountain tribes should be reduced; how internal grievances should be rooted out: all this, and what else he had studied, the youth was commanded by his father to explain.

"It is true that I have been instructed in all these matters by my venerable preceptor, and I have learnt them, but I cannot in all approve them. It is said that conciliation, gifts, punishment, and sowing dissension are the means of securing friends (or overcoming foes); but I, father—bc not angry—"know neither friends nor foes, and where no object is to be accomplished, the means of effecting it are superfluous. It were idle to talk of friend or foe in Govinda, who is the supreme soul, lord of the world, consisting of the world, and who is identical with all beings. The divine Viṣṇu is in you, father, in me and in all every where else; and hence how can I speak of friend or foe, as distinct from myself? It is therefore waste of time to cultivate such tedious and unprofitable sciences, which are but false knowledge, and all our energies should be dedicated to the acquirement of true wisdom. The notion that ignorance is knowledge arises, father, from ignorance. Does not the child, king of the Asuru, imagine the firefly to be a spark of fire?

That is active duty, which is not for our bondage; that is knowledge, which is for our liberation: all other duty is good only unto weariness; all other knowledge is only the cleverness of an artist. Knowing this, I look upon all such acquirement as profitless. That which is really profitable hear me, oh mighty monarch, thus prostrate before you, proclaim. He who cares not for dominion, he who cares not for wealth, shall assuredly obtain both in a life to come. All men, illustrious prince, are toiling to be great; but the destinies of men, and not their own exertions, are the cause of greatness. Kingdoms are the gifts of fate, and are bestowed upon the stupid, the ignorant, the cowardly, and those to whom the science of government is unknown. Let him therefore who covets the goods of fortune be assiduous in the practice of virtue: let him who hopes for final liberation learn to look upon all things as equal and the same. Gods, men, animals, birds, reptiles, all are but forms of one eternal Viṣṇu, existing as it were detached from himself. By him who knows this, all the existing world, fixed or movable, is to be regarded as identical with himself, as proceeding alike from Viṣṇu, assuming a universal form. When this is known, the glorious god of all who is without beginning or end, is pleased; and when he is pleased, there is an end of affliction."

On hearing this, Hiranyakaśipu started up from his throne in a fury, and spurned his son on the breast with his foot. Burning with rage, he wrung his hands, and exclaimed,

The Daityas accordingly bound the prince with strong bands, as their lord had commanded, and threw him into the sea. As he floated on the waters, the ocean was convulsed throughout its whole extent, and rose in mighty undulations, threatening to submerge the earth.

This when Hiranyakaśipu observed, he commanded the Daityas to hurl rocks into the' sea, and pile them closely on one another, burying beneath their incumbent mass him whom fire would not burn, nor weapons pierce, nor serpents bite; whom the pestilential gale could not blast, nor poison nor magic spirits nor incantations destroy; who fell from the loftiest heights unhurt; who foiled the elephants of the spheres: a son of depraved heart, whose life was a perpetual curse. "Here." he cried, "since he cannot the, here let him live for thousands of years at the bottom of the ocean, overwhelmed by mountains. Accordingly the Daityas and Dānavas hurled upon Prahlāda, whilst in the great ocean, ponderous rocks, and piled them over him for many thousand miles: but he, 'still with mind undisturbed, thus offered daily praise to Viṣṇu, lying at the bottom of the sea, under the mountain heap.

I glorify the supreme deity Viṣṇu, the universal witness, who seated internally, beholds the good and ill of all. Glory to that Viṣṇu from whom this world is not distinct. May he, ever to be meditated -upon as the beginning of the universe have compassion upon me: may he, the supporter of all, in whom every thing is warped and woven', undecaying, imperishable, have compassion upon me. Glory, again and again, to that being to whom all returns, from whom all proceeds; who is all, and in whom all things are: to him whom I also am; for he is every where; and through whom all things are from me. I am all things: all things are in me, who am everlasting. I am undecayable, ever enduring, the receptacle of the spirit of the supreme. Brahma is my name; the supreme soul, that is before all things, that is after the end of all.

NOTES

1. These are the four Upāyas. 'means of success,' specified in the Amara-kośa : मेदोदण्डः साम दानमित्युपायचतुष्टयः।

2. Celebrated Daityas. Bṛhaspati is one of the chief Dānavas, or sons of Danu, and appointed king over them by Brahmā. Rāhu was the son of Sīnhikā, more known as the dragon's head, or ascending node, being a chief agent in eclipses. Bali was sovereign of the three worlds in the time of the dwarf incarnation, and afterwards monarch of Pātāla.

3. With Nāgapāśas, "snake-nooses:" tortuous and twining round the limbs like serpents.

4. Acts of devotion—sacrifices, oblations, observance of rules of purification, alms-giving, and the like—opposed to ascetic and contemplative worship, which dispenses with the ritual.

5. Havya and Kavya. oblations of ghee or oiled butter; the former presented to the gods, the latter to the Pitrīs.

6. Mahat, the first product of nature, intellect.

7. The preceding passage was addressed to the Puruṣa, or spiritual nature, of the supreme being: this is addressed to his material essence, his other energy, अपराशक्तिः, that is, to Pradhāna.

8. Or rather, 'woven as the warp and woof;' यत्रोतं प्रोतं विष्णुं—उत meaning wovea by the long threads, and प्रोत 'by the cross threads.'

Parāśara said—Thus meditating upon Viṣṇu, as identical with his own spirit, Prahlāda became as one with him, and finally regarded himself as the divinity : he forgot entirely his own individuality, and was conscious of nothing else than his being the inexhaustible, eternal, supreme soul; and in consequence of the efficacy of this conviction of identity, the imperishable Viṣṇu, whose essence is wisdom, became present in his heart, which was wholly purified from sin. As soon as, through the force of his contemplation, Prahlāda had become one with Viṣṇu, the bonds with which he was bound burst instantly asunder; the ocean was violently uplifted; and the monsters of the deep were alarmed; earth with all her forests and mountains trembled; and the prince, putting aside the rocks which the demons had piled upon him, came forth from out the main. When he beheld the outer world again, and contemplated earth and heaven, he remembered who he was, and recognised himself to be Prahlāda; and again he hymned Puruṣottama, who is without beginning or end; his mind being steadily and undeviatingly addressed to the object of his prayers, and his speech, thoughts, and acts being firmly under control.

Thus saying, Viśnu vanished from his sight, and Prahlāda repaired to his father, and bowed down before him. His father kissed him on the forehead¹, and embraced him, and shed tears, and said, "Dost you live, my son?" And the great Asura repented of his former cruelty, and treated him with kindness: and Prahlāda, fulfilling his duties like any other youth, continued diligent in the service of his preceptor and his father. After his father had been put to death by Viśnu in the form of the man-lion². Prahlāda became the sovereign of the Daityas; and possessing the splendours of royalty consequent upon his piety, exercised extensive sway, and was blessed with a numerous progeny. At the expiration of an authority which was the reward of his meritorious acts, he was freed from the consequences of moral merit or demerit, and obtained, through meditation on the deity, final exemption from existence.

Such, Maitreya, was the Daitya Prahlāda, the wise and faithful worshipper of Viśnu, of whom you wished to hear; and such was his miraculous power. Whoever listens to the history of Prahlāda is immediately cleansed from his sins: the iniquities that he commits, by night or by day, shall be expiated by once hearing, or once reading, the history of Prahlāda. The perusal of this history on the day of full moon, of new moon, or on the eighth or twelfth day of the lunation, shall yield fruit equal to the donation of a cow⁴. As Viśnu protected Prahlāda in all the calamities to which he was exposed, so shall the deity protect him who listens constantly to The tale⁵.

NOTES

1. Literally, 'having smelt his forehead.' I have elsewhere had had occasion to observe this practice : Hindu Theatre. 11. 45.

2. Here is another instance of that brief reference to popular and prior legends, which is frequent in this Purāṇa. The man-lion Avatāra is referred to in several of the Purāṇas, but I have met with the story in detail only in the Bhāgavata. It is there said that Hiranyakaśipu asks his son, why if Viśnu is everywhere, he is not visible in a pillar in the hall, where they are assembled. He then rises, and strikes the column with his first: on which Viśnu, in a form which is neither wholly a lion nor a man, issues from it, and a conflict ensues, which ends in Hiranyakaśipu's being torn to pieces. Even this account, therefore, is not in all particulars the same as the popular version of the story.

3. The days of full and new moon are sacred with all sects of Hindus : the eighth and twelfth days of the lunar half month were considered holy by the Vaiṣṇavas, as appears from the text. The eighth maintains its character in a great degree from the eighth of Bhādra being the birthday of Kṛṣṇa; but the eleventh, in more recent Vaiṣṇava works, as the Brahma Vaivarta Purāṇa, has taken the place of the twelfth, and is even more sacred than the eighth.

4. Or any solemn gift: that of a cow is held particularly sacred; but it implies accompaniments of a more costly character, ornaments and gold.

5. The legend of Prahlāda is inserted in detail in the Bhāgavata and Nāradīya Purāṇas, and in the Uttara Khaṇḍa of the Pādma: it is adverted to more briefly' in the Vāyu, Liṅga, Kūrma, etc . in the Mokṣa Dharma of the Mahābhārata, and in the Hari Varmśa.

The sons of Samīhrāda, the son of Hiranyakaśipu were Āyauṣmān, Śivi, and Vāskala¹. Prahīlāda had a son named Virocana; whose son was Bali, who had a hundred sons, of whom Bāṇa was the eldest². Hiranyākṣa also had many sons, all of whom were Daityas of great prowess; Utkura, Śakuni, Bhūtasantāpana, Mahānābha, the mighty-armed and the valiant Tāraka. These were the sons of Diti".

The children of Kaśyapa by Danu were Dvīmūrddhā, Śankara, Ayomukha, Śārikuśiras, Kapila, Samvara, Ekachakra, and another mighty Tāraka, Svarbhānu, Vṛṣaparvan, Puloman, and the powerful Vipracitti; these were the renowned Dānavas, or sons of Danu⁴. Swarbhānu had a daughter named Prabhā⁵; and Śarmiṣṭhā⁶ was the daughter of Vṛṣaparvan, as were Upadānavī and Hayaśirā⁷.

Vaiśvānara⁸ had two daughters, Pulomā and Kālikā, who were both married to Kaśyapa, and bore him sixty thousand distinguished Dānavas, called Paulomas and Kālakanjas⁹, who were powerful, ferocious, and cruel.

The sons of Vipracitti by Sinhikā (the sister of Hiranyakaśipu) were Vyānsa, Śalya the strong, Nabha the powerful, Vatāpi, Namuchi, Ilwala, Khasrima, Anjaka, Nāraka, and Kālanābha, the valiant Swarbhānu, and the mighty Vakttayodhi¹⁰. These were the most eminent Dānavas¹¹, through whom the race of Danu was multiplied by hundred, and thousands through succeeding generations.

In the family of the Daitya Prablāda, the Nivāta Kavachas were born, whose spirits were purified by rigid austerity¹². Tāmrā (the wife of Kaśyapa) had six illustrious daughters, named Śukī, Syenī, Bhāsi, Sugrīvī, Suchī, and Gridhrkā. Śukī gave birth to parrots, owls, and crows¹³; Syenī to hawks; Bhāsi to kites; Grdhrkā to vultures; Śuci to water-fowl; Sugrīvī to horses, camels, and asses, Such were the progeny of Tāmrā.

Vinatā bore to Kaśyapa two celebrated sons, Garūda and Aruṇa : the former, also called Suparṇa, was the king of the feathered tribes, and the remorseless enemy of the serpent race¹⁴.

The progeny of Kadru were a thousand powerful many-headed serpents, of immeasurable might, subject to Garuda; the chief amongst whom were Śeṣa, Vāsukī Takṣuka, Śankha, Śweta, Mahāpadma, Kambala, Asvatara, Elāpatra, Nāga, Karkkota, Dhananjaya, and many other fierce and venomous serpents,¹⁶.

amongst the birds, or in the waters, that were devourers of flesh.

This creation, oh Brahman, took place in the second or Śvārocīśa Manvantara. In the present or Vaivasvata Manvantara, Brahmā being engaged at the great sacrifice instituted by Varuṇa, the creation of progeny, as it is called, occurred; for he begot, as his sons. the seven Ṛsis, who were formerly mind-engendered; and was himself the grandsire of the Gandharvas, serpents, Dānavas, and gods"²³.

Diti, having lost her children, propitiated Kaśyapa; and the best of ascetics, being pleased with her, promised her a boon; on which she prayed for a son of irresistible prowess and valour, who should destroy Indra. The excellent Muni granted his wife the great gift she had solicited, but with one condition : "You shall bear a son," he said, "who shall slay Indra, if with thoughts wholly pious, and person entirely pure, you carefully carry the babe in your womb for a hundred years. Having thus said, Kaśyapa departed; and the dame conceived, and during gestation assiduously observed the rules of mental and personal purity. When the king of the immortals learnt that Diti bore a son destined for his destruction, he came to her, and attended upon her with the utmost humility, watching for an opportunity to disappoint her intention.

At last, in the last year of the century, the opportunity occurred. Diti retired one night to rest without performing the prescribed ablution of her feet, and fell asleep; on which the thunderer divided with his thunderbolt the embryo in her womb into seven portions, The child, thus mutilated, cried bitterly; and Indra repeatedly attempted to console and silence it, but in vain: on which the god, being incensed, again divided each of the seven portions into seven, and thus formed the swift-moving deities called Marutas (winds). They derived this appellation from the words with which Indra bad addressed them (Mā rodih, 'Weep not'); and they became forty-nine subordinate divinities, the associates of the wielder of the thunderbolt.²⁴

NOTES

1. The Pādma Purāṇa makes these the sons of Prahlāda. The Bhāgavata says there were five sons, but does not give the names. It also insects the sons of Hlāda, making them the celebrated demons Ilwala and Vatāpi. The Vāyu refers to Hlāda, other Daityas, famous in Paurāṇic legend, making his son, Nisunda; and his sons, Sunda and Upasunda : the former the father of Marīcha and Tārakā; the latter, of Mūka.

2. The Pādma Purāṇa and Vāyu name several of these, but they are not of any note : the latter gives the names of two daughters, who are more celebrated, Pūtanā and Śakuni.

3. The descendants of Hiranyṅkṣa are said, in the Pādma Purāṇa, to have extended to seventy-seven crores, or seven hundred and seventy millions. Some copies, for Tāraka, read Kālanābha.

4. The Pādma and Vāyu Purāṇa furnish a much longer list of names, but those of most note are the same as of the text, with which also the Bhāgavata for the most part agrees.

5. The Bhāgavata makes Prabhā the wife of Namuci : according to the Vāyu, she is the mother of Nahuṣa.

6. Married to Yayāti, as will be related.

7. The text might be understood to imply that the latter two were the daughters of Vaiśvānara; and the Bhāgavata has, "The four lovely daughters of Vaiśvānara were Upadānavī, Hayasīras, Pulomā, and Kēlakā." The Pādma substitutes Vajrā and Sundarī for the two former names. The Vāyu specifies only Puloma and Kālikā as the daughters of Vaiśvānara, as does our text. Upadānavī, according to the Bhāgavata, is the wife of Hiranyākṣa : and Hayasīras, of Kratu,

8. Though not specified by the text as one of the Dānavas, he is included in the catalogue of the Vāyu, and the commentator on the Bhāgavata calls him a son of Danu.

9. The word is also read Kūlakas and Kālakeyas: the Mahābhārata, I. 643, has Kālakanjas.

10. The text omits the two most celebrated of the Sainhikeyas, or sons of Sinhikā, Rāhu (see ch. IX. note 8.) and Ketu, who are specified both in the Bhāgavata and the Vāyu, the former as the eldest son. Of the other sons it is said by the Vāyu that they were all killed by Paraśurāma.

11. Two names of note, found in the Vāyu, are omitted by the Viśnu; that of Puloman, the father of Sachī, the wife of Indra, and mother of Jayanta; and Māyā, the father of Vajrakāmā and Mahodarī.

12. The Bhāgavata says the Paulomas were killed by Arjuna, who therefore, the commentator observes, were the same as the Nivāta Kavachas: but the Mahābhārata describes the destruction of the Nivāta Kavachas and of the Paulomas and Kālakeyas as the successive exploits of Arjuna. Vana Purāṇa 8. I. 633. The story is narrated of detail only in the Mahābhārata, which is consequently prior to all the Purāṇas in which the allusion occurs. According to that work, the Nivāta Kavachas were Dānavas, to the number of thirty millions, residing in the depths of the sea: and the Paulomas and Kālakanjas were the children of two Daitya dames, Pulomā and Kālakā, inhabiting Hiranyakapura, the golden city, floating in the air.

13. All the copies read शुको शुकानजनयद्गूकी प्रत्युलूककान् which should be, Śūki bore parrots; and Ulūki, the several sorts of owls: but Ulukī is nowhere named as one of the daughters of Tāmrā; and the reading may be, उलूकप्रत्युलूककान्. 'Owls and birds opposed to owls, i. e., crows. The authorities generally concur with our text; but the Vāyu has a somewhat different account: or, Śūki, married to Garuḍa, the mother of parrots; Śyeni, married to Aruṇa, mother of Sampati and Jatāyu: Bhāsi, the mother of jays, owls, crows, peacocks, pigeons, and fowls: Krauñci, the parent of curlews, herons, cranes: and Dhṛtarāṣṭri, the mother of geese, ducks, teal, and other water-fowl. The three last are also called the wives of Garuḍa.

14. Most of the Purāṇas agree in this account: but the Bhāgavata makes Vinatā the wife of Tārkṣa and in this place substitutes Saramā, the mother of wild animals. The Vāyu adds the metres of the Vedas as the daughters of Vinatā: and the Pādma gives her one daughter Sau-dāminī.

15. The dragons of modern fable. Anāyuṣa or Dānayuṣa is substituted for Surasā in the Vāyu, and in one of the accounts of the Pādma. The Bhāgavata says Rākṣasas were her offspring. The Matsya has both Surasā and Anāyuṣa, making the former the parent of all quadrupeds, except cows; the latter, the mother of diseases.

16. The Vāyu names forty: the most noted amongst whom, in addition to those of the text, are Airāvata, Dhṛtarāṣṭra, Mahānila Balāhaka, Añjana, Puṣpadanṣṭra, Durmukha, Kāliya, Puṇḍarīka, Kapila, Nāhuṣa, and Maṇi.

17. By Danṣṭra (दण्टः) some understand serpents, some Rākṣasas; but by the context carnivorous animals, birds, and fishes seem intended, the Vāyu makes Krodhavaṣa the mother of twelve daughters, Mrgi and others, from whom all wild animals, deer, elephants, monkeys, tigers, lions, dogs, also fishes, reptiles, and Bhūtas and Piśāchas, or goblins, sprang.

18. One copy only inserts a half stanza here; "Krodhā was the mother of the Piśāchas," which is an interpolation apparently from the Mataya or Hari Variṣṭha. The Pādma Purāṇa, second legend, makes Krodhā the mother of the Bhūtas; and Piśācā, of the Piśācās.

19. The Bhāgavata says, of animals with cloven hoofs. -The Vāyu has, of the eleven Rudras, of the bull of Śiva, and of two daughters, Rohinī and Gandharbī: from the former of whom descended horned cattle; and from the latter, horses.

20. According to the Vāyu, Khasā had two sons, Yakṣa and Rākṣas, severally the progenitors of those beings.

21. The Padma, second series, makes Vāch the mother of both Apsarasas and Gandharvas: the Vāyu has long lists of the names of both classes, as well as of Vidyādharaś and Kinnaraś. The Apsaraś are distinguished as of two kinds, Laukika, 'worldly,' of whom thirty-four are specified; and Daivika, or 'divine,' ten in number: the latter furnish the individuals most frequently engaged in the interruption of the penances of holy sages, such as Menakā. Sahajanyā, Ghṛtācī. Pramlocā, Visvāci, and Pūrvacitī. Urvaśī is of a different order to both, being the daughter of Nārāyaṇa. Rambhā, Tillotamā, Misrakeśī. are included amongst the Laukika nymphs. There are also fourteen Ganas, or troops, of Apsaraas, bearing peculiar designations, as Āhūtas. Sobhayantīs, Vagavatīs, etc.

22. The Kūrma, Matsya, Brahma, Liṅga. Agni. Padma, and Vāyu Purāṇas agree generally with our text in the description of Kaśyapa's wives and progeny. The Vāyu enters most into details, and contains very long catalogues of the names of the different characters descended from the sage. The Pādma and Matsya and the Hari Varmā repeat the story, but admit several variations, some of which have been adverted to in the preceding notes.

23. We have a considerable variation here in the commentary, and it may be doubted if the allusion in the text is accurately explained by either of the versions. In one it is said that 'Brahmā. the grandsire of the Gandharvas. etc., appointed the seven Ṛṣis. who were born in a former Manvantara. to be his sons. or to be the intermediate agents in creation : he created no other beings himself, being engrossed by the sacrificial ceremony : पूर्वमन्तरोत्पत्रात् सप्तर्षीन् देवदानवगन्धक्षदीनां पितामहो ब्रह्मा पुत्रत्वे प्रजासागर्थिकरे कल्यायामास न त्वन्यात् ससर्ज स्वयं तद्यज्ञव्यापृतत्वात्। Instead of "putratwe," 'in the state of sons.' the reading is sometimes "Pitṛatwe." in the character of fathers.' that is, to all other beings. Thus the gods and the rest, who in a former Manvantara originated from Kaśyapa, were created in the present period as the offspring of the seven Ṛṣis. The other explanation agrees with the preceding in ascribing the birth of all creatures to the intermediate agency of the seven Ṛṣis, but calls them the actual sons of Brahmā, begotten at the sacrifice of Varuna, in the sacrificial fire : एवं कथा क्रतौ व्यापृतेन ब्रह्मणा देवकन्यादर्शनस्कत्रे रेतसि आनौ हुते जाताः सतर्षयः पुत्रत्वे कल्पिता इति। authority for the story is not given, beyond its being in other Purāṇas, पुराणान्तरेषु it has the air of a modern mystification. The latter member of the passage is separated altogether from the foregoing, and carried on to what follows : thus; "In the war of the Gandharvas, serpents. gods and demons, Diti having lost her children," etc.: the word 'virodhā' being understood, it is said, विरोध इति

शेषे। This is defended by the authority of the Hari Varmā, where the passage occurs word for word, except in the last half stanza, which, instead of गन्धवभोगिदेवानां दानवानां स सत्तम्! occurs ततो विरोधे देवानां दानवानां च भारत। The parallel passages are thus rendered by M. Langlois : 'Le Mouni Svarotchicha avoit cessé de régner quand cette création eut lieu : c'était sous l'empire du Menoa Vevasvata le sacrifice de Varouna avait commencé. La première création fut celle de Brahmā, quand il Jugea qu'il était temps de procéder à son sacrifice, et que, souverain aïeul du monde- il forma lui-même dans sa peau et enfanta les sept Brahmarchis.'

24. This legend occurs in all those Purāṇas in which the account of Kaśyapa's family is related.

Parāśara said— When Pṛthu was installed in the government of the earth, the great father of the spheres established sovereignties in other pares of the creation. Soma was appointed monarch of the stars and planets, of Brabmans and of planes, of sacrifices and of penance. Vaisravaṇa was made lung over kings; and Varuna, over the waters. Viṣṇu was the chief of the Ādityas; Pāvaka, of the Vasus; Dakṣa, of the patriarchs; Vāsava of the winds. To Prahlāda was assigned dominion over the Daityas and Dānavas; and Yama, the king of Justice, was appointed the monarch of the Manes (Pitṛs). Aitāvata was made the king of elephants; Garuḍa of birds; Indra, of the gods. Ucchaiśravas was the chief of horses; Vṛṣabha, of kine. Śesha became the snake-king; the lion, the monarch of the beasts; and the sovereign of the trees was the holy fig-tree.¹

Having thus fixed the limits of each auehority, the great progenitor Brahmā stationed rulers for the protection of the different quarters of the world: he made Sudhanvan, the son of the patriarch Virāja, the regent of the east; Saikhapāda, the son or the patriarch Kardama, of the south; the unmortal Ketumat, the son of Rajas, regent of the west, and Hiranyaroman, the son of the patriarch Parjanya, regent of the north.³ By these the whole earth, with its seven continents and its cities, is to the present day vigilantly protected, according to their several limits.

इत्यं चतुर्था संसृष्टौ वर्त्तेऽसौ रजोगुणः॥ २ ४॥

All these monarchs, and whatever others may be invested with authority by the mighty Viṣṇu, as instruments for the preservation of the world; all the kings who have been, and all who shall be; are all, most worthy Brahman, but portions of the universal Viṣṇu. The rulers of the gods, the rulers of the Daityas, the rulers of the Dānavas, and the rulers of all malignant spirits; the chief amongst beasts, amongst birds, amongst men, amongst serpents; the best of trees, of mountains, of planets; either those that now are, or that shall hereafter be, the most exalted of their kind; are but portions of the universal Viṣṇu. The power of protecting created things, the preservation of the world, resides with no other than Hari, the lord of all. He is the creator, who creates the world; he, the eternal, preserves it in its existence; and he, the destroyer, destroys it; invested severally with the attributes of foulness, goodness, and gloom. By a fourfold manifestation does Janārddana operate in creation, preservation, and destruction. In one portion, as Brahmā, the invisible assumes a visible form; in another portion he, as Marīchi and the rest, is the progenitor of all creatures; his third portion is time; his fourth is all beings: and thus he becomes quadruple in creation, invested with the quality of passion.

In the preservation of the world he is, in one portion, Viṣṇu; in another portion he is Maun and the other patriarchs; he is time in a third; and all beings in a fourth portion: and thus, endowed with the property of goodness, Puruṣottama preserves the world. When he assumes the property of darkness, at the end of all things, the unborn deity becomes in one portion Rudra; in another, the destroying fire, in a third, time; and in a fourth, all beings: and thus, in a quadruple form, he is the destroyer of the world. This, Brahman, is the fourfold condition of the deity at all seasons, Brahmā, Dakṣa, time, and all creatures are the four energies of Hari, which are the causes of creation. Viṣṇu, Manu and the rest, time, and all creatures are the four energies of Viṣṇu, which are the causes of duration. Rudra, the destroying fire, time and all creatures are the four energies of Janārddana that are exerted for universal dissolution. In the beginning and the duration of the world, until the period of its end, creation is the work of Brahmā, the patriarchs, and living animals. Brahmā creates in the beginning; then the patriarchs beget progeny; and then animals incessantly multiply their kinds: but Brahmā is not the active agent in creation, independent of time; neither are the patriarchs, nor living animals. So. in the periods of creation and of dissolution the four portions of the god of gods are equally essential.

Whatever, oh Brahman, is engendered by any living being, the body of Hari is cooperative in the birth of that being; so whatever destroys any existing thing, movable or stationary, at any time, is the destroying form of Janārddana as Rudra. Thus Janārddana is the creator, the preserver, and the destroyer of the whole world—being threefold—in the several seasons of creation, preservation, and destruction, according to his assumption of the three qualities: but his highest glory³ is detached from all qualities; for the fourfold essence of the supreme spirit is composed of true wisdom, pervades all things, is only to be appreciated by itself, and admits of no similitude, Parāśara replied—That, Maitreya, which is the cause or a thing is called the means of effecting it; and that which it is the desire of the soul to accomplish is the thing to be effected. The operations of the Yogi who is desirous of liberation, as suppression of breath and the like, are his means: the end is the supreme Brahmā, whence he returns to the world no more. Essentially connected with, and dependant upon, the means employed for emancipation by the Yogi, is discriminative knowledge; and this is the first variety of the condition of Brahmā⁵.

The second sort is knowledge that is to be acquired by the Yogi whose end is escape from suffering, or eternal felicity. The third kind is the ascertainment of the identity of the end and the means, the rejection of the notion of duality. The last kind is the removal of whatever differences may have been conceived by the three first varieties of knowledge, and the consequent contemplation of the true essence of soul. The supreme condition of Viṣṇu, who is one with wisdom, is the knowledge of truth; which requires no exercise; which is not to be taught; which is internally diffused; which is unequalled; the object of which is self-illumination; which is simply existent, and is not to be defined; which is tranquil, fearless, pure; which is not the theme of reasoning; which stands in need of no support⁶.

Those Yogis who, by the annihilation of ignorance, are resolved into this fourfold Brahmā, lose the seminal property, and can no longer germinate in the ploughed field of worldly existence. This is the supreme condition, that is called Viṣṇu, perfect, perpetual, universal, undecaying, entire, and uniform: and the Yogi who attains this supreme spirit (Brahmā) returns not to life again; for there he is freed from the distinction of virtue and vice, from suffering, and from soil.

There are two states of this Brahma', one with, and one without shape; one perishable, and one imperishable; which are inherent in all beings. The imperishable is the supreme being, the perishable is all the world. The blaze of fire burning on one spot diffuses light and heat around, so the world is nothing more than the manifested energy of the supreme Brahmā: and inasmuch as, Maitreya, as the light and heat are stronger or feebler as we are near to the fire, or far off from it, so the energy of the supreme is more or less intense in the beings that are less or more remote from him. Brahmā, Viṣṇu, and Śiva are the most powerful energies of god; next to them are the inferior deities, then the attendant spirits, then men, then animals, birds insects, vegetables; each becoming more and more feeble as they are farther from their primitive source. In this way, illustrious Brahma, this whole world, although in essence imperishable and eternal, appears and disappears, as if it was subject to birth and death.

The supreme condition of Brahma, which is meditated by the Yogis in the commencement of their abstraction, as invested with form, is Viṣṇu, composed of all the divine energies, and the essence of Brahma, with whom the mystic union that is sought, and which is accompanied by suitable elements, is effected⁷ by the devotee whose whole mind is addressed to that object. This Hari, who is the most immediate of all the energies, of Brahmā, is his embodied shape, composed entirely of his essence; and in him therefore is the whole world interwoven; and from him, and in him, is the universe, and he, the supreme lord of all, comprising all that is perishable and imperishable, bears upon him all material and spiritual existence, identified in nature with his ornaments and weapons.

wears the pure soul of the world, undefiled and void of qualities, as the Kaustubha gem. The chief principle of things (Pradhāna) is seated on the eternal, as the Śrivatsa mark. Intellect abides in Mādhava, in the form of his mace.

The lord (Īswara) supports egotism (Ahamikāra) in its twofold division, into elements and organs of sense, in the emblems of his conch-shell and his bow. In his hand Viśnu holds, in the form of his discus, the mind, whose thoughts (like the weapon) fly swifter than the winds. The necklace of the deity Vaijayantī, composed of five precious gems⁸ is the aggregate of the five elemental rudiments, Janārddana bears, in his numerous shafts, the faculties both of action and of perception. The bright sword of Acyuta is holy wisdom, concealed at some seasons in the scabbard of ignorance. In this manner soul nature, intellect, egotism, the elements, the senses, mind ignorance, and wisdom, are all assembled in the person of Hṛṣikeśa. Hari, in a delusive form embodies the shapeless elements of the world, as his weapons and his ornaments, for the salvation of mankind⁹. Puṇḍarikākṣa, the lord of all, assumes nature, with all its products, soul and all the world.

All that is wisdom, all that is ignorance, all that is, all that is not, all that is everlasting, is centred in the destroyer of Madhu, the lord of all creatures. The supreme, eternal Hari is time, with its divisions of seconds, minutes, days, months, seasons, and years: he is the seven worlds, the earth, the sky, heaven, the world of patriarchs, of sages, of saints, of truth: whose form is all worlds; first-born before all the first-born; the supporter of all beings, himself self-sustained: who exists in manifold forms', as gods, men, and animals; and is thence the sovereign lord of all, eternal: whose shape is all visible things; who is without shape or form: who is celebrated in the Vedānta as the R̥k, Yajuś, Sāma, and Atharva Vedas inspired history, and sacred science.

The Vedas, and their divisions; the institutes of Manu and other lawgivers; traditional scriptures, and religious manuals;¹⁰ poems, and all that is said or sung; are the body of the mighty Viṣṇu, assuming the form of sound. All kinds of substances, with or without shape, here or elsewhere, are the body of Viṣṇu.

Thus, Brahman, has the first portion of this Purāṇa been duly revealed to you: listening to which, expiates all offences. The man who hears this Purāṇa obtains the fruit of bathing in the Puṣkara lake¹¹ for twelve years, in the month of Kārtik. The gods bestow upon him who hears this work the dignity of a divine sage, of a patriarch, or of a spirit of heaven.

NOTES

- These are similarly enumerated in the Vāyu, Brāhma, Pādma, Bhāgavata, etc.. with some additions; as, Agni, king of the Pitṛs; Vāyu, of the Gandharvas; Sūlapāṇi (Śiva), of the Bhūtas : Kubera, of riches, and of the Yakkas; Vāsuki of the Nāgas; Taksaka, of serpents; Chitraratha, of the Gandharvas; Kāmadeva, of the Apsaras; Vipracitta, of the Dānavas; Rāhu, of meteors; Parjanya, of clouds; Samvatsara, of times and seasons : Samudra, of rivers; Himavat, of mountains, etc.

2. We have already had occasion to notice the descent of those Lokapālas, as specified in the Vāyu Purāṇa; and it is evident, although the Viṣṇu does not supply a connected series of generations, yet that both accounts are derived from a common source.

3. Vibhūti, superhuman or divine power or dignity.

4. The question, according to the commentator, implies a doubt how the supreme being, who is without qualities, can be subject to specific variety, or to existence in divided and different conditions.

5. Of Brahmabhūta (ब्रह्मभूतस्य); of him who or that which becomes identified with the supreme spirit, which is the same respectively with absolute wisdom. Jñāna (ज्ञान), and discriminative wisdom. Vijnāna (विज्ञान); leading to felicity, or the condition of Brahmā, expressed by the words. Satcitānandam (सच्चिदानन्द), 'entire tranquillity of mind, 'or internal enjoyment.' the same also with the combination of wisdom and tranquillity, which the devotee believes to exist in Adwaita 'non-duality.' or unity of god and himself: and finally the same with the aggregate of these three processes or the conviction that spirit is one, universal, and the same.

6. The epithets of Jñāna, 'wisdom,' here employed, are taken from the Yoga philosophy. 'Requires no exercise,' Nirvyāpāra (निर्व्यापार), is explained, 'without the practice of abstract contemplation,' etc. (ध्यानादिशून्यं). 'Not to be taught.' Anākhyeyam (अनाख्येयं), 'not capable of being enjoined' (निर्देशानहै). 'Internally diffused.' Vyāptimātram (व्याप्तिमात्रं), means 'menial identification of individual with universal spirit' (मनसा ब्रह्माकारतामाक्षरुं). The phrase आत्मसम्बोधविषयं translated 'the object of which is self-illumination.' is explained स्वसकाशं. 'Simply existent' (सत्तामात्र) is said to mean. 'being unmodified by the accidents of happiness etc. (आनन्दादिविशेषशून्यं), consequently it is not to be defined (अलक्षणं). So the Yoga Pradīpa explains Samādhi, or contemplation, to be the entire occupation of the thoughts by the idea of Brahma, without any effort of the mind. It is the entire abandonment of the faculties to one all-engrossing notion (मनोबृत्तिशून्यस्य ब्रह्माकारतया स्थितिः या संप्रज्ञातनामासी समाधिरभिधीयते). 'Tranquil,' Prasāntam (प्रसान्तं), is 'being void of passion.' etc. (रागादिशून्यं).

'Fearless:' not dreading agitation or perplexity by conception of a thing is attempted to be rendered ideas of duality (द्वैतस्फुरोरभ्यं) 'Pure,' undisturbed by more definite by thinking upon its types : or in external objects (निर्विषयं). 'Not the theme of reasoning: (दुर्विभाव्यं); that is, 'not to be ascertained by logical deduction' (अवितर्क्य). 'Stands in no need of support' (असंश्रितं), not resting or depending upon perceptible objects (निर्विषयत्वादाश्रयशून्ये).

7. The great Yoga is produced (महायोगो जायते). This great Yoga, or union, is to have its relation or dependence (सालम्बनः), which is Viśnu (वैष्णवः); and its seed (सर्वजः), or mystical ejaculations; and to be accompanied with Mantras and silent repetitions, or Japa (मन्त्रजपादि सहित).

8. Or of pearl, ruby, emerald, sapphire, and diamond.

9. We have in the text a representation of one mode of Dhyāna, or contemplation, in which the ideas of duality (द्वैतस्फुरोरभ्यं) 'Pure,' undisturbed by more definite by thinking upon its types : or in which, at least, the thoughts are more readily concentrated by being addressed to a sensible emblem, instead of an abstract truth. Thus the Yogi here says to himself, "I meditate upon the jewel on Viśnu's brow, as the soul of the world : upon the gem on his breast, as the first principle of things;" and so on : and thus through a perceptible substance proceeds to an imperceptible idea.

10. Ākhyānāni (आख्यानानि) is said to denote the Purāṇas, and Anuvāda (अनुवादः) the Kalpa, Sūtra, and similar works, containing directions for supplementary rites.

11. The celebrated lake Pokher in Ajmer.

Maitreya said— You have related to me, venerable preceptor, most fully, all that I was curious to hear respecting the creation of the world; but there is a part of the subject which I am desirous again to have described. You stated that Priyavrata and Uttānapāda were the sons of Svāyambhuva Manu, and you repeated the story of Dhruva. the son of Uttānapāda: you made no mention of the descendants of Priyavrata, and it is an account of his family that I beg you will kindly communicate to me.

Parāśara said— Priyavrata married Kāmyā, the daughter of the patriarch Kardama¹, and had by her two daughters, Samrāṭ and Kukṣī, and ten sons, wise, valiant, modest, and dutiful, named Agnīdhra, Agnibāhu, Vapusmat, Dyutimat, Medhātīhi, Bhavya, Sabala, Putra, and the tenth was Jyotiṣmat,² illustrious by nature as by name. These were the sons of Priyavrata, famous for strength and prowess. Of these, three, or Medha, Putra, and Agnibāhu, adopted a religious life: remembering the occurrences of a prior existence, they did not covet dominion, but diligently practised the rites of devotion in due season, wholly disinterested, and looking for no reward.

Priyavrata having divided the earth into seven continents, gave them respectively to his other seven sons.³ To Agnīdhra he gave Jambūdvīpa; to Medhātīhi he gave Plakṣadvīpa: he installed Vapusmat in the sovereignty over the Dvīpa of Śālmalī; and made Jyotiṣmat king of Kuśa-dvīpa: he appointed Dyutimat to rule over Krauñca-dvīpa; Bhavya to reign over Śāka-dvīpa; and Savala he nominated the monarch of the Dvīpa of Puṣkara.

Agnīdhra, the king of Jambu-Dvīpa, had nine sons, equal in splendour to the patriarchs: they were named Nābhi, Kimpuruṣa, Hariramvara, Ilāvṛta, Ramya, Himvat, Kuru, Bhadrāśva, and Ketumāla.⁴ who was a prince ever active in the practice of piety.

Hear next, Maitreya, in what manner Agnidhra apportioned Jambu-Dvīpa amongst his nine sons. He gave to Nābhi the country called Hima, south of the Himavat, or snowy mountains. The country of Hemakūṭa he gave to Kimpuruṣa; and to Harivarsa, the country of Niṣadha. The region in the centre of which mount Meru is situated he conferred on Ilāvṛta; and to Ramya, the countries lying between it and the Nila mountain. To Hirṇyat his father gave the country lying to the north of it, called Sveta; and on the north of the Sveta mountains, the country bounded by the Stringavan range he gave to Kuru. The countries on the east of Meru he assigned to Bhadrāśva; and Gandhmādana, which lay west of it, he gave to Ketumāla.⁵ Having installed his sons sovereigns in these several regions, the pious king Agnidhra retired to a life of penance at the holy place of pilgrimage, Sālagrāma.⁶

The eight Varṣas, or countries, Kimpuruṣa and the rest, are places of perfect enjoyment, where happiness is spontaneous and uninterrupted. In them there is no vicissitude, not the dread of decrepitude or death: there is no distinction of virtue or vice, nor difference of degree as better or worse, nor any of the effects produced in this region by the revolutions of ages.

Nābhi, who had for his portion the country of Himāhwa, bad by his queen Meru the magnanimous Rṣabha; and he had a hundred sons, the eldest of whom was Bharata. Rṣabha having ruled with equity and wisdom, and celebrated many sacrificial rites, resigned the sovereignty of the earth to the heroic Bharata, and, retiring to the hermitage of Pulastya, adopted the life of an anchoret, practising religious penance, and performing all prescribed ceremonies, until, emaciated by his austerities, so as to be but a collection of skin and fibres. he put a pebble in his mouth, and naked went the way of all flesh.⁷ The country was termed Bharata from the time that it was relinquished to Bharata by his father, on his retiring to the woods.⁸

Bharata, having religiously discharged the duties of his station, consigned the kingdom to his son Sumati, a most virtuous prince; and, engaging in devout practices, abandoned his life at the holy place, Sālagrāma: he was afterwards born again as a Brāhmaṇa, in a distinguished family of ascetics. I shall hereafter relate to you his history.

From the illustrious Sumati was born Indradyumna: his son was Parameṣṭhin: his son was Pratihāra, who had a celebrated son, named Pratiharttā: his son was Bhava, who begot Udgītha, who begot Prastāra; whose son was Prithu. The son of Prithu was Nakta; his son was Gaya: his son was Nara; whose son was Virāṭ. The valiant son of Virāṭ was Dhīmat, who begot Mahānta; whose son was Manasyu; whose son was Twaṣṭā: his son was Virāja: his son was Raja: his son was Śatajīt, who had a hundred sons, of whom Visvagijotī was the eldest.⁹ Under these princes, Bhārata-varṣa (India) was divided into nine portions (to be hereafter particularised); and their descendants successively held possession of the country for seventy-one periods of the aggregate of the four ages (or for the reign of a Manu).

NOTES

1. The text reads Kanyā (कर्दमस्याभ्यां कन्यां); and the commentator has, 'he married the daughter of Kardama, whose name was Kanyā, (कन्यां कन्यासंज्ञापित). The copies agree in the reading, and the Vāyu has the same name' Kanyā; but the Mārkaṇḍeya, which is the same in other respects as our text, has Kāmyā: Kāmyā also is the name else, where given by the Vāyu to the daughter of Kardama (Ch. X. n. 6). Kāmyā, as has been noticed, appears in the Brahmapūraṇa and Hāri V. (Ch. VII. n. 6) as the mother of Priyavrata, but erroneously: and the same authorities specify a Kāmyā as the wife of that sovereign. So the commentator on the Hāri V. states, 'another Kāmyā is mentioned (in the text), the daughter of Kardama, the wife of Priyavrata:' प्रियव्रतस्य भार्या कर्दमपुत्री काम्यान्येत्पाह। The name Kanyā is therefore most probably an error of the copyists. The Bhāgavata calls the wife of Priyavrata. Barhiṣmatī, the daughter of Viśvakarman.

2. These names nearly agree in the authorities which specify the descendants of Priyavrata, except in the Bhāgavata; that has an almost entirely different series of names, or Āgnidhra. Idhmajihwa, Yajñabāhu. Mahāvīra, Hiranyaretas, Medhatihi, Ghṛtaprīṣṭha, Savana. Vitihotra, and Kavi: with one daughter, Urjjasvatī. It also calls the Manus Uttama, Tamasa, and Raivata the sons of Priyavrata by another wife.

3. According to the Bhāgavata, he drove his chariot seven times round the earth, and the ruts left by the wheels became the beds of the oceans, separating it into seven Dvīpas.

4. Even the Bhāgavata concurs with the other Purāṇas in this series of Priyavrata's grandsons.

5. Of these divisions, as well as of those of the earth, and of the minor divisions of the Varṣas, we have further particulars in the following chapter.

6. This place of pilgrimage has not been found elsewhere. The term is usually applied to a stone, an ammonite, which is supposed to be a type of Viṣṇu, and of which the worship is enjoined in the Uttara Khanḍa of the Padma P. and in the Brahma Vaivartta, authorities of no great weight or antiquity. As these stones are found chiefly in the Gandak river, the Sāligrāma Tirtha was probably at the source of that stream, or at its confluence with the Gaṅgā. Its sanctity, and that of the stone, are probably of comparatively modern origin.

7. 'The great road' or 'road of heroes' (महाप्रस्थानं वीरस्थानं) The people was intended either to compel perpetual silence, or to prevent the eating. The Bhāgavata advert's to the same circumstance; आस्ये कृतश्मकबलः। That work enters much more into detail on the subject of Rṣabha's devotion, and particularizes circumstances not found in any other Purāṇa. The most interesting of these are the scene of Rṣabha's a wanderings, which is said to be Konka, Venkaṭa, Kūṭaka, and southern Karnāṭaka, or the western part of the Peninsula : and the adoption of the Jain belief by the people of those countries. Thus it is said, "A king of the Kankas, Venkaṭas, and Kūṭakas, named Arhat, having heard the tradition of Rṣabha's practices (or his wandering about naked, and desisting from religious rites), being infatuated by necessity, under the evil influence of the Kali age will become needlessly alarmed, and abandon his own religious duty, and will foolishly enter upon an unrighteous and heretical path. Misled by him and bewildered by the iniquitous operation of the Kali age, disturbed also by the delusions of the deity, wicked men will, in great numbers, desert the institutes and purifications of their own ritual; will observe vows injurious and disrespectful to the gods : will desist from ablutions, mouthwashings, and purifications, and will pluck out the hair of the head; and will revile the world, the deity, sacrifices. Brāhmaṇas, and the Vedas." It is also said, that Sumati the son of Bharata, will be irreligiously worshipped by some infidels, as a divinity. Besides the import of the term Arhat, or Jain. Rṣabha is the name of the first, and Sumati of the fifth Tōrīthāṅkara, or Jain saint of the present era. There can be no doubt, therefore, that the Bhāgavata intends this sect, and as the Jain system was not matured until a comparatively modern date, this composition is determined to be also recent. The allusions to the extension of the Jain faith in the western parts of the Peninsula, may serve to fix the limit of its probable antiquity to the 11 or 12 century, when the fains seem to have been flourishing in Guzerat and the Konkan. As. Res. XVII. 282.

8. This etymology is given in other Purāṇas; but the Matsya and Vāyu have a different one, deriving it from the Manu, called Bharata. Or the cherisher, one who rears or cherishes progeny— भरणात् प्रजानां वै मतुर्भरत इत्युच्यते। निरुक्त्वचनादैव वर्षं तद्वारते स्मृतं। The Vāyu has, in another place, the more common explanation also : हिमाहं दक्षिणवर्षं तस्य (भरतस्य) नामा विदुर्बुधाः॥

9. The Agni. Kūrma, Mārkandeya, Liṅga, and Vāyu Purāṇas agree with the Viṣṇu in these genealogical details. The Bhāgavata has some additions and variations of nomenclature, but is not essentially different. It ends, however, with Śatājīt, and cites a stanza which would seem to make Viraja the last of the descendants of Priyavrata : व्रैयन्नते वशमिमं विरजश्चरमोद्द्रवः। अकरोदत्पतं कीर्त्या विष्णुः सुरगां यथा॥

10. The descendants of Priyavrata were the kings of the earth in the first or Svāyambhuva Manvantara. Those of Uttānapāda his brother are placed rather incongruously in the second or Svārochiṣa Manvantara : whilst, with still more palpable inconsistency. Dakṣa, a descendant of Uttānapāda, gives his daughter to Kaśyapa in the seventh or Vaivasvata Manvantara. It seems probable that the patriarchal genealogies are older than the chronological system of Manvantaras and Kalpas. and have been rather clumsily distributed amongst the different periods.

Maitreya said— You have related to me Brahman, the creation of Svāyambhuva; I am now desirous to hear from you a description of the earth: how many are its oceans and islands, its kingdoms and it mountains, its forests and rivers and the cities of the gods, its dimensions, its contents, its nature, and its form.

Parāśara replied— You shall hear, Maitreya, a brief account of the earth from me: a full detail I could not give you in a century. The seven great insular continents are Jambu, Plaksna, Sālmali, Kuśa, Krauñca, Śāka, and Puṣkara: and they are surrounded severally by seven great seas; the sea of salt water (Lavaṇa) of sugar-cane Juice (Ikṣu), of (wine (Surā), of

Jambū-dvīpa is in the centre of all these: and in the centre of this continent is the golden mountain Meru. The height of Meru is eighty-four thousand Yojanas; and its depth below the surface of the earth is sixteen thousand. Its diameter at the summit is thirty-two thousand Yojanas; and at its base, sixteen thousand: so that this mountain is like the seed-cup of the locus of the earth.²

The boundary mountains (of the earth) are Himavān, Hemakūta, and Niṣadha, which lie south of Meru; and Nīla, Śveta, and Śringī, which are situated to the north of it. The two central ranges (those next to Meru, or Niṣadha and Nīla) extend for a hundred thousand (Yojanas, running east and west). Each of the others diminishes ten thousand Yojanas, as it lies more remote from the centre. They are two thousand Yojanas in height, and as many in breadth.³ The Varṣas or countries between these ranges are Bhārata (India), south of the Himavān mountains; next Kimpuruṣa, between Himavān and Hemakūta; north of the latter, and south of Niṣadha, is Harivarṣa; north of Meru is Rāmyaka, extending from the Nīla or blue mountains to the Śveta (or white) mountains; Hiraṇmaya lies between the Śveta and Śringī ranges; and Uttarakuru is beyond the latter, following the same direction as Bhārata.⁴ Each of these is nine thousand Yojanas in extent. Ilāvṛta is of similar dimensions, but in the centre of it is the golden mountain Meru, and the country extends nine thousand Yojanas in each direction from the four sides of the mountain.⁵ There are four mountains in this Varṣa, formed as buttresses to Meru, each ten thousand Yojanas in elevation : that on the east is called Mandara; that on the south, Gandhamādana; that on the west, Vipula; and that on the north, Supārṣva.⁶ on each of these stands severally a Kadamba-tree, a Jambu-tree, a Pīpal, and a Vaṭa;⁷ each spreading over eleven hundred Yojanas, and towering aloft like banners on the mountain. From the Jambu-tree the insular continent Jambu-Dvīpa derives its appellations. The apples of that tree are as large as elephants:

when they are rotten, they fall upon the crest of the mountain, and from their expressed juice is formed the Jambu river, the waters of which are drunk by the inhabitants; 'and in consequence of drinking of that stream, they pass their days in content and health, being subject neither to perspiration, to foul odours, to decrepitude, nor organic decay. The soil on the banks of the river, absorbing the Jambu juice, and being dried by gentle breezes, becomes the gold termed Jāmbu-nada, of which the ornaments of the Siddhas are fabricated.

There are also four great lakes, the waters of which are partaken of by the gods, called Aruṇoda, Mahābhadra, Sítoda, and Mānasa.⁸

On the summit of Meru is the vase city of Brahmā, extending fourteen thousand leagues, and renowned in heaven; and around it, in the cardinal points and the intermediate quarters, are situated the stately cities of Indra and the other regents of the spheres.¹⁰ The capital of Brahmā is enclosed by the river Gaṅgā, which, issuing from the foot of Viṣṇu, and washing the lunar orb, falls here from the skies¹¹ and after encircling the city, divides into four mighty rivers, flowing in opposite directions. These rivers are the Sītā, the Alakanandā, the Cakṣu, and the Bhadrā. The first, falling upon the tops of the inferior mountains, on the east side of Meru, flows over their crests, and passes through the country of Bhadrāśva to the ocean: the Alakanandā flows south, to the country of Bhārata, and dividing into seven rivers on the way tails into the sea: the Cakṣu falls into the sea, after traversing all the western mountains, and passing through the country of Ketumāla : and the Bhadrā washes the country of the Uttarakurus, and empties itself into the northern ocean.

Meru, then, is confined between the mountains Nila and Niṣadha (on the north and south) and between Mālyavān and Gandhamādana (on the west and east): it lies between them like the pericarp of a lotus. The countries of Bhārata, Ketumāla, Bhadrāśva and Uttarakuru lie, like leaves of the lotus of the world, exterior to the boundary mountains.

Jāṭhara and Devakūṭa are two mountain ranges running north and south, and connecting the two chains of Niṣadha and Nīla. Gandhamādāna and Kailāsa extend, east and west, eighty Yojanas in breadth, from sea to sea. Niṣadha and Pāriyātra are the limitative mountains on the west stretching, like those on the east, between the Nīla and Niṣadha ranges: and the mountains Tr̄ṣṭiga and Jārudhi are the northern limits of Meru, extending east and west, between the two seas. Thus I have repeated to you the mountains described by great sages as the boundary mountains situated in pairs, on each of the four sides of Meru. Those also, which have been mentioned as the filament mountains (or spurs), Sītānta and the rest are exceedingly delightful. The vallies embosomed amongst them are the favourite resorts of the Siddhas and Chāraṇas: and there are situated upon them agreeable forests, and pleasant cities, embellished with the palaces of Viṣṇu, Lakṣmī, Agni, Sūrya, and other deities, and peopled by celestial spirits, whilst the Yakṣas. Rākṣasas, Daityas, and Dānavas pursue their pastimes in the vales. These, in short are the regions of Paradise, or Svarga, the seats of the righteous, and where the wicked do not arrive even after a hundred births.

इति श्रीविष्णु पुराणे द्वितीयांशे द्वितीयोऽध्यायः ।

In the country of Bhadrāśva, Viṣṇu resides as Hayasīrṣa (the horse-headed); in Ketumāla, as Varāha (the boar); in Bhārata, as the tortoise (Kūrma); in Kuru, as the fish (Matsya); in his universal form, every where; for Hari pervades all places: he, Maitreya, is the supporter of all things; he is all things. In the eight realms of Kimpuruṣa and the rest (or all exclusive of Bhārata) there is no sorrow, nor weariness, nor anxiety, nor hunger, nor apprehension; their inhabitants are exempt from all infirmity and pain, and live in uninterrupted enjoyment for ten or twelve thousand years. India never sends rain upon them, for the earth abounds with water. In those places there is no distinction of Kṛta, Tretā, or any succession of ages. In each of these Varṣas there are respectively seven principal ranges of mountains, from which, oh best of Brahmaṇas. hundreds of rivers take their rise.

NOTES

1. The geography of the Purāṇas occurs in most of these works; and in all the main features, the seven Dvīpas, seven seas, the divisions of Jambu-dvīpas, the situation and extent of Meru, and the sub-divisions of Bhārata, is the same. The Agni and Brāhma are word for word the same with our text; and the Kūrma, Liṅga, Matsya, Mārkaṇḍeya, and Vāyu present many passages common to them and the Viṣṇu, or to one another. The Vāyu, as usual, enters most fully into particulars. The Bhāgavata differs in its nomenclature of the subordinate details from all, and is followed by the Padma. The others either omit the subject, or advert to it but briefly. The Mahābhārata, Bhiṣma Parva, has an account essentially the same, and many of the stanzas are common to it and different Purāṇas. It does not follow the same order, and has some peculiarities; one of which is calling Jambu-dvīpas, Sudarśana, such being the name of the Jambu-tree; it is said also to consist of two portions, called Pippala and Śāśa, which are reflected in the lunar orb is in a mirror.

2. The shape of Meru, according to this description, is that of an cverted cone; and by the comparison to the seed-cup its form should be circular: but there seems to be some uncertainty upon this subject amongst the Paurānikas. The Padma compares its form to the bell-shaped flower of the Dhutura. The Vāyu represents it as having four sides of different colours; or white on the east, yellow on the south, black on the west, and red on the north; but notices also various opinions of the outline of the mountain, which, according to Atri had a hundred angles; to Bhṛgu, a thousand: Sāvarni calls it octangular; Bhāguri, quadrangular; and Varṣayani says it has a thousand angles: Gālava makes it saucer-shaped; Garga. twisted, like braided hair; and others maintain that it is circular. The Liṅga makes its eastern face of the colour of the ruby; its southern, that of the lotus; its western, golden and its northern, coral. The Matsya has the same colours as the Vāyu and both contain this line; चतुर्वर्णपूर्सीवर्णश्चतुर्सः सपुच्छतः। 'Four coloured, golden, four-cornered lofty: but the Vāyu compares its summit in one place, to a saucer; and observes that its circumference must be thrice its diameter: विस्तारात्रिगुणास्यास्य परिणाहः समन्तः। The Matsya also rather incompatibly, says the measurement is that of a circular form but it is considered quadrangular: चतुरकृतिप्रभाणश्च चतुर्सः सपाहितः। According to the Buddhists of Ceylon, Meru is said to be of the same diameter throughout. Those of Nepal conceive it to be shaped like a drum. A translation of the description of Meru and its surrounding mountains, contained in the Brahmanḍa, which is the same exactly as that in the Vāyu, occurs in the As. Researches. VIII. 343. There are some differences in Wilford version from that which my MSS. would authorize, but they are not in general of much importance. Some, no doubt, depend upon variation in the readings of the different copies: of others, I must question the accuracy.

3. This diminution is the necessary consequence of the diminished radius of the circle of Jambu-dvīpas. as the mountain ranges recede from the centre.

4. These, being the two outer Varṣas, are said to take the form of a bow; that is, they are exteriorly convex, being segments of the circle.

5. The whole diameter of Jambu-dvīpa has been said to be 100,000 Yojanas. This is thus divided from north to south: Ilāvṛta, in the centre, extends each way 9000, making 18000: Meru itself, at the base, is 16000: the six Varṣas at 9000 each, are equal to 54000 and the six ranges, at 2000 each, are 12000 and $18+16+54+12=100$. From east to west the Varṣas are of the extent necessary to occupy the space of the circle.

6. The Bhāgavata and Padma call these Mandara, Merumandara, Supārśva, and Kumuda.

7. Nauclea Kadamba, Eugenia Jambu, Ficus religiosa, and F. Indica. The Bhāgavata substitutes a mango-tree for the Pīpal; placing it on Mandāra, the Jambu on Merumandara. the Kadamba on Supārśva, and the Vata on Kumuda.

8. The Bhāgavata substitutes Sarvatobhadra for the Gandhamādana forest; and calls the lakes, lakes of milk, honey, treacle, dad sweet water.

9. The Vāyu gives these names, and many more and describes at great length forests, lakes, and cities of gods and demi-gods upon these fabulous mountains, or in the valleys between them, (As. Res. VIII., 354).

10. The Lokapālas. or eight deities in that character, Indra, Yama, Varuṇa, Kuvera, Vivasvat, Soma, Agni, and Vāyu. Other cities of the gods are placed upon the spurs, or filament mountains, by the Vāyu; or that of Brahmā on Hemaśringa, of Śāṅkara on Kālanjara, of Garuḍa on Vaikanka, and of Kuvera on Kailāsa. Himavat is also specified by the same work as the scene of Śiva's penance, and marriage with Umā; of his assuming the form of a Kirāta, or forester; of the birth of Kārtikeya, in the Śara forest; and of his dividing the mountain Krauñca with his spear. This latter legend, having been somewhat misunderstood by Wilford, is made the theme of one of his fanciful verifications. "Here, he (the author of the Vāyu) says in the forest of Śāṅkha. was born Shaḍānana or Kārtikeya, Mars with six faces. Here he wished or formed the resolution of going to the mountains of Krauñca Germany, part of Poland &c. to rest and recreate himself after his fatigues in the wars of the gods with the giants. There, in the skirts of the mountains of Krauñca, he flung his sword; the very same which Attila, in the fifth century, asserted he had found under a clod of earth. It was placed in his tomb, where it is probably to be found." As. Res. VIII. 364.

The text of which this is in part a representation is, तत्र शश्वण नाम यत्र जातः षडाननः। यत्र चैव

कृतोत्साहः क्रौञ्चशैलवरं प्रतिः॥ चित्रपुष्पनिकुंजस्य क्रौचस्य च
गिरेस्ते। देवारस्कन्दनः स्कन्दो यत्र शक्तिविमुक्त्वान्॥ The legend here alluded to is told at length in the Vāmana Purāṇa. Mahiṣasura, flying from the battle, in which Tāraka had been slain by Kārtikeya, took refuge in a cave in the Krauñca mountain. A dispute arising between Kārtikeya and Indra, as to their respective prowess, they determined to decide the question by circumambulating the mountain; the palm to be given to him who should first go round it. Disagreeing about the result, they appealed to the mountain, who untruly decided in favour of Indra Kārtikeya, to punish his injustice, hurled his lance at the mountain Krauñca, and pierced it at once and the demon Mahiṣa. एवं ब्रुवन्तं क्रौचं सः (कार्तिकेयः) क्रोधात्प्रस्फुरिताधरः। विभेद शक्त्या कौटिल्यान्महिषेण समं तथा। Another division of Krauñca is ascribed to Parasurāma. Megha Dūta, v. 59. Krauñca is also sometimes considered to be the name of an Asura. killed by Kārtikeya; but this is perhaps some misapprehension of the Paurāṇik legend by the grammarians, springing out of the synonyms of Kārtikeya, Krauñcāri. Krauñcadāraṇa. &c., implying the foe or destroyer of Krauñca. occurring in the Amara and other Koshas.

11. The Bhāgavata is more circumstantial. The river flowed over the great toe of Viśnu's left foot, which had previously, as he lifted it up, made a fissure in the shell of the mundane egg, and thus gave entrance to the heavenly stream. The Vāyu merely brings it from the lunar orb and takes no notice of Viśnu's interposition. In a different passage it describes the detention of Gangā amidst the tresses of Śiva, in order to correct her arrogance, until the divinity was moved by the penance and prayers of king Bhagiratha to set her free. The Mahābhārata represents Śiva's bearing the river for a hundred years on his head, merely to prevent its falling too suddenly on the mountains.

12. Although the Vāyu has this account, it subsequently inserts another, which is that also of the Matsya and Padma. In this the Gaṅgā, after escaping from Śiva, is said to have formed seven streams; the Nalinī, Hiḍāni and Pavani going to the east; the Cakṣu, Sītā, and Sindhu to the west and the Bhagirathī to the south. The Mahābhārata calls them Vasvaukasāra, Nalinī Pavani. Gangā, Sītā, Sindhu and Jambunādi. The more usual legend, however, is the first, and it offers some trace of actual geography. Faber, indeed, thinks that Meru, with the surrounding Varṣa of Ilāvṛta, and its four rivers, is a representation of the garden of Eden. (Pagan Idolatry, I. 315.). However this may be, it seems not unlikely to have originated in some imperfect account of four great rivers flowing from the Himālaya, and the high lands north of that range, towards the cardinal points; the Bhadrā, to the north, representing the Oby of Siberia; and the Sātā, the river of China, or Hoangho. The Alakanandā is well known as a main branch of the Gaṅgā, near its source; and the Cakṣus is very possibly, as Wilford supposed, the Oxus. (As. Res. VIII. 309.). The printed copy of the Bhāgavata, and the MS. Padma, read Bankṣu; but the former is the more usual reading. It is said, in the Vāyu, of Ketumāla, through which this river runs, that it is peopled by various races of barbarians : केतुमाल महाद्वीप नानाम्लेच्छागणैर्युतं।

13. The text applies the latter name so variously as to cause confusion: it is given to one of the four buttresses of Meru, that on the south; to one of the filament mountains, on the west; to a range of boundary mountains, on the south; and to the Varsa of Ketumāla: here another mountain range is intended, or a chain running north and south upon the east of Ilāvṛta, connecting the Nīla and Niṣadha ranges. Accordingly the Vāyu states it to be 34000 Yojanas in extent; that is the diameter of Meru 16000, and the breadth of Ilāvṛta on each side of it, or together 18000. A similar range, that of Mālyavān, bounds Ilāvṛta on the west. It was probably to avoid the confusion arising from similarity of nomenclature, that the author of the Bhāgavata substituted different names for Gandhamādāna in the other instances, calling the buttress, as we have seen, Merumandara; the southern forest, Sarvatobhadra; and the filament mountain, Hansa; restricting the term Gandhamādāna to the eastern range a correction, it may be remarked, corroborative of a subsequent date.

14. These eight mountains are similarly enumerated in Bhāgavata and Vāyu, but no mention is made in them of any seas (अर्थवात्तर्च्चरस्थितौ), and it is clear that the eastern and western oceans cannot be intended, as the mountains Mālyavat and Gandhamādāna intervene.

'between the seas means within Mālyavat and Gandhamādana; माल्यवद्धमादनयोर्मध्याणवस्यान्तवर्यवस्थितौ। The Bhāgavata describes these eight mountains as circling Meru for 18000 Yojanas in each direction, leaving, according to the commentator, an interval of a thousand Yojanas between them and the base of the central mountain, and being 2000 high, and as many broad: they may be understood to be the exterior barriers of Meru, separating it from Ilāvṛta. The names of these mountains, according to the Bhāgavata, are Jathara and Devakūṭa on the east, Pavana and Parīpātra on the west. Tṛṣṇīga and Makara on the north, and Kailāsa and Karavīra on the south. Without believing it possible to verify the position of these different creations of the legendary geography of the Hindus, it can scarcely admit of doubt that the scheme was suggested by imperfect acquaintance with the actual character of the country, by the four great ranges, the Altai, Muztag or Thian-shan, Ku-en-lun, and Himālaya, which traverse central Asia in the direction from east to west, with a greater or less inclination from north to south, which are connected or divided by many lofty transverse ridges, which enclose several large lakes, and which give rise to the great rivers that water Siberia, China, Tartary, and Hindustan. (Humboldt on the Mountains of Central Asia, and Ritter Geogr. Asia.)

15. More ample details of the Varśas are given in the Mahābhārata, Bhāgavata, Pādma, Vāyu, Kūrma, Liṅga, Matsya, and Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇas; but they are of an entirely fanciful nature. Thus of the Ketumāla-varṣa it is said, in the Vāyu, the men are black, the women of the complexion of the lotus; the people subsist upon the fruit of the Panasa or jack-tree, and live for ten thousand years, exempt from sorrow or sickness: seven Kula or main ranges of mountains in it are named and a long list of countries and rivers is added, none of which can be identified with any actually existing, except perhaps the great river the Sucakṣus the Amu or Oxus. According to the Bhāgavata, Viṣṇu is worshipped as Kāmadeva id Ketumāla. The Vāyu says the object of adoration there is Iśvara, the son of Brahmā. Similar circumstances are asserted of the other Varśas. See also As. Res. VIII. 352.

The country that lies north of the ocean, and south of the snowy mountains, is called Bhārata, for there dwelt the descendants of Bharata. It is nine thousand leagues in extent,¹ and is the land of works, in consequence of which men go to heaven, or obtain emancipation.

The seven main chains of mountains in Bhārata are Mahendra, Malaya, Sahya, Śuktimat, Ṙksa, Vindhya, and Pāripātra.²

From this region heaven is obtained, or even in some cases, liberation from existence; or men pass from hence into the condition of brutes, or fall into hell. Heaven, emancipation, a state in mid-air, or in the subterraneous realms, succeeds to existence here, and the world of acts is not the title of any other portion of the universe.

The Varṣa of Bhārata is divided into nine portions, which I will name to you; they are Indra-Dvīpa, Kaserumat, Tāmravarṇa. Gabhastimat Nāga-dvīpa, Saumya, Gāndharva and Vāruṇa; the last or ninth Dvīpa is surrounded by the ocean, and is a thousand Yojanas from north to south.³

On the east of Bhārata dwell the Kīrātas (the barbarians); on the west, the Yavanas; in the centre reside Brāhmaṇas, Kṣatriyas, Vaiśyas, and Śūdras, occupied in their respective duties of sacrifice, arms, trade, and service.⁴ The Śatdru, Candrabhāgā, and other rivers. Of such as these, and of minor rivers, there is an infinite number; and many nations inhabit the countries on their borders.⁵

The principal nations of Bhārata are the Kurus and Pāñcālas, in the middle districts: the people of Kāmarūpa, in the east: the Puṇḍras, Kalingas, Magadhas, and southern nations, are in the south: in the extreme west are the Saurāstras, Śūras, Bhiras, Arbudas: the Kāruṣas and Mālavas, dwelling along the Pāripātra mountains: the Sauviras, the Saindhavas, the Hunas, the Sālwas, the people of Śākala, the Madras, the Rāmas, the Ambashthas, and the Pārasikas, and others. These nations drink of the water of the rivers above enumerated, and inhabit their borders, happy and prosperous.⁶

In the Bhārata-varṣa it is that the succession of four Yugas or ages, the Kṛta the Treta. The Dvāpara, and Kali, takes place; that pious ascetics engage in rigorous penance; that devout men offer sacrifices; and that gifts are distributed; all for the sake of another world. In Jambu-dvīpa, Viṣṇu, consisting of sacrifice, is worshipped, as the male of sacrificial rites, with sacrificial ceremonies: he is adored under other forms elsewhere. Bhārata is therefore the best of the divisions of Jambu-dvīpa, because it is the land of works: the others are places of enjoyment alone. It is only after many thousand births, and the aggregation of much merit, that living beings are sometimes born in Bhārata as men. The gods themselves exclaim, "Happy are those who are born, even from the condition of gods, as men in Bhārata-varṣa, as that is the way to the pleasures of Paradise, or the greater blessing of final liberation. Happy are they who, consigning all the unheeded rewards of their acts to the supreme and eternal Viṣṇu, obtain existence in that land of works, as their path to him. We know not, when the acts that have obtained us heaven shall have been fully recompensed,⁷ where we shall renew corporeal confinement; but we know that those men are fortunate who are born with perfect faculties in Bhārata-varṣa.

इति श्रीविष्णुपुराणे द्वितीयेऽशे तृतीयोऽध्यायः।

I have thus briefly described to you, Maitreya, the nine divisions of Jambu-dvīpa, which is a hundred thousand Yojanas in extent, and which is encircled, as if by a bracelet, by the ocean of salt water, of similar dimensions.

NOTES

1. As Bhārata-varṣa means India, a nearer approach to the truth, with regard to its extent, might have been expected: and the Vāyu has another measurement, which is not much above twice the actual extent, or 1000 Yojanas from Kumāri (Comorin) to the source of the Gaṅgā.

2. These are called the Kulaparvatas, family mountains, or mountain ranges or systems. They are similarly enumerated in all the authorities, and their situation may be determined with some confidence by the rivers which flow from them. Mahendra is the chain of hills that extends from Orissa and the northern Circars to Gonḍwānā part of which, near Ganjam, is still called Mahendra Malei. or hills of Mahendra : Malaya is the southern portion of the western Ghats: Śuktimat is doubtful, for none of its streams can be identified with any certainty: Sahya is the northern portion of the western Ghats, the mountains of the Konkan: Rkṣa is the mountains of Gonḍwānā: Vindhya is the general name of the chain that stretches across central India, but it is here restricted to the eastern division; according to the Vāyu it is the part south of the Narmadā, or the Sathpura range: Pāripātra, as frequently written Pāriyātra, is the northern and western portion of the Vindhya: the name, indeed, is still given to a range of mountains in Guzerat (see Tod's Map of Rajasthān), but the Chambal and other rivers of Mālwa, which are said to flow from the Pāriyātra mountains,, do not rise in that province. All these mountains therefore belong to one system, and are connected together. The classification seems to have been known to Ptolemy, as he specifies seven ranges of mountains, although his names do not correspond, with the exception of the Vindus mons: of the others, the Adisathrus and Uxentus agree nearly in position with the Pāriyātra and Rkṣa: the Apocopi. Sardonix, Bettigo, and Orudi must be left for consideration. The Bhāgavata, Vāyu. Padma, and Mārkanḍeya add a list of inferior mountains to these seven.

3. This last is similarly left without a name in all the works: it is the most southerly, that on the borders of the sea, and no doubt intends India proper. Wilford places here a division called Kumārikā. No description is anywhere attempted of the other divisions. To these the Vāyu adds six minor Dvīpas, which are situated beyond sea and are islands, Anga-dvīpa, Yama-dvīpa, Matsya-dvīpa, Kumuda or Kuśa dvīpa, Varāha-dvīpa, and Śankha-dvīpa; peopled for the most part by Mlechchhas, but who worship Hindu divinities. The Bhāgavata and Padma name eight such islands. Swarnaprabha, Candraśukla, Avartana, Ramaṇaka, Mandahāra, Pāñcajaya, Sinhalā, and Latikā. Wilford has endeavoured to verify the first series of Upadvīpas, making Varāha Europe; Kuśa, Asia Minor, etc., Śankha, Africa; Malaya, Mlecchā; Yama is undetermined; and by Anga, he says, they understand China. How all this may be is more than doubtful, for in the three Purāṇas in which mention is made of them, very little more is said upon the subject.

4. By Kirātas, foresters and mountaineers are intended, the inhabitants to the present day of the mountains east of Hindustan. The Yavanas, on the west, may be either the Greeks of Bactria and the Punjab— to whom there can be little doubt the term was applied by the Hindus— or the Mohammedans, who succeeded them in a later period, and to whom it is now applied. The Vāyu calls them both Mlechchhas, and also notices the admixture of barbarians with Hindus in India proper: तैर्जिमित्रा जनपदा आर्यो म्लेच्छाश्च नित्यशः। The same passage, slightly varied occurs in the Mahābhārata: it is said especially of the mountainous districts, and may allude therefore to the Gonds and Bhils of central India, as well as to the Mohammedans of the north west. The specification implies that infidels and outcastes had not yet descended on the plains of Hindustan.

5. This is a very meagre list, compared with those given in other Purāṇas. That of the Vāyu is translated by Wilford, As. Res. vol. VIII: and much curious illustration of many of the places by the same writer occurs. As. Res. vol. XIV. The lists of the Mahābhārata, Bhāgavata and Padma are given without any arrangement: those of the Vāyu, Matsya, Mārkaṇḍeya, and Kūrma are classed as in the text. Their lists are too long for insertion in this place. Of the rivers named in the text, most are capable of verification. The Śatadru, 'the hundred channelled'— the Zaradrus of Ptolemy, Hesidrus of Pliny—is the Satlej. The Candrabhāgā, Sandabalis, or Acesnes, is the Chinab. The Vedasmṛti in the Vāyu and Kūrma is classed with the Vetravatī or Betwā, the Carmanvatī or Chambal and Siprā and Pārā, rivers of Mālwa, and may be the same with the Beos of the maps. The Narmadā or Narbadda, the Namadus of Ptolemy, is well known; according to the Vāyu it rises, not in the Vindhya, but in the Rkṣa mountains, taking its origin in fact in Gondwana. The Suraśa is uncertain. The Tāpi is the Tāpti rising also in Gondwana: the other two are not identified. The Godavari preserves its name: in the other two we have the Beemah and the Kṛṣṇa. For Kṛtamālā the Kūrma reads R̄tumālā, but neither is verified. The Tāmrāpārnī is in Tinivelly, and rises at the southern extremity of the western Ghats. The Risikulyā, that rises in the Mahendra mountain, is the Rasikulia or Rasikoila, which flows into the sea near Ganjam. The Trisāmā is undetermined. The text assigns another Risikulyā to the Suktimat mountains, but in all the other authorities the word is Rishīka. The Kumāri might suggest some connexion with Cape Comorin, but that the Malaya mountains seem to extend to the extreme south. A Rishikulyā river is mentioned (Vana P. v. 3026) as a Tīrtha in the Mahābhārata. in connexion apparently with the hermitage of Vasiṣṭha, which in another passage (v. 4096) is said to be on mount Arbuda or Abu. In that case, and if the reading of the text be admitted for the name of the river, the Suktimat range would be the mountains of Guzerat; but this is doubtful.

6. The list of nations is as scanty as that of the rivers: it is, however, omitted altogether in the Bhāgavata. The Padma has a long catalogue, but without arrangement; so has the Mahābhārata. The lists of the Vāyu, Matsya, and Mārkaṇḍeya class the nations as central northern, eastern, southern, and western. The names are much the same in all and are given in the 8th vol. of the As. Res. from the Brahmānda, or, for it is the same account, the Vāyu. The Mārkaṇḍeya has a second classification, and, comparing Bhārata-varṣa to a tortoise, with its head to the east, enumerates the countries in the head, tail, flanks, and feet of the animal. It will be sufficient here to attempt an identification of the names in text, but some further illustration is offered at the end of the chapter. The Kurus are the people of Kurukṣetra, or the upper part of the Doab about Delhi. The Pāñcālas, it appears from the Mahābhārata, occupied the lower part of the Doab, extending across the Yamunā to the Chambal. Kulluka Bhaṭṭa, in his commentary on Manu, II-19, places them at Kanouj. Kāmarupa is the north-eastern part of Bengal, and western portion of Assam. Pundra is Bengal proper, with part of south Behar and the Jungle Mahal. Kaliṅga is the sea-coast west of the mouths of the Gaṅgā, with the upper part of the Coromandel coast. Magadha is Bihar. The Saurāṣṭras are the people of Surat, the Surastrene of Ptolemy. The Śuras and Bhīras, in the same direction, may be the Sun and Phauni or Phryni of Strabo. The Arbudas must be the people about mount Abu, or the natives of Mewar. The Kāruṣas and Mālavas are of course the people of Malwa. The Sauvīras and Saīndhavas are usually conjoined as the Sindhu-Sauvīras, and must be the nations of Sindh and western Rajputānā. By the Hūnas we are to understand the white Huns or Indo-Scythians, who were established in the Punjab and along the Indus at the commencement of our era, as we know from Arrian, Strabo, and Ptolemy, confirmed by recent discoveries of their coins. The śālwas or, as also read śālyas are placed by the Vāyu and Matasya amongst the central nations, and seen to have occupied part of Rājasthān, a Śālwa Rāja being elsewhere described as engaging in hostilities with the people of Dwarakā in Guzerat. Śākala, as I have elsewhere noticed, is a city in the Punjab (As. Res. XV. 108), the Sagala of Ptolemy (ibid. 107); the Mahābhārata makes it the capital of the Madras, the Mardi of the ancients; but they are separately named in the text, and were situated something more to the south-east. The Rāmas and Ambashṭhas are not named in other Purāṇas, but the latter are amongst the western, or more properly north-western nations subjugated by Nakula, in his Dig-vijaya. Mahābh. Sabhā P. Ambas and Ambashṭhas are included in the list extracted by Wilford from the Varāha Saṃhitā and the latter are supposed by him to be the Ambasta of Arrian. The Pāraśikas carry us into Persia, or that part of it adjoining to the Indus. As far as the enumeration of the text extends, it seems applicable to the political and geographical divisions of India about the era of Christianity.

7. Enjoyment in Svarga like punishment in Naraka, is only for a certain period, according to the merit or demerit of the individual. When the account is balanced, the man is born again amongst mankind.

8. A crippled or mutilated person, or one whose organs are defective cannot at once obtain liberation: his merits must first secure his being born again perfect and entire.

1. In attempting to verify the places or people specified in the text various difficulties are to be encountered, which must serve to apologize for but partial success. Some are inherent in the subject, such as the changes which have taken place in the topography of India since the lists were compiled, and the imperfectness of the specification itself, states and tribes and cities have disappeared, even from recollection, and some of the natural features of the country, especially the rivers, have undergone a total alteration. Buchanan (Description of Eastern Hindustani) following Reanell over the same ground at an interval of some thirty or forty years, remarks that many of the streams laid down in the Bengal Atlas (the only series of Maps of India yet published, that can be regarded as of authority) are no longer to be traced. Then the lists which are given are such mere catalogues, that they afford no clue to verification beyond names; and names have been either changed or so corrupted, as to be no longer recognizable. On the other hand, much of the difficulty alixes from our own want of knowledge. Scattered through the Purāṇas and other works, the names given in the topographical lists recur with circumstances which fix their locality; but these means of verification have not yet been sufficiently investigated. There are also geographical treatises in Sanskrit, which there is reason to believe afford much accurate and interesting information: they are not common. Wilford speaks of having received a number from Jaypur, but upon his death they disappeared. After a considerable interval some of his MSS were purchased for the Calcutta Sanskrit College, but by far the larger portion of his collection had been dispersed. A few leaves only on geographical subjects were found, from which I translated and published a chapter on the geography of some of the districts of Bengal: (Calcutta Quarterly Magazine, Dec. 1824:) the details were accurate and valuable though the compilation was modern. Notwithstanding these impediments, however, we should be able to identify at least mountains and rivers to a much greater extent than is now practicable, if our maps were not so miserably defective in their nomenclature. None of our surveyors or geographers have been Oriental scholars. It may be doubted if any of them have been conversant with the spoken language of the country: they have consequently put down names at random, according to their own inaccurate appreciation of sounds carelessly, vulgarly, and corruptly uttered; and their maps of India are crowded with appellations which bear no similitude whatever either to past or present denominations. We need not wonder that we cannot discover Sanskrit names in English maps, when, in the immediate vicinity of Calcutta, Barnagore represents Varāhanagar. Dakṣīneswar is metamorphosed into Duckinsore, and Uluberia is Anglicised into Willoughbury. Going a little farther off, we have Dalkisore for Darikeswari, Midnapore for Medinipur, and a most unnecessary accumulation of consonants in Caughmahry for Kākamārī. There is scarcely a name in our Indian maps that does not afford proof of extreme indifference to accuracy in nomenclature, and of an incorrectness in estimating sounds, which is in some degree, perhaps, a national defect.

2. The printed edition reads Śuktimat, which is also found in some MSS., but the more usual reading is that of the text. I may here add that a Śuktimat mountain occurs in Bhīma's invasion of the eastern region. Mahābh. Sabhā P. Gandhamādana here takes the place of Rksa.

3. For additional mountains in the Vāyu, see Asiatic Researches, VIII 334. The Bhāgavata, Padma, and Mārkaṇḍeya and the following: Maināka, which it appears from the Rāmāyaṇa is at the source of the Sone, that river being termed Mainākaprabhava. Kishkindhya Kāṇḍa; Trikūṭa, called also in Hemachandra's vocabulary Suvela; Rsabha. Kūṭaka, Konva, Devagiri (Deogur or Ellora, the mountain of the gods; the Apocopi are said by Ptolemy to be also called mountains of the gods): Rṣyamuka in the Dekhin, where the Pampā rises; Śrī-saila or Śrī-parvata, near the Krishṇa (As. Res. V. 303); Venkaṭa. the hill of Tripatī. Vāridhātra, Mangala-prastha. Drona, Chitrakūṭa (Chitrakote in Bundelkhand), Govarddhana (near Mathurā), Raivata, the range that branches off from the western portion of the Vindhya towards the north, extending nearly to the Yamunā: according to Hemachandra it is the Giriṇā range; it is the Aravalī of Tod; Kakubha, Nīla (the blue mountains of Orissa). Gohamukha, Indrakīla, Ramagiri (Ram-tek, near Nagpur), Valakrama, Sudhāma, Tungapraستha, Nāga (the hills east of Ramghur), Bodhana, Pandara, Durjayanta, Arbuda (Abu in Guzerat), Gomanta (in the western Ghats), Kūṭasaila, Kritasmara, and Cakora. Many single mountains are named in different works.

4 See Bk. II., Ch. III., note 4.

5 The Sarsuti, or Kaggar or Gaggar, N. W. of Tahnesar. See below, note 6.

6. The Bāhudā is elsewhere said to rise in the Himālaya. Wilford considers it to be the Mahānada, which falls into the Gaṅgā below Malda. The Mahābhārata has amongst the Tīrthas, or places of pilgrimage, two rivers of this name, one apparently near the Sarasvatī one more to the east. Hemachandra gives as synonyms Arjunī and Saitavāhinī both implying the white river: a main feeder of the Mahānada is called Dhavalī or Dauli, which has the same meaning.

7. The Drṣadvatī is a river of considerable importance in the history of the Hindus, although no traces of its ancient name exist. According to Manu it is one boundary of the district called Brahmāvarita in which the institution of castes, and their several duties, had for ever existed: implying that in other places they were of more recent origin. This holy land 'made by the gods,' was of very limited extent. Its other boundary was the Sarasvatī That the Drṣadvatī was not far off we learn from Manu, as Kurukṣetra, Matsya, Pañcāla, and Śurasena, or the upper part of the Doāb, and country to the east, were not included in Brahmāvarita; they constituted Brabmarśi-desa, contiguous to it; ब्रह्मवर्तीनन्तरः। Kulluka Bhaṭṭa explains Anantara, something less or inferior; किंचिदूनः। but it more probably means 'not divided from', immediately contiguous. We must look for the Drṣadvatī therefore, west of the Yamunā. In the Tīrtha Yātrā of the Mahābhārata we find it forming one of the boundaries of Kurukṣetra. It is there said, Those who dwell on the south of the Sarasvati and north of the Driashvati, or in Kurukṣetra, dwell in heaven: दक्षिणे सरस्वत्या: दृष्टदुत्तरेण च। ये वसन्ति कुरुक्षेत्रे ते वसन्ति त्रिविष्टपे॥ In the same place, the confluence of the Drṣadvatī with a stream of Kurukṣetra, called the Kauśiki, is said to be of peculiar sanctity. Kurukshetra is the country about Tahnesure or Sthāneśvara, where is spot called Kurukhet still exists, and is visited in pilgrimage. The Kurukṣetra of Manu may be intended for the country of the Kurus, in the more immediate vicinity of Delhi. According to Wilford the Drṣadvatī is the Kaggar; in which case our maps have taken the liberty of transposing the names of the rivers, as the Kaggar now is the northern stream, and the Sarsuti the southern, both rising in the Himālaya, and uniting to form one river, called Gagar or Kaggar in the maps, but more correctly Sarsuti or Sarasvatī; which then runs south-west, and is lost in the desert. There have no doubt been considerable changes here, both in the nomenclature and in the courses of the rivers.

8. The Beyah, Hyphasis, or Bibasis.

9. The Rāvī or Hydraotes or Adris.

10. The Jhelum, but still called in Kashmir the Vitastā. the Bidaspes or Hydaspes.

11. This river, according to the Viṣṇu P., rises from the Rkṣa mountains, but the Vāyu and Kürma bring it from the Vindhya or Sathpura range. There are several indications of its position in the Mahābhārata, but none very precise. Its source appears to be near that of the Krishṇa: it flows near the beginning of the Daṇḍaka forest, which should place it rather near to the sources of the Godāvari: it passes through Vidarbha or Berar, and, Yudhiṣṭhira having bathed in it, comes to the Vaidurya mountain and the Narmadā river. These circumstances make it likely that the Payīn Gangā is the river in question.

12. The Devā or Goggra,

13. Both these are from the Pāripātra range. In some MSS. the latter is read Vedasīnī and Vetasini. In the Rāmāyana occur Vedā and Vedavainasikā, which may be the same, as they seem to be in the direction of the Sone. One of them may be the Beos of eastern Malwa, but it rises in the Rkṣa mountain.

14. From Pāripātra, Kūrma; from Mahendra, Vāyu.

15. One copy has Ikṣumālīmī; two others, Ikṣula and Krimī; one MS. of the Vāyu has an Ikṣula from Mahendra: the Matsya has Ikṣudā; Wilford's list has Drākṣalā.

16. Of these rivers, the two first are named in the Padma P., but not in the Vāyu, &c. The Gomati in Oude, the Gandak, and the Kosi are well known. The Dhutapāpā is said to rise in the Himālaya.

17. In different MSS. read Michitā and Niṣṭā. In the Vāyu and Matsya. Niśchirā or Nirvirā is said to flow from the Himālaya.

18. Also Lohatāraṇī and Lohachāriṇī.

19. The Sarayū or Sarju is commonly identified with the Deva. Wilford says it is so by the Paurāniks, but we have here proof to the contrary. They are also distinguished by the people of the country. Although identical through great part of their course, they rise as different streams, and again divide and enter the Gaṅgā by distinct branches.

20. The recurrence of the same name in this, as in several similar subsequent instances, is possibly an error of the copyist; but it is also sometimes likely that one name is applied to different rivers. In one MS. we have, in place of this word. Caitravatī; and in another Vetravatī.

21. Read also Śatāvarī. According to Wilford, the Sarāvatī is the Ban-gangā.

22. The Vāyu has Pāra, which is a river in Malwa, the Pīrvatī MSS. read Vāṇī and Venā.

23. According to the Vāyu, this rises to the Sahya ms. and flows towards the south: it is therefore the Beema of Aurungabad.

24. The Kāverī is well known, and has always borne the same appellation, being the Chaberis of Ptolemy.

25. Read Culukā.

26. Read also Tāpī; the Tāptī river of the Dekhin.

27. Read Ahitā and Sahitā,

28. Rises in the Sahya mountain, and flows southwards : Vāyu, etc.

29. Read Vichitrā.

30. Several rivers are called by this name, as well as the Indus : there is one of some note, the Kāli Sindh in Malwa..

31. Also Vājini.

32. This agrees best in name with the Beema : it is also mentioned as a tīrtha in the Mahābhārata.

33. From Śuktimat : Kūrma and Vāyu. There is a Bālasan from the eastern portion of the Himālaya, a feeder of the Mahānanda, which may be the Palāsinī, if the mountain be in this direction.

34. Also Pippalalāvati, The Vāyu has a Pippalā from the Rkṣa mountain.

35. Also Kuśavīrā.

36. Also Mahikā and Maruṇḍācī.

37. Also Śenā.

38. Read Kṛtavatī and Ghṛtavatī.

39. Also Dhuṣulyā.

40. Also Atikṛṣṇa.

41. In place of both Suvārthācī.

42. From Pāripātra : Vāyu and Matsya.

43. Also Kuśanāra.

44. Also Śaśikānta.

45. Also Vastrā and Suvastrā.

46. One of the tīrthas in the Mahābhārata.

47. According to the Mahābhārata, this rises in the Vaidurya mountain, part of the southern Vindhya or Sathpura range.

48. Also Kuvīra.

49. Three MSS. agree in reading this Ambuvāhīnī.

50. Also Vainadī.

51. Also Kuvenā : it is possibly meant for the Tungabhādra or Tumbudra.

52. A river in Malwa. so called from the city of the same nāme, which I have elsewhere conjectured to be Bhilsa. Megha Dūta. 31. There is a 'Bess' river in the māps, which joins the Betwa at Bhilsa, and is probably the river of the text.

53. The Vāma or Suvāmā. 'the beautiful river.' Wilford identifies with the Rāmagaṅgā.

54. Also Mahapagā, 'the great river.'

55. Also Kuchchilā.

56. The Sona river, rising in Maināka or Amarakanṭaka and flowing east to the Gaṅgā.

57. This and the preceding both rise from the Vindhya mountain : the latter is also read Antaḥśilā, 'the river flowing within or amidst rocks.'

58. Also Parokṣā.

59. We have a Suranā in the Vāyu and Surasā in the Kūrma and Matsya, flowing from the Rkṣa mountain.

60. The Tamaśa or Tonse, from Rkṣa.

61. This and the preceding scarcely merit a place amongst the rivers, being two small streams which fall into the Gaṅgā east and west of Benares, which is thence denominated Varanasi.

62. Parṇāśā or Varṇāśā from the Pāripātra mountain.

63. Also Mānavī.

64. The Kṛṣṇa of the Dakhin is probably here intended, although its more ordinary designation seems to be that already specified. Krishnaveṇa or Krishnaveṇī. The meaning is much the same; the one being the 'dark river,' the other simply the 'dark' the Niger.

65. A river from Śuktimat; Vāyu.

66. A river in Cuttack, according to Wilford : it is one of the Tīrthas of the Mahābhārata, and apparently in a different direction, Buchanan (Eastern Hindustan) has a river of this name in Dinajpur.

67. Both from the Vindhya : Vāyu and Kūrma. There is a Goaris in Ptolemy in central India.

68. From Rkṣa : Vāyu.

69. Also Munja and Makaravāhinī.

70. From Rkṣa : Vāyu. According to the Mahābhārata, it rises in the mountain Chitrakote.

71. The Vaitaraṇī in Cuttack. It is named in the Mahābhārata as a river of Kalinga.

72. Also read Nīpa and Koka.

73. From Rkṣa, but read also Śuktimatī, which is the reading of the Matsya. Wilford considers it to be the Svarṇarekhā of Cuttack.

74. Also Anāgā and Surangā; perhaps the preferable reading should be Sumangā, a river flowing from Maināka, according to the Mahābhārata.

75. Part of the Brahmaputra.

76. A considerable river in the east, flowing between Dinajpur and Rangpur.

77. Also Vṛṣasāhva.

78. This and the preceding flow from Śuktimat, according to the Vāyu, Matsya and Kūrma. The last occurs also in Rṣika.

79. Also Suparnā. The Puṇyā is considered to be the Pun-pun of Bihar, but there is also a Parṇā river in the same province.

80. It is possible that further research will identify more than those attempted to be verified in the foregoing notes, as well as meet with others readily recognizable. In the authorities consulted several occur not comprehended in the text: as the Kuhu and Ikṣu, from the Himālaya; Vṛtraghṇī, Candanā (Chandan of Bhagalpur), Mahī (the Mahy of western Malwa), Śiprā, and Avantī (rivers near Ujjain), from Pāripātra; Mahānada in Orissa, Drumā, Daśārṇa (Dhosaun in Bundelkhand), Chitrakūṭā, Śronī or Śyenā, Piśāchikā, Banjulā, Bāluvāhinī, and Matkunā, all from Rkṣa, Nirvindhya, Madrā, Niṣadhā, Śinibāhu, Kumudvatī and Toyā, from Vindhya; Banjula from Sahya; Kṛtamālā, Tāmraparṇī, Puṣpajātī, and Utpalavatī from Malaya, Lāngulinī and Vanśadhārā, from Mahendra; and Mandagā and Kṛpā or Rūpā, from Śuktimat. In the Rāmāyaṇa we have, besides some already specified, the Ruchirā, Pampā, eastern Sarasvatī, Vegavatī or Vyki of Madurā, and Varadā or Wurda of Berar: and we have many others in the Mahābhārata and different works, from which the Sanskrit appellations of most of the Indian rivers might be with some little time and trouble, collected.

References

1. The people of the upper part of the Doab. The two words might also be understood as denoting the Pāñcālas of the Kuru country, there being two divisions of the tribe: see below, note 20
2. The Śurasenas were the inhabitants of Mathurā the Suraseni of Arrian.
3. The people of the upper-part of the Coromandel coast, well known in the traditons of the eastern Archipelago as Kling. Ptolemy has a city in that part called Kaliga; and Pliny, Kalingae proximi mari.
4. One of the tribes of central India, according to the Vāyu: it is also read Bāhyas.
5. The Mālas and Mālavartti are placed, in the Vāyu and Matsya, amongst the central nations. The Mārkanḍeya reads Gavavartti. Wilford considers Māla to be the Mal-bhūm of Medinipur. As noticed in the Meghadūtam, I have supposed it to be situated in Chattisgarh. Book I. Ch. III. note.
6. The people of Dinajpur. Rangpur and Cooch Bihar. Calcutta Mag. Dec 1824.
7. Read Kuśandas, Kuśalyas, Kuśadhyas, Kisīdhajas, and placed in central India.
8. Also Sauśalyas and Sauśulyas.
9. Kuntala is in one place one of the central countries; in another, one of the southern: the name is applied in inscriptions to the province in which Kurgode is situated, part of the Adoni district: (As. Res. IX. 427:) and consistently with this position it is placed amongst the dependant or allied states of Vidarbha in the Daśa Kumāra. Calcutta Quarterly Mag. Sept. 1827.

10. A central nation : Vāyu. The Rāmāyaṇa places them in the east. The combination indicates the country between Benares and Oude.

11. Cedi is usually considered as Chandail, on the west of the Jungle Mahals, towards Nagpur. It is known, in times subsequent to the Purāṇas, as Raṇastambha.

12. Some copies read Vatsa and the other Purāṇas have such a name amongst the central countries; the people perhaps of Vatsa Rāja of Kauśāmbī, near the junction of the Yamunā and the Gaṅgā. There are, however, two Matsyas, one of which, according to the Yantra Samrāṭ, is identifiable with Jaipur. In the Dig-vijaya of Nakula he subdues the Matsays farther to the west or in Gujarat.

13. Situated on the back of the Vindhya a range: Vāyu and Matsya. They are generally named with the people of Mālava, which confirms this locality. They are said to be the posterity of Karuṣa, one of the sons of Vaivśvata Manu.

14. These are also placed along the Vindhya chain, but at different times appear to have occupied different positions. They were a kindred tribe with the Andhakas and Viṣṇis and a branch of the Yādavas. A Bhoja Rāja is amongst the warriors of the Mahābhārata. At a later period, Bhoja, the Rājā of Dhār, preserves an indication of this people: and from him the Bhojpuris, a tribe still living in western Bihar, profess to be descended: they are not improbable relics of the older tribe. Bhoja is also used sometimes as a synonym of Bhojakaṭa, a city near the Narmadā, founded by Rukmī, brother-in-law of Krṣṇa, and before that, prince of Kundīna or Kondavir.

15. Pulinda as applied to any wild or barbarous tribe; those here named are some of the people of the deserts along the Indus; but Pulindas are met with in many other positions, especially in the mountains and forests across central India, the haunts of the Bhīls and Gonds. So Ptolemy places the Pulindai along the banks of the Narmadā to the frontiers of Larice; the Lāṭa or Lar of the Hindus; Kandesh and part of Gujarat.

16. In the other three Purāṇas we have Uttāmārṇas. on the Vindhya range.

17. The people of the 'ten forts,' subsequently multiplied to 'thirty-six,' such being the import of Chattisgarh, which seems to be in the site of Daśārṇa. - Megha Dūta, p. 30, note.

18. A Vindhya tribe, according to the other purāṇas. The locality is confirmed by mythological personations; for Mekala is said to be a Ṛṣi, the father of the river Narmadā; thence called Mekala and Mekalakanyā: the mountain where it rises is also called Mekalādri. The Rāmāyaṇa places the Mekalas amongst the southern tribes.

19. Utakala is still the native name of Orissa.

20. These may be the southern Pāñcālas. When Droṇa overcame Drupada, king of Pāñcāla, as related in the Mahābhārata, Ādi-parva, he retained half the country, that north of the Gaṅgā, and restored to its former chief the other half, south of that river as far as to the Chambal. The capital of the latter became Mākandi on the Gaṅgā; and the country included also Kāmpilya, the Kampil of the Mohammedans, but placed by them in the Doab. The capital of the northern portion was Ahikṣetra, name traceable in the Adisathrus of Ptolemy, though the position differs; but Ahikṣetra or Ahichchatra, as it is also written, seems to have been applied to more than one city.

21. Perhaps the people of Tirhut, along the Kosi.

22. 'Having more than one back': probable some nickname or term of derision. Thus we have, in the Rāmāyaṇa and other works, enumerated amongst tribes, the Karna-prāvaraṇas. 'those who wrap themselves up in their ears;' Aṣṭa-karṇakas, "the eight-eared;" or Oṣṭha-karṇakas, "having lips extending to their ears;" Kākamukhas, "crow-faced"; Eka-pādukas. - 'one-footed,' or rather 'one-slipped': exaggerations of national ugliness, or allusions to peculiar customs, which were not literally intended, although they may have furnished the Mandevilles of ancient and modern times with some of their monsters. The spirit of the nomenclature is shown by these tribes being associated with Kirātas, 'barbarians.' and Yavanas, either Greeks or Mohammedans.

23. A preferable reading seems to be Yugandhara: a city in the Punjab so called is mentioned in the Mahābhārata, Karna Parva.

24. Read Bodhas, Godhas, and Saudhas. There is a Rājput tribe called Soda.

25. This may consist of two names, and is so read in MSS. or the latter term occurs Kaliṅgas; both terms are repeated. Besides the Madra of the north, a similar word. Madru, is applied to Madura in the south. As. Res. IX. 428. The Rāmāyaṇa has Madras in the east, as well as in the north.

26. The people of the Benares district, and that opposite.

27. The inhabitants of Ujjayin.

28. These should be opposite to the Kuntis, but where either is situated does not appear.

29. The best reading is Gomanta, part of the Konkan about Goa.

30. The more usual reading is Khaṇḍas; one MS. has Parṇas.

31. A country of considerable extent and power at various periods. The name remains in Beder, which may have been the ancient capital but the kingdom seems to have corresponded with the great part of Berar and Kandesh. It is mentioned in the Rāmāyaṇa and the Purāṇas amongst the countries of the south.

32. Also Rūpavāsikas. There is a Rupā river from the Śuktimat mountain, the vicinity of which may be alluded to. We have Rūpasas or Rūpapas amongst the southern tribes of the Purāṇas.

33. Read also Aśmalas and Aśmakas : the latter are enumerated amongst the people of the south in the Rāmāyaṇa, and in the Vāyu, Matsya, and Mārkaṇḍeya P. There is a prince of the same name of the solar dynasty.

34. Gova or Kuva is an ancient name of the southern Konkan, and may be intended in this place by the Gopa country; or it may imply 'the district of cow-herds.' that is of Nomadic tribes.

35. Also read Kulatis and Pāṇītakas.

36. Read also Adhirājya and Adhirāṣṭra, which mean the same, 'the over or superior kingdom.'

37. Also Kuśādhyā, Kuśāndā, and Mukuntha.

38. Also Vallirāṣṭra. There are Mallas in the east, along the foot of the Himālaya, in Bhīma's Dig-vijaya; but we should rather look for them in the north-west, in the site of the Malli of Arrian. We have in the Purāṇas. Mahārāṣṭra, the Mahratta country, which may be here intended.

39. Two copies read Kevala; one, Kambala. The text is probably wrong, as we have Kerala below.

40. Also Vārāyāśis and Varavāśis: one copy has, what is likely to be most correct, Vānarāśyas, 'the monkey-faced people.'

41. Read Upavāha and Pravāha.

42. The MSS. agree in reading this Vakra.

43. The Śakas occur again, more than once, which may be possibly unnecessary repetition : but these people, the Sakai and Sacae of classical writers, the Indo-Scythians of Ptolemy, extended, about the commencement of our era, along the west of India, from the Hindu Koh to the mouths of the Indus.

44. The inhabitants of Tīrthut.

45. The people of South Behar.

46. Also read Mahy as and Suhmas : the latter is probably correct. The Suhmas and Prasuhmas were found in the east by Bhīma : and Suhma is elsewhere said to be situated east of Bengal, towards the sea, the king and the people being Mlechchhas, that is not Hindus : it would correspond therefore with Tiperah and Aracan.

47. Also read Malajas, but less correctly perhaps. The Malayas are the people of the southern Ghats.

48. We have Pravijayas in the east, according to the Purāṇas.

49. Aṅga is the country about Bhagalpur, of which Champa was the capital.

50. Eastern Bengal.

51. We have had these before, but they are repeated perhaps in conformity to the usual classification, which connects them with the two preceding, being derived in the genealogical lists from a common ancestor.

52. In Bhīma's Dig-vijaya we have two people of this name, both in the east; one along the foot of the Himālaya, and the other more to the south.

53. Uniformly read in the MSS. Sudeṣṇa.

54. Three copies read Māhiṣas. We have Mahiṣakas amongst the southern people in the Purāṇas; and a Māhiṣiki in the Rāmāyaṇa, also in the South: the latter may be connected with Māhiṣmatī, which Sahadeva visits in his southern invasion, and which has been elsewhere conjectured to be in Mysore. (Calcutta Annual Register. 1822.) There is also a Māhiṣmafi on the road to the south (Mahābh. Udyoga P.), which is commonly identified with Chuli Maheśvar, on the Narmadā.

55. Also Ṛṣikas; people placed by the Rāmāyaṇa both in the north and in the south. Arjuna visits the former, and exacts from them eight horses- Dig-vijaya.

56. Also read Bāhikas; which we may here prefer, as the Bāhikas are subsequently named : the former are described in the Mahābhārata, Karna Parva, with some detail, and comprehend the different nations of the Punjab, from the Sutlej to the Indus.

57. These are included amongst the northern nations; Vāyu, etc.; but in Nakula's Dig-vijaya they are in the west.

58. The Ābhīras, according to the Purāṇas, are also in the north : in the Rāmāyaṇa and Mahābhārata Sabhā P. they are in the west. The fact seems to be, that the people along the Indus, from Surat, to the Himālaya, are often regarded as either western or northern nations, according to the topographical position of the writer : in either case the same tribes are intended.

59. The MSS. read Kālatayakas. a people placed by the Purāṇas in the north.

60. The Vāyu reads Aparītas, a northern nation. There are Aparytae in Herodotus, classed with a people bordering on India, the Gandari. The term in the text signifies also "borderers," and is probably correct, as opposed to the following word Parāntas : the latter signifying those beyond, and the former, those not beyond the borders. The latter has for Parāntas, Parītas; and the Matsya, Parādas.

61. Also Pahlavas, a northern or north-western nation, often mentioned in Hindu writings, in Manu. the Rāmāyaṇa, the Purāṇas, &c. They were not a Hindu people and may have been some of the tribes between India and Persia.

62. Also Carmakhāṇḍikas, but the sense is the same : those living in the district Maṇḍala or Khaṇḍa of Charma; they are a northern people : Vāyu, etc. Pliny mentions a king of a people so called, "Charmarum rex."

63. Read Marubhaumas : more satisfactorily, as it means the inhabitants of Marubhūmi, 'the desert;' the sands of Sindh.

64. Also Surāṣṭras, which is no doubt more correct; the inhabitants of Surat.

65. The Kekayas or Kaikeyas appear amongst the chief nations in the war of the Mahābhārata, their king being a kinsman of Kṛṣṇa. The Rāmāyaṇa, II. 53. specifies their position beyond, or west of. the Vipāṣa.

66. We have in the Purāṇas Kuṭṭapracharaṇas and Kuṭṭaprāvaraṇas amongst the mountain tribes.

67. These may be people upon the Mahi river : they are named amongst the southern nations by the Vāyu, etc., but the west is evidently intended.

68. Read also Kachchas : the Purāṇas have Kacchiyas. The form is equally applicable to people dwelling in districts contiguous to water and in marshy spots, and denotes the province still called Cutch.

69. Also read Adhya. Antya, and Andhra : the latter is the name of Telingana, the Andhri of Pliny.

70. Three MSS. have Malada, a people of the east in Bhīma's Dig-vijaya.

71. Also Mānavalakas.

72. A people of the east.

73. The western provinces of Bengal, or, as sometimes used in a more comprehensive sense, it includes the following districts : Rājshahī, Dinajpur, and Rangpur; Nadiya. Birbhum, Burdwan, part of Midnapur, and the Jungle Mahals; Ramgarh. Pachete, Palamow, and part of Chunar. See an account of Pundra, translated from what is said to be part of the Brahmāṇḍa section of the Bhaviṣya Purāṇa. Calcutta Quart. Mag. Dec. 1824.

74. There is considerable variety in this term, Lārga, Mārja. Samuttara, and Samantara: probably neither is correct. Bhargas are amongst the people subdued in the east by Bhīma.

75. These are foresters and barbarians in general.

76. Notwithstanding the celebrity of this country, as the kingdom of Nala. it does not appear exactly where it was situated : we may conclude it was not far from Vidharba (Berar) as that was the country of Damayanti. From the directions given by Nala to Damayanti, it is near the Vindhya mountain and Payoshni river, and roads lead from it across the Rksa mountain to Avantī and the south, as well as to Vidarbha and to Kośalā. Nalopākhyāna, sec. 9.

77. These are always placed in the west : they are fabled to be the descendants of Anartta, the son of Saryati, who founded the capital Kuśasthali, afterwards Dvārakā, on the sea-shore in Guzerat.

78. Also Pratimatsyas : those opposite or adjacent to the Matsyas.

79. Also Kusajas and Kosalas; the latter is probably correct, as the name does not occur in any other form than that of Kasi-kośalā above, Kośalā is a name variously applied. Its earliest and most celebrated application is to the country on the banks of the Sarayū, the kingdom of Rāma of which Ayodhyā was the capital. Rāmāyana, I. s. 5. In the Mahābhārata we have one Kośaś in the east and another in the south, besides the Prak-kośalas and Uttara-Kośalas in the east and north. The Purānas place the Kośalas amongst the people 'on the back of Vindhya;' and it would appear from the Vāyu that Kuśa, the son of Rāma, transferred his kingdom to a more central position; he ruled over Kośalā at his capital of Kuśasthalī or Kuśavatī, built upon the Vindhyan precipices :विन्ध्यपर्वतसानुषु। the same is alluded to in the Pātāla Khaṇḍa of the Padma Purāna, and in the Raghu Varīṣa, for the purpose of explaining the return of Kuśa to Ayodhyā. Certainly in later times the country of Kośalā lay south of Qude, for in the Ratnāvalī the general of Vatsa surrounds the king of Kośalā in the Vindhya mountains: (Hindu Theatre, II.305) and as noticed in the same work, (p. 267) we have in the Purānas, Sapta Kośalās, or seven Kośalās. An inscription found at Ratnapur in Chattisgarh,, of which I have an unpublished translation, states that Sri-deva, the governor of Malahari Maṇḍala, having obtained the favour of Prithvīdeva, king of Kośalā was enabled to build temples, and dig tanks, &c., indicating the extension of the power of Kośalā across the Gnges in that direction. The inscription is dated Samvat 915, or A.D. 858. The Kośalā of the Purānas and of the dramatic and poetic writers was however more to the west, along a part of the Vindhya range. Ptolemy has a Kontakossula in the south, probably one of the Kośalās of the Hindus.

80. Also Itīkas; perhaps the Iṣikas or Aiṣikas of the Vāyu. &c. a people of the south.

81. The people of Kashmir.

82. One of the chief tribes engaged in the war of the Mahābhārata. The Rāmāyana places them in the west; the Purānas in the north. The term Sīndhu shows their position to have been upon the Indus, apparently in the Punjab.

83. These are also a people of the north-west, found both on the west of the Indus and in the Punjab, and well known to classical authors as the Gandharii and Gandaridae. As. Res., XV. 103; also Journal of the R. As. Soc.: Account of the Foe-küeki.

84. From the context this should probably be Darvakas, the people of a district usually specified in connexion with the succeeding.

85. These are the inhabitants of the country bordering on Kashmir, to the south and west; known to the Greeks as the kingdom of Abisaras. It often occurs in composition with Darva, as Darvābhīsāra. As. Res., XV. 24.

86. Also read Ulūṭas and Kulūṭas: the Rāmāyana has Kolūkas or Kaulūṭas amongst the western tribes.

87. Also with the short vowel, Saivalas.

88. The Vāhlīkas or Bābhīkas are always associated with the people of the north, west, and ultra-Indian provinces, and are usually considered to represent the Bactrians, or people of Balkh. It is specified in the Mahābh. Udyoga P. as famous for its horses, a reputation the country bordering upon it, at least Bokhara and Maimena, still preserves: and in Arjuna's Dig-vijaya it is said to be difficult of approach.

89. These are probably intended for the neighbours of the Abhisāras: they are found in the north by Arjuna. Dig-vijaya. and are there termed also Kṣatriyas.

90. Also read Bāhabādhyā and Bāhurada.

91. The name occurs in the Rāmāyana as that of a mountain in the Punjab or in the Bāhīka country. II. 53.

92. The MSS. agree in reading this Vānāyava or Vanayus, a people in the north-west, also famous for horses.

93. A better reading is Dasapārsva, as we have had Daśārṇas before. 94 Also Ropanas: qucrc, Romans?

95. Also Gachchas and Kachchas: the last is the best reading, although it has occurred 'before.'

96. Also Gopāla-kachchas: they are amongst the eastern tribes in Bhīma's Dig-vijaya.

97. Or Langalas.

98. Kurujāngalas, or the people of the forests in the upper part of the Doab: it is also read Paravallabhas.

99. The analogy to 'barbarians' is not in sound only, but in all the authorities these are classed with borderers and foreigners and nations not Hindu.

100. Also Dāhas, in which we should have a resemblance to the Scythian Dahae.

101. Or Tāmaliptas or Dāmaliptas: the people at the western mouth of the Gaṅgā in Medinipur and Tamluk. Tamralipli was a celebrated sea-port in the

- fourth century. (Account of the Foe-küe-ki.) and retained its character in the ninth and twelfth. Daśa Kumāra Carita and Bṛhat Kathā; also Jown, Royal As. Sac.
102. The people of Odra or Orissa.
 103. The inhabitants of Puṇḍra: see note 73.
 104. The people of the Coromandel coast, from Madras southwards: those by whom the Tamil language is spoken.
 105. The people of Malabar proper.
 106. Also Prāsyas. Pr&cbyas properly means the people of the east. the Prasii of the Greeks, east of the Gangā.
 107. Mūshika is the southernmost part of the Malabar coast. Cochin and Travancore.
 108. Also Vānavāsinas and Vānavāsikas; the inhabitants of Banawasi, the Banavasi of Ptolemy, a town the remains of which are still extant in the district of Sunda.
 109. The people of the centre of the Peninsula, the proper Karnāta or Karnatic,
 110. The people of Mysore: see note 54.
 111. Also Vikalpas.
 212. Also Pushkalas.
 113. Also Karṇikas.
 114. Read Kuotikas,
 115. Variously read Nalakālaka, Nabhakānana, and Tilakanija.
 116. Kaukundaka and Kaukuntaka.
 117. The inhabitants of the lower part of the Coromandel coast; so called after them Chola-mandala.
 118. People of the Konkan: according to some statements there are seven districts so named.
 119. Malavanara and Silavinaka.
 120. These two words are sometimes compounded as kukkurāmgāra: it is also read Kanurājada.
 121. This is a questionable name, though the MSS. agree. We have in Arjuna's Dig-vijaya, Utsavamanketa; and in Nakūṭa's, to (he west, Utsavasanketa.
 122. These are amongst the warriors of the Mahābhārata: they are included in all the lists amongst the northern tribes, and are mentioned in the Rājatarangini as not far from Kashmir: they are considered to be the people of Lahore.
 123. Also Vyukas and Vṛkas: the latter are specified amongst the central nations: Vāyu etc.
 124. Kokovakas and Kokanakhas.
 125. Sāras and Vegasaras: also Parasañcārakas.
 126. Vindhypālakas and Vindhyanulikas: the latter, those at the foot of Vindhya, are named in the Paurānik lists amongst the southern tribes.
 127. Balvala and Valkaja.
 128. Also Mālaka and Mājava.
 129. Also Vallabhas. which from the succeeding word may be conjectured to be correct. A city named Vallabhī makes a great figure in the traditions of Rajputana. See Tod's Rajasthan.
 130. One of the tribes in the west or north-west subdued by Arjuna.
 131. Kālada and Dohada.
 132. Kuṇḍala, Karantha, and Maṇḍaka: the latter occurs in the Rāmāyaṇa amongst the eastern nations.
 133. Kurata, Kunaka.
 134. Stanabāla.
 135. Satīrtha, Satīya, Nārīya.
 136. The Srinjayas area people from the north-west amongst the warriors of the Mabābhārata: the reading may be incorrect. It occurs also Putīsrinjaya.
 137. Also Aninda.
 138. Also Sivata. Sirāla, Syuvaka.
 139. Tanapa. Stanapa, Sulapa.
 140. Pallipanjaka and Vidarbha.
 141. Dadhibidarbha, but three copies have Rishika. Great variety, and no doubt great inaccuracy, prevails in the MSS. in several of the names here given: they are not found elsewhere.
 142. The reading of three copies is Kākas: there is a tribe so called on the banks of the Indus, as it leaves the mountains.
 143. These and the following are mountaineers in the north-west. The former are placed by the Purāṇas in the north, and the Vāyu includes them also amongst the mountain tribes. The Rāmāyaṇa has Tankanas in the north.
 144. The term Yavanas. although in later times applied to the Mohammedans, designated formerly the Greeks, as observed in the valuable notes on the translation of the Birth of Umā, from the Kumāra Swnbhava. (Journal As. Soc. of Bengal, July 1833.) The Greeks were known throughout western Asia by the term ty Yavan; or Ion. Iaoves: the Yavana, यवन्, of the Hindus; or as it occurs in its Prakrit form, in the very curious inscription deciphered by Prinsep. (J. As. Soc. Beng. Feb. 1838,) Yona: the term Yona Raji being there associated with the name Antiochus, in all likelihood Antiochus the Great, the ally of the Indian prince Sophagasesnas, about B. C. 210. That the Macedonian or Bactrian Greeks were most usually intended is not only probable from their position and relations with India, but from their being usually named in concurrence with the north-western tribes, Kambojas, Daradas, Pāradas, Bāhlikas, Śakas, &c. in the Rāmāyaṇa, Mahābhārata, Purāṇas, Manu and in various poems and plays.

145. Chinas or Chinese, or rather the people of Chinese Tarlary, are named in the Rāmāyaṇa and Manu, as well as in the Purāṇas. If the designation China was derived from the Tsin dynasty, which commenced B. C. 260. this forms a limit of antiquity for the works in question. The same word however, or Tsin, was the ancient appellation of the northern province of Shen-sy, and it may have reached the Hindus from thence at an earlier period.

146. These Wilford regards as the people of Arachosia. They are always mentioned together with the north-western tribes, Yavanas, Śakas, and the like: they are also famous for their horses: and in the Rāmāyaṇa they are said to be covered with golden lotuses : कर्चनै कमलैशापि काम्बोजानपि संवृतान्। What is meant is doubtful, probably some ornament or embellishment of their dress. We have part of the name of Kambi, in the Cambistholi of Arrian: the last two syllables, no doubt, represent the Sanskrit Sthala, 'place' 'district,' and the word denotes the dwellers in the Kamba or Kambis country: so Kāmboja may be explained those born in Kamba or Kambas.

147. Also Śakridvaha or Sakridguha.

148. Also Kulachchas and Kuntalas: the Purāṇas have Kupathas amongst the mountain tribes.

149. Also Pāratakā: the first is not a common form in the Purāṇas, although it is in poetical writings, denoting, no doubt, the Persians, or people of Pars or Fars: the latter, also read Pāradas, may imply the same, as beyond (Pāra) the Indus.

150. We have Ramathas in Nakula's Dig-vijaya. and in the Vāyu and Matsya.

151. Daśamānas and Deśamānikas, in the north: Vāyu and Matsya.

152. The passage occurs in the Vāyu and Mārkandeya Purāṇas, as well as in the Mahābhārata; but the purport is not very distinct, and the proper reading is doubtful. In three MSS. of the latter it occurs क्षत्रियो यानि वेशाश्च वैश्यशूद्रानि कुलानि च। the latter pāda is the same in all: the former, in a fourth copy, is क्षत्रियोपरिकेशाश्च। in two copies of the Vāyu it is क्षत्रियोयजिवशाश्च। None of these are intelligible, and the Mārkandeya furnishes the reading followed, क्षत्रियोपनिवेशाश्च। Modern geographers have supposed the Cathaei. Cathari and Chatriaei of the ancients, in the lower parts of the Punjab, to mean a people of Kṣatriyas; but no such people occur directly named in our lists. Considering that the text is speaking of barbarous and foreign tribes, perhaps no particular nation is here meant, and it may be intended as an epithet of those which follow, or of Vaiśya (agricultural) and Sūdra (servile or low) tribes, living either near to or after the manlier of Kṣatriyas: in that case a better reading would be, क्षत्रियोपनिवेशानि वैश्यशूद्रकुलानि च। According to Manu various northern tribes, the Śakas, Kāmbojas, Pāradas, Pahlavas, Kirātas. Daradas and Khasas and even the Chinas and Yavanas, are degraded Kṣatriyas, in consequence of neglecting religious rites. X.43,44. According to the Paurāṇik legend they were overcome in war by Sagara, and degraded from their original caste, See book IV.

153. Here we have a people called Śūdras by all the authorities, and placed in the west or north-west, towards the Indus. They have been ingeniously, and with probability, conjectured by Lassen to be the Oxydrace; for Śūdraka is equally correct with Śūdra; and in place of Οενδράκαι various MSS. of Strabo, as quoted by Siebenpfeiffer, read Σιδράκαι and Ενδράκαι: the latter is precisely the Sanskrit appellation. Pliny also has Sudraci for the people who formed the limit of Alexander's eastern conquests, or those hitherto inaccurately called Oxydraces.

154. These are always conjoined with the Śūdras, as if conterminous. Their situation is no doubt correctly indicated by Ptolemy by the position of Abiria above Pattalene on the Indus.

155. The Durds are still where they were at the date of our text, and in the days of Strabo and Ptolemy; not exactly, indeed, at the sources of the Indus, but along its course, above the Himālaya, just before it descends to India; a position which might well be taken for its head.

156. Also read Paśus, 'brutes.' If the term might be altered to Palli, it would imply 'village or pastoral tribes'

157. Also Khasikas and Khasakas. The first of these is probably most correct, being equivalent to Khasas, barbarians named along with the Sakas and Daradas by Manu, etc., traces of whom may be sought amongst the barbarous tribes on the north-east of Bengal, the Kasiyas: or it has been thought that they may be referred to the situation of Kashgar. Two copies have, in place of this, Tukhāras, and the same occurs in the Rāmāyaṇa: the Vāyu has Tushāras, but the Mārkanḍeya. Tukhāra: these are probably the Tochari, Tachari, or Thogari, a tribe of the Śakas, by whom Bactria was taken from the Greeks, and from whom Tocharestan derives the name it still bears.

158. Also Pahlavas and Pallavas. The form in the text is the more usual.

159. The Rāmāyaṇa has Gahvaras. The mountains from Kabul to Bamian furnish infinitely numerous instance of cavern habitations.

160. These two, according to the Vāyu, are amongst the northern nations: but they might be thought to be religious fraternities, from the sages Atri and Bharadvāja.

161. The latter member of the compound occurs posikas, pāyikas, and yodhikas, 'cherishers,' 'drinkers,' or 'fighters': the first term denotes the female breast.

162. Also Dronākas, 'people of vallies.'

163. Also Kajingas, Kalingas would be here out of place.

164. These and the preceding are included by the Vāyu amongst the mountain tribes of the north.

165. Many names indeed might be added to the catalogue from the lists referred to in the Vāyu, Matsya, and Mārkanḍeya Purāṇas, as well as several capable of verification from the Rāmāyaṇa, and other passages of the Mahābhārata. This is not the place however to exhaust the subject, and it has been prosecuted too far perhaps already. It is evident that a very considerable proportion of the names recorded can be verified, and that many of them may be traced in the geographical notices of India left by the historians of Alexander's expedition. That more cannot be identified is owing in a great measure to incomplete research; and a more extensive examination of the authorities would no doubt discover passages where circumstances, as well as names, are given by which the places would be recognised. It is evident, however, that much embarrassment also arises from the inaccuracy of manuscripts, which vary widely and irreconcilably, I have given instances from four different copies of the text; one in my own possession, three in the library of the East India Company; all very excellent copies, but manifestly erroneous in many respects in their nomenclature of places, and particularly of those which are least known. No assistance is to be had from any commentary, as the subject is one of little interest in native estimation.

Medhātithi, who was made sovereign of Plakṣa, had seven sons, Śāntabhaya, Śisira, Sukhodaya, Ānanda, Śiva, Kṣemaka, and Dhruva; and the Dvīpa was divided amongst them, and each division was named after the prince to whom it was subject. The several kingdoms were bounded by as many ranges of mountains, named severally Gomeda, Candra, Nārada, Dundubhi, Somaka, Sumanas, and Vaibharāja. In these mountains the sinless inhabitants ever dwell along with celestial spirits and gods: in them are many holy places; and the people there live for a long period, exempt from care and pain, and enjoying uninterrupted felicity. There are also, in the seven divisions of Plakṣa, seven rivers, flowing to the sea, whose names alone are sufficient to take away sin: they are the Anutaptā, Śikhī, Vipāsā, Tridivā, Kramu, Amritā and Sukritā. These are the chief rivers and mountains of Plakṣa-dvīpa, which I have enumerated to you; but there are thousands of others of inferior magnitude. The people who drink of the waters of those rivers are always contented and happy, and there is neither decrease nor increase amongst them,¹ neither are the revolutions of the four ages known in these Varsas: the character of the time is there uniformly that of the Treta (or silver) age. In the five Dvīpas, worthy Brāhmaṇa, from Plakṣa of Śāka, the length of life is five thousand years, and religious merit is divided amongst the several castes and orders of the people.

The castes are called Aryaka, Kuru, Vivāsa and Bhāvi, corresponding severally with Brāhmaṇa, Kṣatriya, Vaiśya and Śūdra. In this Dvīpa is a large fig-tree (F. religiosa), of similar size as the Jambu-tree of Jambudvīpa; and this Dvīpa is called Plakṣa, after the name of the tree. Hari, who is all, and the creator of all, is worshipped in this continent in the form of Soma (the moon). Plakṣa-dvīpa is surrounded, as by a disc, by the sea of molasses, of the same extent as the land. Such, Maitreya, is a brief description of Palkṣa-dvīpa.

The hero Vapusmat was king of the next or Śālmala-dvīpa, whose seven sons also gave designations to seven Varṣas, or divisions. Their names were Śveta, Hārīta, Jimūta, Rohita, Vaidyuta, Mānasa, and Suprabha. The Ikṣu sea is encompassed by the continent of Śālmala, which is twice its extent. There are seven principal mountain ranges, abounding in precious gems, and dividing the Varṣas from each other; and there are also seven chief rivers. The mountains are called Kumuda, Unnata, Valāhaka, Drona, fertile in medicinal herbs, Kanka, Mahiṣa, and Kakkudvat. The rivers are Yaunī, Toyā, Vitriṣṇā, Candrā, Mahiṣa, Śuklā, Vimochanī, and Nivritti; all whose waters cleans away sins. The Brāmans, Kṣatriyas, Vaiśyas, and Śūdras of this Dvīpa, called severally Kapilas, Arunas, Pōtas, and Rohitas (or tawny, purple, yellow, and red), worship the imprishable soul of all things, Viṣṇu, in the form of Vāyu (wind), with pious rites, and enjoy frequent association with the gods. A large Śālmalī (silk-cotton) tree grows in this Dvīpa, and gives it its name. The Dvīpa is surrounded by the Surā sea (sea of wine), of the same extent as itself.

The Surā sea is entirely encircled by Kuśa-dvīpa, which is every way twice the size of the preceding continent. The king, Jyotiṣmat, had seven sons, Udbhida, Venumān, Svairatha, Lavana, Dhriti, Prabhākara, and Kapila, after whom the seven portions or Varṣas of the island were called Udbhida, &c. There reside mankind along with Daityas and Dānavas, as well as with spirits of heaven and gods. The four castes, assiduously devoted to their respective duties, are termed Dāmīs, Śuṣmis, Snehas, and Mandehas, who in order to be relieved of the obligations imposed upon them in the discharge of their several functions, worship Janārddana, in the form of Brahmā, and thus get rid of the unpleasant duties which lead to temporal rewards. The seven principal mountains in this Dvīpa are named Vidruma, Hemaśaila, Dyutimān, Puśpavān, Kuśeśaya, Hari, and Mandara; and the seven rivers are Dhūtapāpa, Śivā, Pavitrā, Sammati, Vidyudambhā, Mahāvanyā, Sarvapāpaharā: besides these, there are numerous rivers and mountains of less importance. Kuśa-dvīpa is so named from a clump of Kuśa grass (Poa) growing there. It is surrounded by the Ghṛta sea (the sea of butter), of the same size as the continent.

The sea of Ghṛta is encompassed by Krauñca-dvīpa, which is twice as large as Kuśa-dvīpa. The king of this Dvīpa was Dyutimān, whose sons, and the seven Varṣas named after them, were Kuśala, Mallaga, Ushṇa, Pīvara, Andhakāraka, Muni, and Dundubhi. The seven boundary mountains, pleasing to gods and celestial spirits, are Krauñca, Vāmana, Andhakāraka, Devavrit, Puṇḍarikāvān, Dundubhi, and Mahaśaila; each of which is in succession twice as lofty as the series that precedes it, in the same manner as each Dvīpa is twice as extensive as the one before it. The inhabitants reside there without apprehension, associating with the bands of divinities. The Brāhmaṇas are called Puśkaras; the Kṣatriyas, Puśkalas; the Vaiśyas are termed Dhanyas; and the Śūdras, Tiśyas. They drink of countless streams, of which the principal are denominated Gaurī, Kumuvatī, Sandhyā, Rātri, Manojavā, Kṣanti, and Puṇḍrikā. The divine Viśṇu, the protector of mankind, is worshiped there by the people, with holy rites, in the form of Rudra. Krauñca is surrounded by the sea of curds, of a similar extent; and that again is encompassed by Sāka-dvīpa.

The sons of Bhavya, the king of Śāka-dvīpa, after whom its Varṣas were denominated, were Jalada, Kumāra, Sukumāra, Manicaka, Kusumoda, Maudākī, and Mahādruma. Ths seven mountains separating the countries were Udayagiri, Jalādhāra, Raivataka, Śyāma Āmbikeya, Ramya, and Keśarī. There grows a large Śāka (Teak) tree, frequented by the Siddhas and Gandharbas, the wind from which, as produced by its fluttering leaves, diffuses delight. The sacred lands of this continent are peopled by the four castes. Its seven holy rivers, that wash away all sin, are the Sukumārī, Kumārī, Nalinī, Dhenukā Ikṣu, Venukā and Gabasti. There are also hundreds and thousands of minor streams and mountains in this Dvīpa: and the inhabitants of Jalada and the other divisions drink of those water with pleasure, after they have returned to earth from Indra's heaven. In those seven districts there is no dereliction of virtue; there is no contention; there is no deviation from rectitude. The caste of Mṛga is that of the Brāhmaṇa; the Māgadha, of the Kṣatriya; the Mānasa, of the Vaiśya; and the Mandaga of the Śūdra: and by these Viṣṇu is devoutly worshipped as the sun, with appropriate ceremonies. Sāka-dvīpa is encircled by the sea of milk, as by an armlet and the sea is of the same breadth as the continent which it embraces.²

The Kṣiroda ocean (or sea of milk) is encompassed by the seventh Dvīpa, or Puṣkara, which is twice the size of Śāka-dvīpa. Savana, who was made its sovereign, had but two sons, Mahāvīra and Dhātokī, after whom the two Varṣas of Puṣkara were so named. These are divided by one mighty range of mountains, called Mānasottara, which runs in a circular direction (forming an outer and an inner circle). This mountain is fifty thousand Yojanas in height, and as many in its breadth; dividing the Dvīpa in the middle, as if with a bracelet, into two divisions, which are also of a circular form, like the mountain that separates them. Of these two, the Mahāvīra-varṣa is exterior to the circumference of Mānasottara, and Dhātokī lies within the circle; and both are frequented by heavenly spirits and gods. There are no other mountains in Puṣkara, neither are there any rivers.³ Men in this Dvīpa live a thousand years, free from sickness and sorrow, and unruffled by anger or affection. There is neither virtue nor vice, killer nor slain: there is no jealousy, envy, fear, hatred, covetousness, nor any moral defeat: neither is there truth or falsehood. Food is spontaneously produced there, and all the inhabitants feed upon vairāgiṇīs of every flavour. Men there are indeed of the same nature with gods, and of the same form and habits. There is no distinction of caste or order; there are no fixed institutes; nor are rites performed for the sake of advantage. The three Vedas, the Purāṇas, ethics, and polity, and the laws of service, are unknown. Puṣkara is in fact, in both its divisions, a terrestrial paradise, where time yields happiness to all its inhabitants, who are exempt from sickness and decay. A Nyagrodha-tree (Ficus indica) grows on this Dvīpa, which is the especial abode of Brahmā, and he resides in its, adored by the gods and demons. Pushkara is surrounded by the sea of fresh water, which is of equal extent with the continent it invests.⁴

In this manner the seven island continents are encompassed successively by the seven oceans, and each ocean and continent is respectively of twice the extent of that which precedes it. In all the oceans the water remains at all times the same in quantity, and never increases or diminishes; but like the water in a caldron, which in consequence of its combination with heat, expands, so the waters of the ocean swell with the increase of the moon. The waters, although really neither more nor less, dilate or contract as the moon increases or wanes in the light and dark fortnights. The rise and fall of the waters of the different seas is five hundred and ten inches.⁵

Beyond the sea of fresh water is a region of twice its extent, where the land is of gold, and where no living beings reside. Thence extends the Lokāloka mountain, which is ten thousand Yojanas in breadth, and as many in height; and beyond it perpetual darkness invests the mountain all around; which darkness is again encompassed by the shell of the egg.⁶

Such, Maitreya, is the earth, which with its continents, mountains, oceans and exterior shell, is fifty crores (five hundred millions) of Yojanas in extent.⁷ It is the mother and nurse of all creatures, the fundaton of all worlds, and the chief of the elements.

NOTES

1. So the commentator explains the terms Avasarpīṇī and Utsarpīṇī, अवसर्पिणी हासावस्था— but these words most commonly designate divisions of time pecular to the Jainas; during the former of which men are supposed to decline from extreme felicity to extreme distress; and in the latter, to ascend from misery to happiness. The author of the text had possibly the Jaina use of these terms in view; and if so, wrote after their system was promulgated.

2 The Kūrma is the only Purāṇa in which the white island, Śveta-Dvīpa, the abode of Viṣṇu, is included in the geography of the world : an incidental description of it is quoted by Wilford from the Uttara Khanḍa of the Padma Purāṇa (As. Res. XI. 99); and it is in this and in the Brahma Vaivartta that allusions to it are most frequent and copious.

3 A slight alteration has been made here in the order of the description.

4 The description of the Dvīpas in the Agni, Brahma, Kūrma, and Vāyu Purāṇas agrees with that of our text. The Mārkanḍeya, Liṅga, and Matsya contain no details. The Bhāgavata and Padma follow the same order as the Viṣṇu, &c. but alter all the names, and many of the measurements. The account of the Mahābhārata is very irregular and confused. The variations throw no additional light upon the geographical system of the Purāṇas. Some traces of this appear discoverable in the west; and the seven Dvīpas, with their surrounding seas, may have some connexion with the notion of the seven climates, as Wilford has supposed. That learned, but fanciful writer bestowed great pains upon the verification of these fictions, and imagined the different Dvīpas to represent actual divisions of the globe : Jambu being India. Kuśa the Kuś of Scripture, or the countries between Mesopotamia and India: Plakṣa being Asia Minor: Śālmali, eastern Europe; Krauñca, Germany : f&kfl, the British isles; and Pushkara, Iceland. The white or silver island, or island of the moon, was also, according to him, the island of Great Britain. Whatever may be thought of his conclusions, his essays on these subjects, particularly in the eighth, tenth, and eleventh volumes of the Asiatic Researches, contain much curious and interesting matter.

5 Although the Hindus seem to have had a notion of the cause of the tides, they were not very accurate observers of the effect. The extreme rise of the tide in the Hugli river has never exceeded twenty feet, and its average is about fifteen, (As. Res. vol. XVUL Kyd on the Tides of the Hugli.)

6 The Aṇḍa Kaṭāha (अण्डकटाहः) The Kaṭāha is properly a shallow hemispherical vessel, a saucer; but compounded in this form, implies the shell of the mundane egg. The Bhāgavata thus describes these portions of the world : "Beyond the sea of fresh water is the mountain belt, called Lokāloka, the circular boundary between the world and void space. The interval between Meru and Mānasottara is the land of living beings. Beyond the fresh water sea is the region of gold, which shines like the bright surface of a mirror, but from which no sensible object presented to it is ever reflected, and consequently it is avoided by living creatures. The mountain range by which it is encircled is termed Lokāloka, because the world is separated by it from that which is not world (लोकालोक इति समाख्याते यदनेनाचलेन लोकोऽलोकक्षान्तर्भृतिना व्यवस्थाप्यते); for which purpose it was placed by Iśwara on the limit of the three worlds; and its height and breadth are such that the rays of the heavenly luminaries, from the sun to the polar-star, which spread over the regions within the mountain, cannot penetrate beyond it." According to Wilford, however, there is a chasm in the belt, and a sea beyond it, where Viṣṇu abides; but he has not given his authorities for this. (As. Res. XI. 14.) The Mohammedan legends of Koh Kaf, the stony girdle that surrounds the world,¹ are evidently connected with the Lokāloka of the Hindus. According to the Śiva Tantra, the El Dorado, at the foot of the Lokaloka mountains, is the play-ground of the gods (हेममयी भूमिर्देवानां क्रोडनाथीय)।

7. This comprises the planetary spheres : for the diameter of the seven zones and oceans— each ocean being of the same diameter as the continent it encloses, and each successive continent being twice the diameter of that which precedes it— amounts to but two crores and fifty-four lacs. The golden land is twice the diameter of Puṣkara, or two crores and fifty-six lacs; and the Lokāloka is but ten thousand Yojanas. So that the whole is five crores ten lacs and ten thousand (5.10.10.000). According to the Śiva Tantra, the golden land is ten crores of Yojanas, making, with the seven continents, one fourth of the whole measurement. Other calculations occur, the incompatibility of which is said by the commentators on our text, and on that of the Bhāgavata, to arise from reference being made to different Kalpas, and they quote the same stanza to this effect : कवचित् कवचित्पुराणेषु विरोधो यदि लक्ष्यते कल्पभेदादिभिस्तत्र व्यवस्था सद्विरिष्यते। 'Whenever any contradictions in different Purāṇas are observed, they are ascribed by the pious to differences of Kalpas and the like.

Parāśara said— The extent of the surface of the earth has been thus described to you, Maitreya. Its depth below the surface is said to be seventy thousand Yojanas, each of the seven regions of Pātāla extending downwards ten thousand. These seven, worthy Muni, are called Atala, Vitala, Nitala, Gabhastimat, Mahātala, Sutala, and Pātāla.¹ Their soil is severally white, black, purple, yellow, sandy, stony, and of gold. They are embellished with magnificent palaces, in which dwell numerous Dānavas, Daityas, Yakṣas, and great snakegods.

The Muni Nārada, after his return from those regions to the skies,² declared amongst the celestials that Pātāla was much more delightful than Indra's heaven. "What," exclaimed the sage, can be compared to Pātāla, where the Nāgas are decorated with brilliant and beautiful and pleasure-shedding jewels? Who will not delight in Pātāla, where the lovely daughters of the Daityas and Dānavas wander about, fascinating even the most austere; where the rays of the sun diffuse light, and not heat, by day; and where the moon shines by night for illumination, not for cold; where the sons of Danu, happy in the enjoyment of delicious viands and strong wines, know not how time passes.

There are beautiful groves and streams and lakes where the lotus blows; and the skies are resonant with the Koil's song. Spentied ornaments, fragrant perfumes, rich unguents, the blended music of the lute and pipe and tabor; these and many other enjoyments are the common portion of the Dānavas, Daityas, and snake-gods, who inhabit the regions of Pātāla.³

Below the seven Pātālas is the form of Viṣṇu, proceeding from the quality of darkness, which is called Sesā⁴. the excellencies of which neither Daityas nor Dānavas can fully enumerate. This being is called Ananta by the spirits of heaven, and is worshipped by sages and by gods. He has a thousand heads, which are embellished with the pure and visible mystic sign⁵: and the thousand Jewels in his crests give light to all the regions. For the benefit of the world he deprives the Asuras of their strength. He rolls his eyes fiercely, as if intoxicated. He wears a single ear-ring, a diadem, and wreath upon each brow; and shines like the white mountains topped with flame. He is clothed in purple raiment, and ornamented with a white necklace, and looks like another Kailāsa, with the heavenly Gangā flowing down its precipices. In one hand he holds a plough, and in the other a pestle; and he is attended by Vāruṇī (the goddess of wine), who is his own embodied radiance. From his mouths, at the end of the Kalpa, proceeds the venomous fire that, impersonated as Rudra, who is one with Balarāma, devours the three worlds.

Sesā bears the entire world, like a diadem, upon his head, and he is the foundation on which the seven Patālas rest. His power, his glory, his form, his nature, cannot be described, cannot be comprehended by the gods themselves. Who shall recount his might, who wears this whole earth, like a garland of flowers, tinged of a purple dye by the radiance of the jewels of his crests. When Ananta, his eyes rolling with intoxication, yawns, then earth, with all her woods, and mountains, and seas, and rivers, trembles. Gandharvas, Apsarasas, Siddhas, Kinnaras, Uragas and Chāraṇas are unequal to hymn his praises, and therefore he is called the infinite (Ananta), the imperishable. The sandal paste, that is ground by the wives of the snake-gods, is scattered abroad by his breath, and sheds perfume around the skies.

The ancient sage Garga,⁶ having propitiated Śeṣa, acquired from him a knowledge of the principles of astronomical science of the planets, and of the good and evil denoted by the aspects of the heavens. The earth, sustained upon the head of this sovereign serpent, supports in its turn the garland of the spheres, along with their inhabitants, men, demons and gods.

NOTES

1. In the Bhāgavata and Padma P. they are named Atala, Vitala, Sutala, Talātāla, Mahātala, Rasātala and Pātāla. The Vāyu has Rasātala, Sutala, Vitala, Gabhastala, Mahātala, Śrītala, and Pātāla. There are other varieties.

2. Allusion is here made, perhaps, to the description given in the Mahābhārata. Udyoga Parva, p. 218, of Nārada's and Mātali's visit to Pātāla. Several of the particulars there given are not noticed in the Purāṇas.

3. There is no very copious description of Pātāla in any of the Purāṇas. The most circumstantial are those of the Vāyu and Bhāgavata; the latter has been repeated, with some additions, in the first chapters of the Pātāla Khaṇḍa of the Padma Purāṇa. The Mahābhārata and these two Purāṇas assign different divisions to the Dānavas, Daityas, and Nāgas, placing Vāsuki and the other Nāga chiefs in the lowest : but the Vāyu has the cities of the principle Daityas and Nāgas in each; as in the first those of the Daitya Namuchi, and serpent Kāliya : in the second, of Hayagrīva and Takṣaka : in the third, of Prahlāda and Hemaka; in the fourth, of Kālanemi and Vainateya : in the fifth, of Hiranyākṣa and Kirmīra : and in the sixth, of Pulomān and Vāsuki; besides others. Bali the Daitya is the sovereign of Pātāla, according to this authority. The Mahābhārata places Vāsuki in Rasātala, and calls his capital Bhogavatī. The regions of Pātāla, and their inhabitants, are oftener the subjects of profane, than of sacred fiction, in consequence of the frequent intercourse between mortal heroes and the Nāga-kānyās, or serpent-nymphs. A considerable section of the Br̥hat Kathā, the Sūryaprabhā lambaka, consists of adventures and events in this subter-raneous world.

4. Śeṣa is commonly described as being in this situation : he is the great serpent on which Viśnu sleeps during the intervals of creation, and upon whose numerous heads the world is supported. The Purāṇas, making him one with Balarāma or Śāṅkarāṇa, who is an impersonation or incarnation of Śeṣa, blend the attributes of the serpent and the demigod in their description.

5. With the Svastika, a particular diagram used in mystical ceremonies.

6. One of the oldest writers on astronomy amongst the Hindus. According to Bentley, his Samhitā dates 548 B. C. (Ancient Astron. of the Hindus, p. 59.)

Kālasūtra, Tamas, Avīchi, Śvabhojana, Apratiṣṭha, and another Avīchi.² These and many other tearful hells are the awful provinces of the kingdom of Yama, terrible with instruments of torture and with fire; into which are hurled all those who are addicted when alive to sinful practices.³

The murderer of a Brāhmaṇa, stealer of gold, or drinker of wine, goes to the Śūkara (swine) hell; as does any one who associates with them. The murderer of a man of the second or third caste, and one who is guilty of adultery with the wife of his spiritual teacher, is sentenced to the Tāla (padlock) hell: and one who holds incestuous intercourse with a sister, or murders an ambassador, to Taptakumbha (or the hell of heated caldrons).

The vile wretch who eats his meal before offering food to the gods, to the manes, or to guests, falls into the hell called Lālābhakṣa (where saliva is given for food). The maker of arrows is sentenced to the Vēdhaka (piercing) hell: and the maker of lances, swords, and other weapons, to the dreadful hell called Viśasana (murderous).

He who takes unlawful gifts goes to the Adhomukha (or head inverted) hell; as does one who offers sacrifices to improper objects, and an observer of the stars (for the prediction of events). He who eats by himself sweetmeats mixed with his rice,⁵ and a Brāhmaṇa who vends Lac, flesh, liquors, sesamum, or salt, or one who commits violence, fall into the hell (whcre matter nows, or; Pūyavāha; as do they who rear cats, cocks, goats, dogs, hogs, or birds. Public performers,⁶ fishermen, the follower of one born in adultery, a poisoner, an informer, one who lives by his wife's prostitution⁷ one who attends to secular affairs on the days of the Parvas (or full and new moon. etc.),⁸ an incendiary, a treacherous friend, a soothsayer, one who performs religious ceremonies for rustics, and those who sell the acid Asclepias, used in sacrifices, go to the Rudhirāndha hell (whose wells are of blood). He who destroys a bee-hive, or pillages a hamler, is condemned to the Vaitaraṇī hell. He who causes impotence, trespasses on others' lands, is impure, or who lives by fraud, is punished in the hell called (black, or) Kṛṣṇa.

He who want only cuts down trees goes to the Asipatravana hell (the leaves of whose trees are swords): and a tender on sheep, and hunter of deer, to the hell termed Vahnijvālā (or fiery name); as do those who apply fire to unbaked vessels (potters) . The violator of a vow, and one who breaks the rules of his order, falls into the Sañdānsa (or hell of pincers): and the religious student who sleeps in the day, and is, though unconsciously, defiled; and they who, though mature, are instructed in sacred literature by their children, receive punishment in the hell called Śvabhojana (where they feed upon dogs).

The gods in heaven are beheld by the inhabitants of hell, as they move with their heads inverted; whilst the gods, as they cast their eyes downwards, behold the sufferings of those in hell.¹⁰ The various stages of existence, Maitreya, are inanimate things, fish, birds, animals, men, holy men, gods, and liberated spirits; each in succession a thousand degrees superior to that which precedes it: and through these stages the beings that are either in heaven or in hell are destined to proceed, until final emancipation be obtained.¹¹ That sinner goes to Naraka who neglects the due expiation of his guilt.

For, Maitreya, suitable acts of expiation have been enjoined by the great sages for every kind of crime.¹² Arduous penances for great sins, trifling ones for minor offences, have been propounded by Svayambhuva and others: but reliance upon Kṛṣṇa is far better than any such expiatory acts, as religious austerity, or the like. Let any one who repents of the sin of which he may have been culpable have recourse to this best of all expiations, remembrance of Hari:¹³ by admidday, a man shall be quickly cleaned from all guilt: the while heap of worldly sorrows is dispersed by meditating on Hari; and his worshipper, looking upon heavenly fruition as an impediment to felicity, obtains final emancipation. He whose mind is devoted to Hari in silent prayer, burnt-offering, or adoration, is impatient even of the glory of the king of the gods. Of what avail is ascent to the summit of heaven, if it is necessary to return from thence to earth? How different is the meditation on Vāsudeva, which is the seed of eternal freedom! Hence, Muni, the man who thinks of Viṣṇu, day and night, goes not to Naraka after death, for all his sins are atoned for.

Heaven (or Svarga) is that which delights the mind; hel (or Naraka) is that which gives it pain: hence vice is called hell; virtue is called heaven.¹⁴ The selfsame thing is applicable to the production of pleasure or pain, of malice or of anger. Whence then can it be considered as essentially the same with either? That which at one time is a source of enjoyment, becomes at another the cause of suffering; and the same thing may at different seasons excite wrath, or conciliate favour. It follows, then, that nothing is in itself either pleasurable or painful; and pleasure and pain, and the like, are merely definitions of various states of mind. That which alone is truth is wisdom; but wisdom may be the cause of confinement to existance; for all this universe is wisdom, there is nothing different from it; and consequently, Maitreya, you are to conclude that both knowledge and ignorance are comprised in wisdom.¹⁵

I have thus described to you the orb of the earth; the regions below its surface, or Pātālas; and the Narakas, or hells; and have briefly cnumerated its oceans, mountains, continents, regions and rivers: what else do you wish to hear?

1. The Bhāgavata places the Narakas above the waters. The commentator on our text endeavours to reconcile the difference, by explaining the text to imply a dark cavity in which the waters are received, not the original abysses where they were collected at first, and above which Tartarus lies: ब्रह्माण्डगत गर्भोदकातूर्ध्वमेव।

2. Some of these names are the same that are given by Manu; b. IV. V. 88-90. Kullūka Bhīṣṭa refers to the Mārkaṇḍeya P. for a description of the twenty-one divisions of hell; but the account there given is not more ample than that of ur text. The Bhāgavata enumerates twenty-eight, but many of the names differ from the above. In the last instance the term Avīchi is either inaccurately repeated, or the adjective Apara (अवीचिस्तथापरः) is intended to distinguish it from the previous Avīchi. In Many, Mahāvīchi occurs.

3. The Padma P. (Kriya Yoga Sāra) and the Śiva Dharma, which appears to be a section of the Skanda Purāṇa, contain a number of interesting circumstances previous to the infliction of punishment. It appears also from them that Yama fulfils the office of judge of the dead, as well as sovereign of the damned; all that die appearing before him, and being confronted with Chitragupra, the recorder, by whom their actions actions have been registered. The virtuous are thence conveyed to Svarga, or Elysium, whilst the wicked are driven to the different regions of Naraka, or Tartarus.

4. Who teaches the Veda for hire. This notion still prevails, and renders the few Pandits who are acquainted with the Vedas very unwilling to teach them for a gratuity.

5. Tereby, observes the commentator, defrauding or disappointing children.

6. Rangopajivina (रङ्गोपजीविनः) :the commentator explain it wrestlers and boxers, but Ranga applies to any stage or arena.

7. The term in the text is Māhishika, which might mean a feeder of buffaloes; but the commentator quotes a text from the Smṛti, authorizing the sanse above followed.

8. This is the interpretation of Parvakārī; it is also read Parvagāmī, he who cohabits with his wife on prohibited days.

9. An account of Naraka is found in only a few of the Purāṇas, and in less detail than in the text. The Bhāgavata and Vāyu have similar descriptions of them. The Mārkaṇḍeya enters into detail in some of the instances only. A short account is found in the Śiva, Garuḍa, and Brahma Vaivartta Purāṇa and in the Kāśi Khaṇḍa of the Skanda Purāṇa. The fullest descriptions, however, are those mentioned in a previous note as being in the Śiva Dharma of the Skanda, and Kriya Yoga Sāra of the Padma; works of a somewhat equivocal character, and belonging rather to Tantra than Purāṇik literature.

10. The commentator observes that the sight of heavenly bliss is given to the damend in order to exacerbate their torments; whilst the inflictions of hell are exhibited to the gods to teach them disregard of even heavenly enjoyments, as they are but of temporary durations.

11. That is, when punishment or reward in hell or heaven, proportioned to the sin or virtue of the individual, has been received, he must be born again as a stone or plant, and gradually migrate through the several inferior conditions, until he is once more born a man; his future state is then in his own power.

12. Manu is here especially intended, as the commentator observes.

13. Tis remembrance (संस्मरण) of Viṣṇu is the frequent reiteration of any or all of his names: hence the lower orders of Hindus procure a starling or parrot, that, in the act of teaching it to cry Rāma or Kṛṣṇa or Rādhā, they may themselves repeat these appellations; the simple recitation of which, even if accidentally, irreverently, or reluctantly performed, is meritorious. Thus according to the Viṣṇu Dharma Tantra : चक्रायुधस्य नामानि सदा सर्वत्र कीर्तयेत्। नाशौचकीर्तने तस्य पवित्रकरो यत॥ हरिर्हरति पापानि दुष्टचित्तैरपि स्मृतः। अनिष्ट्यापि संस्कृते दहत्यपि हि पावकः॥ 'Let a man ever and every where repeat the names of the discus-armed (Viṣṇu); for its repetition, even by one who is impure, is a means of purification. Hari removes all sins, even when invoked by evil-minded persons, as fire burns one by whom it is unwillingly approached.'

14. The object of the text, according to the commentator is to show that the common notions of heaven and hell are erroneous; that they are only temporal pleasure and temporal pain; and virtue and vice, being the origin of transient, and therefore unreal effects, are themselves unrealities: there is nothing real but faith in Viṣṇu.

15. Text and comment are here somewhat obscure; but the purport of the former seems to be the explanation of the existence of Jnān, wisdom, both as a genus and a species : in the former case it is all that is; and in the latter, it may be either true or false wisdom : the latter being influenced by notions of self or individuality, and therefore the cause of confinement to existence; the former dissipating the belief of self, and being therefore the cause of liberation from bodily being :

Parāśara said—The sphere of the earth (or Bhūr-loka), comprehending its oceans, mountains, and rivers, extends as far as it is illuminated by the rays of the sun and moon, and to the same extent, both in diameter and circumference, the sphere of the sky (Bhūvar-loka) spreads above it (as far upwards as to the planetary sphere, or Svar-loka).¹ The solar orb is situated a hundred thousand leagues from the earth; and that of the moon an equal distance from the sun. At the same interval above the moon occurs the orbit of all the lunar constellations. The planet Budha (Mercury) is two hundred thousand leagues above the lunar mansions. Śukra (Venus) is at the same distance from Mercury. Angāraka (Mars) is as far above Venus; and the priest of the gods (Bṛhaspati, or Jupiter) as far from Mars: whilst Saturn (Śani) is two hundred and fifty thousand leagues beyond Jupiter. The sphere of the seven R̄ṣis (Ursa Major) is a hundred thousand leagues above Saturn: and at a similar height above the seven R̄ṣis is Dhruva (the pole-star), the pivot or axis of the whole planetary circle. Such, Maitreya, is the elevation of the three spheres (Bhūr, Bhuvār, Svar) which form the region of the consequences of works. The region of works is here (or in the land of Bhārata).²

Above Dhruva, at the distance of ten million leagues, lies the sphere of saints, or Mahar-loka, the inhabitants of which dwell in it throughout a Kalpa, or day of Brahmā. At twice that distance is situated Jana-loka, where Sanandana and other pure-minded sons of Brahmā reside. At four times the distance, between the two last, lies the Tapo-loka (the sphere of penance), inhabited by the deities called Vaibhrājas, who are unconsumable by fire. At six times the distance (or twelve Crores, a hundred and twenty millions of leagues) is situated Satya-loka, the sphere of truth, the inhabitants of which never again know death.³

The region that extends from the earth to the sun, in which the Siddhas and other celestial beings move, is the atmospheric sphere, which also I have described. The interval between the sun and Dhruva, extending fourteen hundred thousand leagues, is called by those who are acquainted with the system of the universe the heavenly sphere. These three spheres are termed transitory: the three highest, Jana, Tapa, and Satya are styled durable:⁴ Mahar-loka, as situated between the two, has also a mixed character; for although it is described at the end of the Kalpa, it is not destroyed. These seven spheres, together with the Pātālas, forming the extent of the whole world, I have thus, Maitreya, explained to you.

The world is encompassed on every side and above and below by the shell of the egg of Brahmā, in the same manner as the seed of the wood-apple⁵ is invested by its rind. Around the outer surface of the shell flows water, for a space equal to ten times the diameter of the world. The waters, again, are encompassed exteriorly by fire; fire by air; and air by Mind; Mind by the origin of the elements (Ahamkāra); and that by Intellect: each of these extends ten times the breadth of that which it encloses; and the last is encircled by the chief Principle, Pradhāna,⁶ which is infinite, and its extent cannot be enumerated: it is therefore called the boundless and illimitable cause of all existing things, supreme nature, or Prakṛti; the cause of all mundane eggs, of which there are thousands and tens of thousands, and millions and thousands of millions, such as has been described.⁷ Within Pradhāna resides Soul, diffusive, conscious, and self-irradiating, as fire is inherent in flint⁸ or sesamum oil in its seed. Nature (Pradhāna) and soul (Pumān) are both of the character of dependents, and are encompassed by the energy of Viṣṇu, which is one with the soul of the world, and which is the cause of the separation of those two (soul and nature) at the period of dissolution; of their aggregation in the continuance of things; and of their combination at the season of creation.⁹

In the same manner as the wind ruffles the surface of the water in a hundred bubbles, which of themselves are inert, so the energy of Viṣṇu influences the world, consisting of inert nature and soul. Again, as a tree, consisting of root, stem, and branches, springs from a primitive seed, and produces other seeds, whence grow other trees analogous to the first in species, product, and origin, so from the first unexpected germ (of nature, or Pradhāna) spring Mahat (Intellect) and the other rudiments of things; from them proceed the grosser elements; and from them men and gods, who are succeeded by sons and the sons of sons. In the growth of a tree from the seed, no detriment occurs to the parent plant, neither is there any waste of beings by the generation of others. In like manner as space and time and the rest are the cause of the tree (through the materiality of the seed), so the divine Hari is the cause of all things by successive developments (through the materiality of nature).¹⁰

This Viśṇu is the supreme spirit (Brahma), from whence all this world proceeds, who is the world, by whom the world subsists, and in whom it will be resolved. That spirit (or Brahma) is the supreme state of Viśṇu, which is the essence of all that is visible or invisible; with which all that is, is identical; and whence all animate and inanimate existence is derived. He is primary nature: he, in a perceptible form, is the world: and in him all finally melts; through him all things endure. He is the performer of the rites of devotion; he is the rite: he is the fruit which it bestows: he is the implements by which it is performed. There is nothing besides the illimitable Hari.

NOTES

1. Bhūr-loka, the terrestrial sphere, is earth and the lower regions; from thence to the sun is the Bhuvar-loka, or atmospheric sphere; and from the sun to dhruva is the Svar-loka, or heaven; as subsequently explained in the text, and in other Purāṇas.

2. A similar account of the situations and distances of the planets occurs in the Padma, Kürma, and Vāyu Purāṇas. The Bhāgavata has one or two varieties, but they are of no great importance.

3. An account of these Lokas is met with only in a few of the Purāṇas, and is not much more detailed in them than in our text. The Vāyu is most circumstantial. According to that authority, Mahar, which is so called from a mystical term Maha, is the abode of the Gaṇadevas, the Yāmas and others, who are the regents or rulers of the Kalpa, the Kalpādhikāris: they are so designated also in the Kürma. The Kāśī Khāṇḍa refers the name to Mahas, light, the sphere being invested with radiance (महसावृतं). Its inhabitants are also called lords of the Kalpa: but the commentator explains this to denote Bhṛgu and the other patriarchs, whose lives endure for a day of Brahmā. The different accounts agree in stating, that when the three lower spheres are consumed by fire, Maharloka is deserted by its tenants, who repair to the next sphere, or Jana-loka. Jana-loka, according to the Vāyu, is the residence of the Ṛṣis and demigods during the night of Brahmā, and is termed Jana because the patriarchs are the progenitors of mankind. The Kāśī Khāṇḍa agrees with the Viśṇu in peopling it with Sanandana and the other ascetic sons of Brahmā, and with Yogis like themselves. These are placed by the Vāyu in the Tapo-loka, and they and the other sages, and the demigods, after repeated appearances in the world, become at last Vairājas in the Brahmā or Satya-loka. After many devine ages of residence there with Brahmā, they are, along with him, absorbed, at the end of his existence, into the indiscrete: अव्यक्ते संप्रलीयते एतस्मिन् ब्रह्मलोके तु कल्पे वैराजके गते। The commentator on the Kāśī Khāṇḍa explains Vairāja to mean relating to, or derived from, Brahmā or Virājः: हिरण्यगर्भोन्नपादिता वैराजः। The Vairājas are there, as in the Viśṇu Purāṇa, placed in the Tapo-loka, and are explained to be ascetics, mendicants, anchorites, and penitents, who have completed a course of rigorous austerities: रत्यादिसुतपः क्लिष्टकर्मणो ये तपोथनाः। ब्रह्मायुषस्तपोलोके तु वसन्त्यकुतोभ्याः। It may be doubted, however, if the Paurāṇiks have very precise notions regarding these spheres and their inhabitants. The Purāṇas of a decidedly sectarian character add other and higher worlds to the series. Thus the Kūrma identifies Brahma-loka with Viṣṇu-loka, and has a Rudra-loka above it. The Śiva places Viṣṇu-loka above Brahm-loka, and Rudra-loka above that. In the Kāśī Khaṇḍa we have, instead of those two, Vaikuṇṭha and Kailāśa, as the lofty worlds of Viṣṇu and Śiva; whilst the Brahma Vaivartta has above all a Go-loka, a world or heaven of cows and Kṛṣṇa. These are all evidently additions to the original system of seven worlds, in which we have probably some relation to the seven climates of the ancients, the seven stages or degrees of the earth of the Arabs, and the seven heavens of the Mohammedans, if not to the seven Amshaspenda of the Parsis. Seven, suggested originally perhaps by the seven planets, seems to have been a favourite number with various nations of antiquity. Amongst the Hindus it was applied to a variety of sacred or mythological objects, which are enumerated in a verse in the Hanuman Nāṭaka. Rāma is described there as piercing seven palm-trees with an arrow, on which other groups of seven take fright, as the seven steeds of the sun, the seven spheres, Munis, seas, continents, and mothers of the gods: अश्वाः सप्त जगति सप्त मुनयः सप्ताष्वयः सप्तगाः। सत्यं सप्त च मातरौ भयभृतसंख्यानसाम्यादिह॥

4. Kritika and Akritika; literally 'made and unmade': the former being renewed every Kalpa, the latter perishing only at the end of Brahmā's life.

5. Of the Kapitha (Feronia Elephantum).

6. See before the order in which the elements are evolved (Bk. I, ch. II).

7. The followers of Anaximander and Democritus taught "an 'an infinity of worlds,' and that not only successive in that space which this world of ours is conceived now to occupy, in respect of the infinity of past and future time, but also a contemporary infinity of coexistent worlds, at all times, throughout endless and unbounded space." Intellect, system, I. 303.

8. Literally 'in wood,' the attrition of two pieces of which does not create, but develops, their latent heat and flame.

9. This is Scipio's dream the divinity is made the external limit of the universe: "Novem tibi orbibus vel potius globis connexa sunt omnia, quorum unus est caelestis externus qui reliquos omnes complectitur, summus ipse deus arcens et continens ceteros;" which Macrobius explains as to be understood of the Supreme First Cause of all things, only in respect of his supremacy over all, and from his comprehending as well as creating all things, and being regarded as the soul of the world: "Quod et virtutes omnes, quae illam primae omnipotentiam summitates sequuntur, aut ipse faciat aut ipse contineat: ipsam denique Jovem veteres vocaverunt, et apud theologos Jupiter est mundi anima." In somm. Scip. c. XVII.

10. The two passages in parentheses are the additions of the commentator, intended to explain how the deity is the material cause of the world. He is not so of his own essence, not so immediately, but through the interposition of Pradhāna उत्पादनत्वमपि हरे: प्रकृतिद्वारेणैव न स्वरूपेणोति भावः। 'As however he is the source of Prakṛti, he must be considered the material as well as immaterial cause of being.'

The chariot of the sun is nine thousand leagues in length, and the pole is of twice that longitude;¹ the axle is fifteen millions and seven hundred thousand leagues long;² on which is fixed a wheel with three naves, five spokes, and six peripheries, consisting of the ever-during year; the whole constituting the circle or wheel of time.³ The chariot has another axle, which is forty-five hundred leagues long.⁴ The two halves of the yoke are of the same length respectively as the two axles (the longer and the shorter). The short axle, with the short yoke, is supported by the pole-star: the end of longer axle, to which the wheel of the car is attached, moves on the Mānasa mountain.⁵ The seven horses of the sun's car are the metres of the Vedas, Gāyatrī, Bṛhatī, Uṣṇih, Jagatī, Triṣṭubh, Anuṣṭubh, and Pañkti.

The glorious sun, Maitreya, darts like an arrow on his southern course, attended by the constellations of the Zodiac. He causes the difference between day and night, and is the divine vehicle and path of the sages who have overcome the inflictions of the world. Whilst the sun, who is the discriminator of all hours, shines in one continent in midday, in the opposite Dvīpas, Maitreya, it will be midnight: rising and setting are at all seasons, and are always (relatively) opposed in the different cardinal and intermediate points of the horizon. When the sun becomes visible to any people, to them he is said to rise; when he disappears from their view, that is called his setting. There is in truth neither rising nor setting of the sun, for he is always, and these terms merely imply his presence and his disappearance.

When the sun (at midday) passes over either of the cities of the gods, on Mānasottara mountain (at the cardinal points), his light extends to three cities and two intermediate points: when situated in an intermediate point, he illuminates two of the cities and three either in the southern or the northern intermediate points (in either case one hemisphere, day or night retires into the hemisphere). From the period of his rise the sun moves with increasing rays until noon, when he proceeds towards his setting with rays diminishing (that is, his heat increases or diminishes in proportion as he advances to, or recedes from, the meridian of any place). The east and west quarters are so called from the sun's rising and setting there.⁷ As far as the sun shines in front, so far he shines behind and on either hand, illuminating all places except the summit of Meru, the mountain of the immortals; for when his rays reach the court of Brahmā, which is there situated, they are repelled and driven back by the overpowering radiance which there prevails: consequently there is always the alternation of day and night, according as the divisions of the continent lie in the northern (or southern) quarter, or inasmuch as they are situated north (or south) of Meru.⁸

The radiance of the solar orb, when the sun has set, is accumulated in fire, and hence fire is visible at a greater distance by night than by day: during the latter a fourth of the rays of fire blend with those of the sun, and from their union the sun shines with greater intensity by day. Elemental light, and heat derived from the sun or from fire, blending with each other, mutually prevail in various proportions, both by day and night. When the sun is present either in the southern or the northern hemisphere, day or night retires into the waters, according as they are invaded by darkness or light: it is from this cause that the waters look dark by day, because night is within them, and they look white by night, because at the setting of the sun the light of day takes refuge in their bosom.⁹

When the sun has travelled in the centre of Puṣkara a thirtieth part of the circumference of the globe, his course is equal in time to one Muhūrtta;¹⁰ and whirling round like the circumference of the wheel of a potter, he distributes day and night upon the earth. In the commencement of his northern course, the sun passes to Capricornus, thence to Aquarius, thence to Pisces, going successively from one sign of the Zodiac to another. After he has passed through these, the sun attains his equinoctial movement (the vernal equinox), when he makes the day and night of equal duration. Thenceforward the length of the night decreases, and the day becomes longer, until the sun reaches the end of Gemini, when he pursues a different direction, and entering Cancer, beings his declension to the south.

As the circumference of a potter's wheel revolves most rapidly, so the sun travels rapidly on his southern journey: he flies along his path with the velocity of wind, and traverses a great distance in a short time. In twelve Muhūrtas he passes through thirteen lunar asterisms and a half during the day; and during the night he passes through the same distance, only in eighteen Muhūrtas. As the centre of the potter's wheel revolves more slowly than the circumference, so the sun in his northern path again revolves with less rapidity, and moves over a less space of the earth in a longer time, until, at the end of his northern route, the day is again eighteen Muhūrtas, and the night twelve; the sun passing through half the lunar mansions by day and by night in those periods respectively. As the lump of clay on the centre of the potter's wheel moves most slowly, so the polar-star, which is in the centre of the zodiacal wheel, revolves very tardily, and ever remains in the centre, as the clay continues in the centre of the wheel of the potter.

The relative length of the day or night depends upon the greater or less velocity with which the sun revolves through the degrees between the two points of the horizon. In the solstitial period, in which his diurnal path is quickest, his nocturnal is slowest; and in that in which he moves quick by night, he travels slowly by day. The extent of his journey is in either case the same; for in the course of the day and night he passes through all the signs of the Zodiac, or six by night, and the same number by day: the length and shortness of the day are measured by the extent of the signs; and the duration of day and night by the period which the sun takes to pass through them.¹¹ In his northern declination the sun moves quickest by night, and slowest by day, in his southern declination the reverse is the case.

The night is called Uṣā, and the day is denominated Vyūṣṭa, and the interval between them is called Sandhyā. On the occurrence of the awful Sandhyā, the terrific fiends termed Mandehas attempt to devour the sun; for Brahmā denounced this curse upon them, that, without the power to perish, they should die every day (and revive by night), and therefore a fierce contest occurs daily between them and the sun.¹² At this season pious Brāhmaṇas scatter water, purified by the mystical Omkāra, and consecrated by the Gāyatri;¹³ and by this water, as by a thunderbolt, the foul fiends are consumed. When the first oblation is offered with solemn invocations in the morning rite,¹⁴ the thousand-rayed deity shincs forth with unclouded splendour. Omkāra is Viṣṇu the mighty, the substance of the three Vedas, the lord of speech; and by its enunciation those Rākṣasas are destroyed. The sun is principal part of Viṣṇu, and light is his immutable essence, the active manifestation of which is excited by the mystic syllable Om. Light effused by the utterance of Omkāra becomes radiant, and burns up entirely the Rākṣasas called Mandehas. The performance of the Sandhyā (the morning) sacrifice must never therefore be delayed, for he who neglects it is guilty of the murder of the sun. Protected thus by the Brāhmaṇas and the pigmy sages called Bālakhilyas, the sun goes on his course to give light to the world.

Fifteen twinklings of the eye (Nimeṣas) make a Kāṣṭhā; thirty Kāṣṭhās, a Kalā; thirty Kalās, a Muhūrtta (forty-eight minutes); and thirty Muhūrttas, a day and night: the portions of the day are longer or shorter, as has been explained; but the Sandhyā is always the same in increase, or decrease, being only one Muhūrtta.¹⁵ From the period that a line may be drawn across the sun (or that half his orb is visible) to the expiration of three Muhūrttas (two hours and twenty-four minutes), that interval is called Prātar (morning), forming a fifth oration of the day. The next portion, or three Muhūrttas from morning, is termed Sangava (forenoon): the three next Muhūrttas constitute mid-day: the afternoon comprises the next three Muhūrttas: he three Muhūrttas following are considered as the evening: and the fifteen Muhūrtas of the day are thus classed in five portions of three each. But the day consists of fifteen Muhūrtas only at the equinoxes, increasing or diminishing in number in the northern and southern declinations of the sun, when the day encroaches on the night, or the night upon the day, The equinoxes occur in the seasons of spring and autumn, when the sun enters the signs of Aries and Libra. When the sun enters Capricorn (the winter solstice), his northern progress commences; and his southern when he enters Cancer (the summer solstice).

Fifteen days of thirty Muhūrtas each are called a Pakṣa (a lunar fortnight); two of these make a month; and two months, a solar season; three seasons a northern or southern declination (Ayana); and those two compose a year. Years, made up of four kinds of months,¹⁶ are distinguished into five kinds; and an aggregate of all the varieties of time is termed a Yuga, or cycle. The years are severally called Samvatsara, Parivatsara, Idvatasara, Anuvatsara, and Vatsara. This is the time called a Yuga.¹⁷

The mountain range that lies most to the north (in Bhārata-varṣa) is called Śringavān (the horned), from its having three principal elevations (horns or peaks), one to the north, one to the south, and one in the centre; the last is called the equinoctial, for the sun arrives there in the middle of the two seasons of spring and autumn, entering the equinoctial points in the first degree of Aries and of Libra, and making day and night of equal duration, or fifteen Muhūrtas each. When the sun, most excellent sage, is in the first degree of the lunar mansion, Kṛttikā and the moon is in the fourth of Viśākhā; or when the sun is in the third degree of Viśākhā, and the moon is in the head of Kṛttikā (these positions being contemporary with the equinoxes), that equinoctial season is holy (and is styled the Mahāviṣṇubha, or the great equinox).¹⁸ At this time offerings are to be presented to the gods and to the manes, and gifts are to be made to the Brāhmaṇas by serious persons; for such donations are productive of happiness. Liberality at the equinoxes is always advantageous to the donor: and day and night; seconds, minutes, and hours; intercalary months; the day of full moon (Paurṇamāsi); the day of conjunction (Amāvāsyā), when the moon rises invisible; the day when it is first seen (Sinivalī); the day when it first disappears (Kuhū); the day when the moon is quite round (Rākā); and the day when one digit is deficient (Anumati), are all seasons when gifts are meritorious.

On the Lokāloka mountain, which I have formerly described to you, reside the four holy protectors of the world, or Sudhāman and Śankhapāda, the two sons of Kardama, and Hiranyakaroman, and Ketumat.²⁰ Unaffected by the contrasts of existence, void of selfishness, active, and unencumbered by dependents, they take charge of the spheres, themselves abiding on the four cardinal points of the Lokāloka mountain.

On the north of Agastya, and south of the line of the Goat, exterior to the Vaisvānara path, lies the road of the Pitr̄s.²¹ There dwell the great Ṛsis, the offerers of oblations with fire, reverencing the Vedas, after whose injunctions creation commenced, and who were discharging the duties of ministrant priests: for as the worlds are destroyed and renewed, they institute new rules of conduct, and reestablish the interrupted ritual of the Vedas. Mutually descending from each other, progenitor springing from descendant, and descendant from progenitor, in the alternating succession of births, they repeatedly appear in different houses and races along with their posterity, devout practices and instituted observances, residing to the south of the solar orb, as long as the moon and stars endure.²²

The path of the gods lies to the north of the solar sphere, north of the Nāgavīthi,²³ and south of the seven Ṛsis. There dwell the Siddhas, of subdued senses, continent and pure, undesirous of progeny, and therefore victorious over death: eighty-eight thousand of these chaste beings tenant the regions of the sky, north of the sun, until the destruction of the universe: they enjoy immortality, for that they are holy; exempt from covetousness and concupiscence, love and hatred; taking no part in the procreation of living beings, and detecting the unreality of the properties of elementary matter. By immortality is meant existence to the end of the Kalpa: life as long as the three regions (earth, sky, and heaven) last is called exemption from (reiterated) death.²⁴ The consequences of acts of iniquity or piety, such as Brahmanicide or an Aśvamedha, endure for a similar period, or until the end of a Kalpa,²⁵ when all within the interval between Dhruva and the earth is destroyed.

The space between the seven R̄sis and Dhruva,²⁶ the third region of the sky, is the splendid celestial path of Viśṇu (Viśṇupada), and the abode of those sanctified ascetics who are cleansed from every soil, and in whom virtue and vice are annihilated. This is that excellent place of Viśṇu to which those repair in whom all sources of pain are extinct, in consequence of the cessation of the consequences of piety or iniquity, and where they never sorrow more. There abide Dharma, Dhruva, and other spectators of the world, radiant with the superhuman faculties of Viśṇu, acquired through religious meditation; and there are fastened and inwoven to all that is, and all that shall ever be, animate or inanimate. The seat of Viśṇu is contemplated by the wisdom of the Yogis, identified with supreme light, as the radiant eye of heaven. In this portion of the heavens of splendid Dhruva is stationed, and serves for the pivot of the atmosphere. On Dhruva rest the seven great planets, and on them depend the clouds. The rains are suspended in the clouds, and from the rains come the water which is the nutriment and delight of all, the gods and the rest; and they, the gods, who are the receivers of oblations, being nourished by burnt offsprings, cause the rain to fall for the support of created beings. This sacred station of Viśṇu, therefore, is the support of the three worlds, as it is the source of rain.

From that third region of the atmosphere, or seat of Viṣṇu, proceeds the stream that washes away all sin, the river Gangā, embrowned with the unguents of the nymphs of heaven, who have sported in her waters. Having her source in the nail of the great toe of Viṣṇu's left foot, Dhruva²⁷ receives her, and sustains her day and night devoutly on his head; and thence the seven R̄sis practise the exercises of austerity in her waters, wreathing their braided locks with her waves. The orb of the moon, encompassed by her accumulated current, derives augmented lustre from her contact. Falling from on high, as she issues from the moon, she alights on the summit of Meru, and thence flows to the four quarters of the earth, for its purification. The Sirā, Alakanandā, Cakṣu, and Bhadrā are four branches of but one river, divided according to the regions towards which it proceeds. The branch that is known as the Alakanandā was borne affectionately by Mahādeva, upon his head, for more than a hundred years, and was the river which raised to heaven the sinful sons of Sagara, by washing their ashes.²⁸ The offences of any man who bathes in this river are immediately expiated, and unprecedented virtue is engendered. Its waters, offered by sons to their ancestors in faith for three years, yield to the latter rarely attainable gratification. Men of the twice-born orders, who offer-sacrifice in this river to the lord of sacrifice, Puruṣottama, obtain whatever they desire, either here or in heaven. Saints who are purified from all soil by bathing in its waters, and whose minds are intent on Keśava, acquire thereby final liberation. This sacred stream, heard of, desired, seen, touched, bathed in, or hymned, day by day, sanctifies all beings; and those who, even at a distance of a hundred leagues, exclaim "Gangā, Gangā," atone for the sins committed during three previous lives. The place whence this river proceeds, for the purification of the three worlds, is the third division of the celestial regions, the seat of Viṣṇu.²⁹

1. The sun's case is 10,000 Yojanas broad, and as many deep, according to the Vāyu and Matsya. The Bhāgavata makes it thirty-six hundred thousand long, and one fourth that broad. The Linga agrees with the text.

2. There is no great difference in this number in other accounts. The length of this axle, which extends from Meru to Mānasa, is nearly equal to the semi-diameter of the earth, which, according to the Matsya P., is 18,95,000 Yojanas.

3. The three naves are the three divisons of the day, morning, noon, and night; the five spokes are the five cyclic years; and the six peripherics are the six seasons. The Bhāgavata explains the three naves to be three periods of the year, of four months each, and gives twelve spokes as types of the twelve months. The Vāyu, Matsya, and Bhaviṣya Purāṇas enter into much more detail. According to them, the parts of the wheel are the same as above described: the body of the car is the year; its upper and lower half are the two solstices; Dharma is its flag; Artha and Kāma the pins of the yoke and axle; night is its fender; Nimeshas form its floor; a moment is the axle-tree; an instant the pole; minutes are its attendants; and hours its harness.

4. This-shorter axle is, according to the Bhāgavata, one fourth of the longer.

5. We are to understand here, both in the axle and yoke, two levers, one horizontal, the other perpendicular. The horizontal arm of the axle has a wheel at one end; the other extremity is connected with the perpendicular arm. To the horizontal arm of the yoke are harnessed the horses; and its inner or right extremity is secured to the perpendicular. The upper ends of both perpendiculars are supposed to be attached to Dhruva, the pole-star, by two aerial cords, which are lengthened in the sun's southern course, and shortened in his norther; and retained by which to Dhruva, as to a pivot, the wheel of the car traverses the summit of the Mānasottara mountain on Puṣkara-dvīpa, which runs like a ring round the several continents and oceans. The contrivance is commonly compared to an oil mill, and was probably suggested by that machine as constructed in India. As the Mānasottara mountain is but 50,000 leagues high, and Meru 84,000, whilst Dhruva is 1500,000, both levers are inclined at obtuse angles to the nave of the wheel and each other. In images of the sun, two equal and semicircular axles connect a central wheel with the sides of the car.

6. In the Liṅga the city of Indra is called Amarāvati; and in it and the Vāyu that of Varuṇa is termed Sukhā.

7. The terms Pūrva and Apara mean properly 'before and behind'; but 'before' naturally denotes the east, either because men, according to a text of the Vedas, spontaneously face, as if to welcome the rising sun, or because they are enjoined by the laws so to do. When they face the rising sun, the west is of course behind them. The same circumstance determines the application of the term Dakṣina, properly 'right', or 'dexterum', to the south. Uttara, 'other' or 'last', necessarily implies the north.

8. This is rather obscure, but it is made out clearly enough in the commentary, and in the parallel passages in the Vāyu, Matsya, Liṅga, Kūrma, and Bhāgavata. The sun travels round the world, keeping Meru always on his right : to the spectator who fronts him therefore, as he rises, Meru must be always on the north; and as the sun's rays do not penetrate beyond the centre of the mountain, the regions beyond, or to the north of it, must be in darkness; whilst those on the south of it must be in light: north and south being relative, not absolute terms, depending upon the position of the spectator with regard to the sun and to Meru. So the commentator मेरुं प्रदक्षिणोक्त्वन्तं सूर्यं ये यत् पश्यन्ति सा च तेषां प्राची तेषां च वामभागो मेरुतः सर्वेषां सर्ववदा मेरुरुत्तरतः। तस्मादुत्तरस्यां दिशि सदा रात्रिः दक्षिणस्यां च सदा दिनो। It was probably through some misapprehension of this doctrine that Wilford asserted, "by Meru the Paurāṇiks understand in general the north pole, but the context of the Purāṇas is against this supposition". As. Res. VIII. 286. There is no inconsistency, however, in Meru's being absolutely in the centre of the world, and relatively north to the inhabitants of the several portions, to all of whom the east is that quarter where the sun first appears, and the other quarters are thereby regulated.

9. Similar notions are contained in the Vāyu.

10. The sun travels at the rate of one-thirtieth of the earth's circumference in a Muḥūrtta, or 31,50,000 Yojanas; making the total 9 crores and 45 lakhs, or 9,45,00,000; according to the Vāyu, Liṅga, and Matsya Purāṇas.

11. This passage, which is somewhat at variance with the general doctrine, that the length of the day depends upon the velocity of the sun's course, and which has not been noticed in any other Paurāṇik text, is defended by the commentator, upon the authority of the Jyotiś-śāstra, or astronomical writings. According to them, he asserts, the signs of the Zodiac are of different extent. Aquarius, Pisces, and Aries are the shortest; Taurus, Capricornus, and Gemini are something longer; Leo and Scorpio longer still; and the remaining four the longest of all. According to the six which the sun traverses, the day or night will be the longer or shorter. The text is, राशिप्रमाणजनिता दीर्घहस्ताभ्यां दिने। तथा निशायां राशीनां प्रमाणैर्द्युर्धीर्षता॥ The apparent contradiction may however be reconciled by understanding the sun's slow motion, and the length of a sign, to be equivalent terms.

12. The same story occurs in the Vāyu, with the addition that the Mandehas are three crores in number. It seems to be an ancient legend, imperfectly preserved in some of the Purāṇas.

13. The sacred syllable Om has been already described (Bk. I. ch. I n. I). The Gayatri, or holiest verse of the Vedas, not to be uttered to ears profane, is a short prayer to the sun, identified as the supreme, and occurs in the tenth hymn of the fourth section of the third Aṣṭaka of the Samhitā of the Rig-veda : तत् सवितुर्वरेण्यं भारो देवस्य धीमहि धियो यो नः प्रचोदयात्। 'We meditate on that excellent light of the divine sun: may he illuminate our minds.' Such is the fear entertained of profaning this text, that copyists of the Vedas not infrequently eschew from transcribing it, both in the Samhitā and Bhāṣya.

14. Or, in the text, with the prayer that commences with the words Sūrya, jyotiḥ, 'That which is in the sun (or light) is adorable', &c. The whole prayer is given in Colebrooke's account of the religious ceremonies of the Hindus. As. Res. V. 351.

15. But this comprehends the two Sandhyās, 'morning and evening twilight.' Two Nāris, or half a Muhūrta before sunrise, constitute the morning Sandhyā; and the same interval after sunset the evening Sandhya, meaning 'junction', is so termed as it is the juncture or interval between darkness and light; as in the Vāyu and Matsya: लोकालोकं सद्धर्ते यस्मात् सूर्यः परिप्रभन् तस्मात्स्थेति तामाहुषुप्युष्ट्योस्यान्तरं।

16. The four months are named in the Vāyu and are, I the Saura, or solarsydereal, consisting of the sun's passage through a sign of the Zodiac: 2. the Saumya or Chāndra or lunar month, comprehending thirty lunations or Tithis, and reckoned most usually from new moon to new moon, though sometimes from full moon to full moon: 3. the Sāvana or solar month, containing thirty days of sunrise and sunset: and 4. the Nākṣatra or lunar asterismal month, which is the moon's revolution, through the twenty-eight lunar mansions.

17. The five years forming this Yuga, or cycle, differ only in denomination, being composed of the months above described, with such Malamāsas, or intercalary months, as may be necessary to complete the period, according to Vriddha Garga. The cycle comprehends, therefore, sixty solarsydereal months of 1800 days; sixty-one solar months, or 1830 days; sixty-two lunar months, or 1860 lunations; and sixty-seven lunar-asterismal months, or 1809 such days. Warren, in his Kāla Sankalitā, considers these years to be severally cycles. "In the cycle of sixty", he observes, "are contained five cycles of twelve years, each supposed equal to one year of the planet (Jupiter). I only mention this cycle because I found it mentioned in some books; but I know of no nation nor tribe that reckons time after that account. The names of the five cycles or Yugas are 1. Samvatsara, 2. Parivatsara, 3. Idvatsara, 4. Anuvatsara, 5. Udravatsara. The name of each year is determined from the Nākṣatra, in which Vṛhaspati sets and rises heliacally and they follow in the order of the lunar months." K. S. 212. It may be reasonably doubted, however, if this view be correct; and the only connexion between the cycle of five years and that of Vṛhaspati may be the multiplication of the former by the latter (5×12), so as to form the cycle of sixty years: a cycle based, the commentator remarks, upon the conjunction (Yuga) of the sun and moon in every sixtieth year. The original and properly Indian cycle, however, is that of five years, as Bentley remarks. "The astronomers of this period (1181 B.C.) framed a cycle of five years for civil and religious ceremonies". Ancient and Modern Hindu Astronomy. It is in fact, as Colebrooke states, the cycle of the Vedas, described in the jyotiṣa, or astronomical sections, and specified in the institutes of Parāśara as the basis of calculation for larger cycles. As. Res. VIII. 470.

18. Reference is here made apparently, though indistinctly, to those positions of the planets which indicate, according to Bentley, the formation of the lunar mansions by Hindu astronomers about 1424 B.C. Hindu Astronomy, p. 3 and 4. The Vāyu and Liṅga Purāṇas specify the positions of the other planets at the same time, or the end, according to the former, of the Chākṣuṣa Manvantara. At that time the sun was in Viśākhā, the moon in Krittikā, Venus in Puṣyā, Jupiter in Pērvaphālguni, Mars in Āśādhā, Budha in Dhaniṣṭhā, Śani in Revatī, Ketu in Āśleṣā, and Rāhu in Bharaṇī. There are differences between some of these and the positions cited by Bentley, but most of them are the same. He considers them to have been observations of the occultations of the moon by the planets, in the respective lunar mansions, 1424–5 B.C. According to the Vāyu, these positions or origins of the planets are from the Vedas: आषाढादिविहपूर्वासु समुत्त्रा इति सृतेः। The Liṅga, less accurately perhaps, reads इति श्रुतिः referring it to the works of law.

19. These are the names of the months which occur in the Vedas, and belong to a system now obsolete, as was noticed by Jones. As. Res. III. 258. According to the classification of the text, they correspond severally with the lunar months Māgha, Phālguna, Caitra, Vaiśākha, Jyestha, Āṣāḍhā, or from December to June; and with Śrāvaṇa Bhādra, Āśvina, Kārtika, Agraḥāyaṇa, and Pauṣa, from July to December. From this order of the two series of the months, as occurring in the Vedas, Colebrooke infers, upon astronomical computations, their date to be about fourteen centuries prior to the Christian era. As. Res. VII. 283.

20. The Vāyu has the same names, but ascribes a different descent to the first, making Sudhāman the son of Viraja, Sankhapād is the son of Kardama: the other two are the sons of Parjanya and Rajas, consistently with the origin ascribed to these Lokapālas in the patriarchal genealogies of that Purāṇa (see Bk. I. ch. X).

21. Allusion is here made to some divisions of the celestial sphere which are not described in any other part of the text. The fullest, but still in some respects a confused and partly inaccurate account is given in the Matsya Purāṇa; but a more satisfactory description occurs in the comment on the Bhāgavata, there cited from the Vāyu, but not found in the copies consulted on the present occasion. According to those details, the path (Mārga) of the sun and other planets amongst the lunar asterisms is divided into three portions or Avasthānas, northern, southern, and central, called severally Airāvata, Jāradgava (Ajagava, Matsya P.), and Vaiśvānara. Each of these, again, is divided into three parts or Vithis : those of the northern portion are termed Nāgavīthi, Gajavīthi, and Airāvati; those of the centre are Ārshabhi, Govīthi and Jāradgavī; and those of the south are named Ajavīthi, Mrīgavīthi, and Vaiśvānari. Each of these Vithis comprises three asterisms.

Nāgavīthi	: Asvinī, Bharai, Krittikā.
Gajavīthi	: Rohini, Mrigaśiras, Ardrā.
Airāvati	: Punarvasu, Pusyā, Āśleshā.
Ārshabhi	: Maghā, Pūrvaphalgunī, Uttaraphalgunī.
Govīthi	: Hastā, Chitrā, Svāti.
Jāradgavā	: Viśākhā, Anurādhā, Jyeṣṭhā.
Ajavīthi	: Mūlā, Purvāshādhā, Uttarāshādhā.
Mrīgavīthi	: Sravaṇā, Dhaniṣṭhā, Satābhishā.

Vaisvānari : Pūrva Bhādrapadā, Uttara Bhādrapadā, Revati.

See also As. Res. IX, table of Nakṣatras, 346. Agastya is Canopus; and the line of the goat, or Ajāvīthi, comprises asterisms which contain stars in Scorpio and Sagittarius.

22. A marginal note in one MS. explains the phrase of the text, आचन्द्रतारकं, to signify as far as to the moon and stars; चन्द्रतारकसीमा भूतमाणः but the Pitrī yāna, or path of the Pitṛs, lies amongst the asterisms; and, according to the Paurāṇik system of the heavens, it is not clear what could be meant by its being bounded by the moon and stars. The path south of the solar orb is, according to the Vedas, that of smoke or darkness.

23. The stars of the Nāgavīthi are those of Aries and Taurus; and by the seven Rṣis we are here to understand Ursa Major.

24. This, according to the Vedas, is all that is to be understood of the immortality of the gods: they perish at the period of universal dissolution.

25. That is, generally as effecting created beings, not individuals, whose acts influence their several successive births.

26. From Ursa Major to the polar star.

27. The popular notion is, that Śiva or Mahādeva receives the Gaṅgā on his head; but this, an subsequently explained, is referred, by the Vaiśnavas at least, to the descent of the Alakanandā, or Gaṅgā of India, not to the celestial Gaṅgā.

28. Or, in other words, 'flows into the sea.' The legend here alluded to is more fully detailed in a subsequent book.

29. The situation of the source of the Gaṅgā of heaven identifies it with the milky way.

The form of the mighty Hari which is present in heaven, consisting of the constellations, is that of a porpoise, with Dhruva situated in the tail. As Dhruva revolves, it causes the moon, sun and stars to turn round also; and the lunar asterisms follow in its circular path; for all the celestial luminaries are in fact bound to the polar-star by aerial cords. The porpoise-like figure of the celestial sphere is upheld by Nārāyaṇa, who himself in planetary radiance, is seated in its heart; whilst the son of Uttānapāda, Dhruva, in consequence of his adoration of the lord of the world, shines in the tail of the stellar porpoise¹. The upholder of the porpoise-shaped sphere is the sovereign of all, Janārddana. This sphere is the supporter of Dhruva; and by Dhruva the sun is upstayed. Upon the sun depends this world, with its gods, demons, and men. In what manner the world depends upon the sun, be attentive, and you shall hear.

During eight months of the year the sun attracts the waters, which are the essence of all fluids, and then pours them upon earth (during the other four month) as rain²: from rain grows corn; and by corn the whole world subsists. The sun with his scorching rays absorbs the moisture of the earth, and with them nourishes the moon. The moon communicates, through tubes of air, its dews to the clouds, which, being composed of smoke, fire, and wind (or vapour), can retain the waters with which they are charged: they are therefore called Abhras, because their contents are not dispersed³. When however they are broken to pieces by the wind, then watery stores descend, bland, and freed from every impurity by the sweetening process of time. The sun, Maitreya, exhales watery fluids from four sources, — seas, rivers, the earth, and living creatures. The water that the sun has drawn up from the Gangā of the skies he quickly pours down with his rays, and without a cloud; and men who are touched by this pure rain are cleansed from the soil of sin, and never see hell: this is termed celestial ablution. That rain which falls whilst the sun is shining, and without a cloud in the sky, is the water of the heavenly Gaṅgā, shed by the solar rays. If, however, rain falls from a bright and cloudless sky whilst the sun is in the mansion of Kṛttikā, and the other asterisms counted by odd numbers, as the third, fifth etc., the water, although that of the Gangā of the sky, is scattered by the elephants of the quarters, not by the rays of the sun: it is only when such rain falls, and the sun is in the even asterisms, that it is distributed by his beams.

The water which the clouds shed upon earth is in truth the ambrosia of living beings, for it gives fertility to the plants which are the support of their existence. By this all vegetables grow and are matured, and become the means of maintaining life. With them, again, those men who take the law for their light perform daily sacrifices, and through them give nourishment to the gods. And thus sacrifices, the Vedas, the four castes, with the Brāhmaṇas at their head, all the residences of the gods, all the tribes of animals, the whole world, all are supported by the rains by which food is produced. But the rain is evolved by the sun; the sun is sustained by Dhruva; and Dhruva is supported by the celestial porpoise-shaped sphere, which is one with Nārāyaṇa. Nārāyaṇa, the primeval existent, and eternally enduring, seated in the heart of stellar sphere, is the supporter of beings.

NOTES

1. A more particular description of this porpoise occurs farther on.
2. Consequently, the Liṅga P. observes, there is no waste of water in the universe, as it is in constant circulation : तोयस्य नास्ति वै नाशस्तदेव परिवर्त्तते।
3. The theory of the clouds is more fully detailed in the Vāyu, Liṅga, and Matsya Purāṇas : it is the same in its general tenor, but comprises additional circumstances. Clouds, according to those authorities, are of three classes : 1. Āgneya, originating from fire or heat, or in other words, evaporation : they are charged with wind and rain, and are of various orders, amongst which are those called Jimūta, from their supporting life : जीमूतास्ते येभ्यो जीवसम्भवाः। 2. Brahmaja, born from the breath of Brahmā : these are the clouds whence thunder and lightning proceed : and 3. Pakṣaja, or clouds which were originally the wings of the mountains, and which were cut off by Indra : these are also termed Puṣkāravarttakas, from their including water in their vortices : they are the largest and most formidable of all, and are those which, at the end of the Yugas and Kalpas, pour down the waters of the deluge. The shell of the egg of Brahmā, or of the universe, is formed of the primitive clouds : तान्येवाण्डकपालानि सर्वे मेघाः प्रकीर्तिताः।

Parāśara said— Between the extreme northern and southern points the sun has to traverse in a year one hundred and eighty degrees, ascending and descending.¹ His car is presided over by divine Ādityas, R̄sis, heavenly singers and nymphs, Yakṣas, serpents, and Rākṣasas (one of each being placed in it in every month). The Āditya Dhātri, the sage Pulastya, the Gandharva Tumburu, the nymph Kratuśthalā, the Yakṣa Rathakrit, the serpent Vāsuki, and the Rākṣasa Heti, always reside in the sun's car, in the month of Madhu or Caitra, as its seven guardians. In Vaiśākh or Mādhava the seven are Āryamat, Pulaha, Nārada, Punjikāsthali, Rathaujas, Kacanīra and Praheti. In Śuchi or Jyeṣṭha they are Mitra, Atri, Hāhā, Menā, Rathasvana, Takṣaka, and Pauruṣeya. In the month Sukra or Āśāḍha they are Varuṇa, Vaśiṣṭha, Huhu, Sahajanyā, Rathachitra, Nāga, and Budha. In the month Nabhas (or Srāvaṇa) they are Indra, Angiras, Visvāvasu, Pramlochā, Srotas, and Elapatra (the name of both serpent and Rākṣasa). In the month Bhādrapada, they are Vivasvat, Bhṛgu, Ugrasena, Anumloca, Āpūraṇa, Śankhapāla, and Vyāghara. In the month of Āsvin they are Pūṣan, Gautama, Suruchi, Ghṛtāchi, Suṣeṇa, Dhanañjaya, and Vāta. In the month of Kārtik they are Parjanya, Bharadvāja, (another) Visvāvasu, Visvāchī, Senajit, Airāvata, and Chāpa. In Agrahāyana or Mārgaśirsha they are Ansu, Kaśyapa, Chitrasena, Urvasi, Tārkṣya, Mahāpadma, and Vidyut. In the month of Pusha, Bhaga Kratu, Urṇāyu, Purvachittī, Ariṣṭanemi, Karkoṭaka, and Sphūrja are the seven who abide in the orb of the sun, the glorious spirits who scatter light throughout the universe. In the month of Māgha the seven who are in the sun are Twasti, Jamadagni, Dhṛtarāṣṭra, Tilottamā, Ratijit, Kambala, and Brahmāpeta. Those who abide in the sun in the month Phālguna are Viṣṇu, Viśvāmitra, Sūryavarchhas, Rambhā, Satyajit, Asvatara, and Yajnūpetā.

In this manner, Maitreya, a troop of sexen celestial beings, supported by the energy of Viṣṇu, occupies during the several months the orb of the sun. The sages celebrates his praise, and the Gandharba sings, and the nymph dances before him : the Rākṣasa attends upon his steps, the serpent harnesses his steeds, and the Yakṣa trims the reins : the numerous pigmy sages, the Bālakhilyas, ever surround his chariot. The whole troop of seven, attached to the sun's car, are the agents in the distribution of cold, heat, and rain, at their respective seasons.²

1. It might be doubted whether the text meant 180 in each hemisphere or in both, but the sense is sufficiently clear in the Vāyu, &c., and the number of Maṇḍalas, travelled in the year is 360 : the Maṇḍalas, 'circles' or 'degrees', being in fact the sun's diurnal revolutions, and their numbers corresponding with the days of the solar year : as in the Bhaviṣya Purāṇa : हाशीतिमण्डलशतमोहन्त्यदेन वै हयाः। बाह्यतोऽभ्यन्तरं चैव मण्डलं दिवसक्रमात्। 'The horses of the sun travel twice 180 degrees in a eyar, internal and external (to the equator), in the order of the days.'

2. A similar enumeration of the attendants upon the sun's car occurs in the Vāyu, &c. For Yakṣas, the generic term their employed is Grāhaṇīś, but the individuals are the same. The Kūrma and Bhaviṣya refer the twelve Ādityas to different months :

	Viṣṇu.	Kūrma.	Bhaviṣya.

Maitreya said—You have related to me, holy preceptor, the seven classes of beings who are ever present in the solar orb, and are the causes of heat and cold : you have also described to me their individual functions, sustained by the energy of Viśnu : but you have not told me the duty of the sun himself; for if, as you say, the seven beings in his sphere are the causes of heat, cold, and rain, how can it be also true, as you have before mentioned, that rain proceeds from the sun? or how can it be asserted that the sun rises, reaches the meridian, or seta, if these situations be the act of the collective seven?

Parāśara replied— I will explain to you, Maitreya, the subject of your inquiry. The sun, though identified with the seven being in his orb, is distinct from them as their chief. The entire and mighty energy of Viṣṇu, which is called the tree Vedas, or Ṛk, Yajush, and Sāman, is that which enlightens the world, and destroys its iniquity. It is that also which, during the continuance of things, is present as Viṣṇu, actively engaged in the preservation of the universe, and abiding as the three Vedas within the sun. The solar luminosity, that appears in every month, is nothing else than that very supreme energy of Viṣṇu which is composed of the three Vedas, influencing the motions of the planet; for the Ṛks (the hymns of the Rig-veda) shine in the morning, the prayers of the Yajus at noon, and the Bṛhadhrathantara and other portions of the Sāman in the afternoon. This triple impersonation of Viṣṇu, distinguished by the titles of the three Vedas, is the energy of Viṣṇu, which influences the positions of the sun¹.

ब्रह्माथ पुरुषो स्त्रस्त्रयमेतत् त्रयीमयम्॥ १२॥
सगादौ ऋद्धयो ब्रह्मा स्थितौ विष्णुर्यजुर्मयः।

एवं सा सात्त्विकी शक्तिर्विष्णवी या त्रयीमयी।
आत्मसप्तसण्ठयं तं भास्वन्तमधितिष्ठति॥ १४॥

But this triple energy of Viṣṇu is not limited to the sun alone, for Brahmā, Purusha (Viṣṇu), and Rudra are also made up of the same triform essence. In creation it is Brahmā, consisting of the Ṛg-Veda; in preservation it is Viṣṇu, composed of the Yajur-veda; and in destruction Rudra, formed of the Sāma-veda, the utterance of which is consequently inauspicious.²

तथा चाधिष्ठितः सोऽपि जाज्वलीति स्वरशिमभिः।

तमः समस्तजगतां नाशं नयति चाखिलम्॥ १५॥
सुवन्ति तं वै मुनयो गच्छवैर्गर्यते पुराः।

मासानुमासं भास्वन्तमध्यासे तत्र संस्थितम्॥ २०॥
पितृ-देव-मनुष्यादीन् स सदाप्याययन् प्रभुः।

Thus the energy of Viṣṇu, made up of the three Vedas, and derived from the property of goodness, presides in the sun, along with the seven beings belonging to it; and through the presence of this power the planet shines with intense radiance, dispersing with his beams the darkness that spreads over the whole world : and hence the Munis praise him, the quiristers and nymphs of heaven sing and dance before him, and fierce spirits and holy sages attend upon his path. Viṣṇu, in the form of his active energy, never either rises or sets, and is at once the sevenfold sun and distinct from it. In the same manner as a man approaching a mirror, placed upon a stand, beholds in it his own image, so the energy (or reflection) of Viṣṇu is never disjoined (from the sun's car, which is the stand of the mirror), but remains month by month in the sun (as in the mirror), which is there stationed.

 ॥इति विष्णुपुराणे द्वितीयांशे एकादशोऽध्यायः॥

The sovereign sun, oh Brahman, the cause of day and night, perpetually revolves, affording delight to the gods, to the progenitors, and to mankind. Cherished by the Suṣumna ray of the sun,³ the moon is fed to the full in the fortnight of its growth; and in the fortnight of its wane the ambrosia of its substance is perpetually drunk by the immortals, until the last day of the half month, when the two remaining digits are drunk by the progenitors : hence these two orders of beings are nourished by the sun. The moisture of the earth, which the sun attracts by his rays, he again parts with for the fertilization of the grain, and the nutriment of all terrestrial creatures; and consequently the sun is the source of subsistence to every class of living things, to gods, progenitors, mankind, and the rest. The sun, Maitreya, satisfies the wants of the gods for a fortnight (at a time); those of the progenitors once a month; and those of men and other animals daily.

Arvavasu, and Svarāj, supplying heat severally to the moon, the stars, and to Mercury, Venus, Mars, Jupiter and Saturn.

NOTES

1. This mysticism originates in part apparently from a misapprehension of metaphorical texts of the Vedas, such as सैषा त्रयेव विद्या तपति 'that triple knowledge (the Vedas) shines,' and ऋचस्तपति 'the hymns of the Ṛk shine;' and in part from the symbolization of the light of religious truth by the light of the sun, as in the Gāyatrī ch. VIII. n. 13. To these are to be added the sectarian notions of the Vaiṣṇavas.

2. The formul of the Sāma-veda are not to be used along with those of the Ṛk and Yajush, at sacrifices in general.

3. The Vāyu, Liṅga, and Matsya Purāṇa specify several of the rays of the sun from amongst the many thousands which they say proceed from him. Of these, seven are principal, termed Suṣumna, Harikeśa, Viśvakarman, Viśvakārya, Sampadvasu.

Parāśara replied—The chariot of the moon has three wheels, and is drawn by ten horses, of the whiteness of the Jasmine, five on the right half (of the yoke), five on the left. It moves along the asterisms, divided into ranges, as before described; and, in like manner as the sun, is upheld by Dhruva; the cords that fasten it being tightened or relaxed in the same way, as it proceeds on its course. The horses of the moon, sprung from the bosom of the waters,¹ drag the car for a whole Kalpa, as do the coursers of the sun. The radiant sun supplies the moon, when reduced by the draughts of the gods to a single Kalā, with a single ray; and in the same proportion as the ruler of the night was exhausted by the celestials, it is replenished by the sun, the plunderer of the waters: for the gods, Maitreya, drink the nectar and ambrosia accumulated in the moon during half the month, and from this being their food they are immortal. Thirty-six thousand three hundred and thirth-three divinities drink the lunar ambrosia. When two digits remain, the moon enters the orbit of the sun, and abides in the ray called Amā; whence the period is termed Amāvasya.

In that orbit the moon is immersed for a day and night in the water; thence it enters the branches and shoots of the trees; and thence goes to the sun. Consequently any one who cuts off a branch, or casts down a leaf, when the moon is in the trees (the day of its rising invisible), is guilty of Brahmanicide. When the remaining portion of the moon consists of but a fifteenth part, the progenitors approach it in the afternoon, and drink the last portion, that sacred Kalā which is composed of ambrosia, and contained in the two digits of the form of the moon.² Having drunk the nectar effused by the lunar rays on the day of conjunction, the progenitors are satisfied, and remain tranquil for the ensuing month. These progenitors (or Pitṛs) are of three classes, termed Saumyas, Varhiṣuadas, and Agniṣvāttas.³ In this manner the moon, with its cooling rays, nourishes the gods in the light fortnight, the Pitṛs in the dark fortnight; vegetables, with the cool nectary aqueous atoms it sheds upon them; and through their development it sustains men, animals, and insects; at the same time gratifying them by its radiance.

The chariot of the son of Candra, Budha or Mercury, is composed of the elementary substances air and fire, and is drawn by eight bay horses of the speed of the wind. The vast car of Śukra (Venus) is drawn by earth-born horses,⁴ is equipped with a protecting fender and a floor, armed with arrows, and decorated by a banner. The splendid car of Bhauma (Mars) is of an octagonal shape, drawn by eight horses, of a ruby red, sprung from fire Vrihaspati (Jupiter), in a golden car drawn by eight pale-coloured horses, travels from sign to sign in the period of a year : and the tardy-paced Śani (Saturn) moves slowly along in a car drawn by piebald steeds. Eight black horses draw the dusky chariot of Rāhu, and once harnessed are attached to it for ever. On the Parvas (the nodes, or lunar and solar eclipses), Rāhu directs his course from the sun to the moon, and back again from the moon to the sun.⁵ The eight horses of the chariot of Ketu are of the dusky red colour of Lac, or the smoke of burning straw.

I have thus described to you, Maitreya, the chariots of the nine planets, all which are fastened to Dhruva by aerial cords. The orbs of all the planets, asterisms, and stars are attached to Dhruva, and travel accordingly in their proper orbits, being kept in their places by their respective bands of air. As many as are the stars, so many are the chains of air that secure them to Dhruva; and as they turn round, they cause the pole-star also to revolve. In the same manner as the oil-man himself, going round, causes the spindle to revolve, so the planets travel round, suspended by cords of air, which are circling round a (whirling) centre. The air, which is called Pravaha, is so termed because it bears along the planets, which turn round, like a disc of fire, driven by the aerial wheel.⁶

The celestial porpoise, in which Dhruva is fixed, has been mentioned, but you shall hear its constituent parts in more detail, as it is of great efficacy; for the view of it at night expiates whatever sin has been committed during the day; and those who behold it live as many years as there are stars in it, in the sky, or even more. Uttānapāda is to be considered as its upper jaw; Sacrifice as its lower. Dharma is situated on its brow; Nārāyaṇa in its heart. The Āśvins are its two fore feet; and Varuṇa and Āryamat its two hinder legs. Samvatsara is its sexual organ; Mitra its organ of excretion. Agni, Mahendra, Kaśyapa, and Dhruva, in succession are placed in its tail; which four stars in this constellation never set.⁷

इति श्रेविष्णुपुराणे द्वितीयांशे द्वादशोऽध्यायः।

From the waters, which are the body of Viṣṇu, was produced the lotus-shaped earth, with its seas and mountains. The stars are Viṣṇu; the worlds are Viṣṇu; forests, mountains, regions, rivers, oceans are Viṣṇu: he is all that is, all that is not. He, the lord, is identical with knowledge, through which he is all forms, but is not a substance. You must conceive therefore mountains, oceans, and all the diversities of earth and the rest, are the illusions of the apprehension. When knowledge is pure, real, universal, independent of works, and exempt from defect, then the varieties of substance, which are the fruit of the tree of desire, cease to exist in matter. For what is substance? Where is the thing that is devoid of beginning, middle, and end, of one uniform nature? How can reality be predicated of that which is subject to change, and reassumes no more its original character? Earth is fabricated into a jar; the jar is divided into two halves; the halves are broken to pieces; the pieces become dust; the dust becomes atoms. Say, is this reality? Though it be so understood by man, whose self-knowledge is impeded by his own acts. Hence, Brāhmaṇa, except discriminative knowledge, there is nothing anywhere, or at any time, that is real. Such knowledge is but one, although it appears manifold, as diversified by the various consequences of our own acts. Knowledge perfect, pure, free from pain, and detaching the affections from all that causes affliction; knowledge single and eternal – is the supreme Vāsudeva, besides whom there is nothing. The truth has been thus communicated to you by me; that knowledge which is truth; from which all that differs is false. That information, however, which is of a temporal and worldly nature has also been imparted to you; the sacrifice, the victim, the fire, the priests, the acid juice, the gods, the desire for heaven, the path pursued by acts of devotion and the rest, and the worlds that are their consequences, have been displayed to you. In that universe which I have described, he for ever migrates who is subject to the influence of works; but he who knows Vāsudeva to be eternal, immutable, and of one unchanging, universal form, may continue to perform them,⁸ as thereby he enters into the deity.

1. So is the car, according to the Vāyu : अपा गर्भसमुत्तरो रथः। The orb of the moon, according to the Linga, is only congealed water; घनतोयात्मकं तत्र मण्डल शशिनः स्मृतौ as that of the sun is concentrated घनतेजोमयं तत्र मण्डल भास्करस्य च।

2. There is some indistinctness in this account, from a confusion between the division of the moon's surface into sixteen Kalās or phases, and its apportionment, as a receptacle of nectar, into fifteen Kalās or digits, corresponding to the fifteen lunations, on the fourteen of which, during the wane, the gods drink the amrita, and on the fifteenth of which the Pitṛs exhaust the remaining portion. The correspondence of the two distinctions appears to be intended by the text, which terms the remaining digit or Kalā, composed of Amṛta, the form or superficies of the two Kalās : द्विकलाकारशिष्टा कला या सुधामूतमयी तां पिबन्ति। This, the commentator observes, is the fifteenth not the sixteenth : पञ्चदसी कला या तां पितरः पिबन्ति न तु षोडशी। The commentator on our text observes, also, that the passage is sometimes read द्विलवाकार। Lava meaning 'a moment', 'a short period,' The Matsya and Vāyu express the parallel passage so as to avoid all perplexity, by specifying the two Kalās as referring to time, and fixing the number of nectareous Kalās undefined : पिबन्ते द्विकलं कालं शिष्टस्तस्य कलास्तु याः। 'They, the Pitṛs, drink the remaining Kalās in two Kalās to time,' Warren explains Kalā, or, as he writes it, Calā, in one of its acceptations, 'the phases of the moon, of which the Hindus count sixteen,' Kalā Sankalita, 359. So the Bhāgavata the moon स एष षोडशकलः पुरुषो भगवान्। and the Vāyu, after noticing the exhaustion of the fifteenth portion on the day of conjunction, states the recurrence of increase or wane to take place in the sixteenth phase at the beginning of each fortnight : वृद्धिद्वायौ वै पक्षादौ षोडशयां शशिनः स्मृतौ।

3. The Vāyu and Matsya add a fourth class, the kavyas; identifying them with the cyclic years; the Saumyas and Agniśvāttas with the seasons; and the Varhiśads with the months.

4. The Vāyu makes the horses ten in number, each of a different colour.

5. The Matsya, Linga, and Vāyu add the circumstance of Rāhu's taking up, on these occasions, the circular shadow of the earth : उद्भूत्य पर्थिवीं छाया निर्मितां मण्डलाकृतिं।

6. The different bands of air attached to Dhruva are, according to the commentator, varieties of the Pravaha wind; but the Kūrma and Liṅga enumerate seven principal winds which perform this function of which the Pravaha is one.

7. The four last are therefore stars in the circle of perpetual apparition. One of these is the pole-star; and in Kaśyapa we have a verbal affinity to Cassiopeia. The Śiśumāra, or porpoise, is rather a singular symbol for the celestial sphere; but it is not more preposterous than many of the constellations of classical fiction. The component parts of it are much more fully detailed in the Bhāgavata, whence it has been translated by Jones, As. Res. II. 402. The Bhāgavata, however, mystifies the description, and says it is nothing more than the Dhāraṇā, or symbol, by which Viśnu, identified with the starry firmament, is to be impressed upon the mind in meditation. The account of the planetary system is, as usual, fullest in the Vāyu, with which the Liṅga and Matsaya nearly agree. The Bhaviṣya is nearly, also the same. They all contain many passages common to them and to our text. In the Agni, Padma, Kūrma, Brāhma, Garuḍa, and Vāmana descriptions occur which enter into less detail than the Viśnu, and often use its words, or passages found in other Purāṇas. Many intimations of a similar system occur in the Vedas, but whether the whole is to be found in those works is yet to be ascertained. It must not be considered as a correct representation of the philosophical astronomy of the Hindus, being mixed up with, and deformed by, mythological and symbolical fiction.

8. Only, however, as far as they are intended to propitiate Viśnu, and not for any other purpose.

Maitreya said—Reverned sir,¹ all that I asked of you has been thoroughly explained; namely, the situation of the earth, oceans, mountains, rivers, and planetary bodies; the system of the three worlds, of which Viṣṇu is the stay. The great end of life has also been expounded by you, and the pre-eminence of holy knowledge. It now remains that you fulfil the promise you made some time since,² of relating to me the story of king Bharata, and how it happened that a monarch like him, residing constantly at the sacred place Śālagrāma, and engaged in devotion, with his mind ever applied to Vāsudeva, should have failed, through the sanctity of the shrine, and the efficacy of his abstractions, to obtain final emancipation; how it was that he was born again as a Brāhmaṇa; and what was done by the magnanimous Bharata in that capacity : all this it is fit that you inform me.

Parāśara said—The illustrious monarch of the earth resided, Maitreya, for a considerable period at Śālagrāma, his thoughts being wholly dedicated to god, and his conduct distinguished by kindness and every virtue, until he had effected, in the highest degree, the entire control over his mind. The Rājā was ever repeating the names, Yajneśa, Achyuta, Govinda, Mādhava, Ananta, Keśava, Kṛṣṇa, Viṣṇu, Hṛshikeśa; nothing else did he utter, even in his dreams; nor upon anything but those names, and their import, did he ever meditate. He accepted fuel, flowers, and holy grass, for the worship of the deity, but performed no other religious rites, being engrossed by disinterested, abstract devotion.

On one occasion he went to the Mahānādī,³ for the purpose of ablution : he bathed there, and performed the ceremonies usual after bathing. Whilst thus occupied, there came to the same place a doe big with young, who had come out of the forest to drink of the stream. Whilst quenching her thirst, there was heard on a sudden the loud and fearful roaring of a lion; on which the doe, being excessively alarmed, jumped out of the water upon the bank.

In consequence of this great leap, her fawn was suddenly brought forth, and fell into the river; and the king, seeing it carried away by the current, caught hold of the young animal, and saved it from being drowned. The injury received by the deer, by her violent exertion, proved fatal, and she lay down, and died; which being observed by the royal ascetic, he took the fawn in his arms, and returned with it to his hermitage : there he fed it and tended it everyday, and it thrived and grew up under his care. It frolicked about the cell, and grazed upon the grass in its vicinity; and whenever it strayed to a distance, and was alarmed at a wild beast, it ran back thither for safety. Every morning it sallied forth from home, and every evening returned to the thatched shelter of the leafy bower of Bharata.

Whilst the deer was thus the inmate of his hermitage, the mind of the king was ever anxious about the animal, now, wandering away, and now returning to his side, and he was unable to think of anything else. He had relinquished his kingdom, his children, all his friends, and now indulged in selfish affection for a fawn. When absent for a longer time than ordinary, he would fancy that it had been carried off by wolves, devoured by a tiger, or slain by a lion. "The earth," he would exclaim, "is embrowned by the impressions of its hoofs. What has become of the young deer, that was born for my delight? How happy I should be if he had returned from the thicket, and I felt his budding antlers rubbing against my arm. Thcse tufts of sacred grass, of which the heads have been nibbled by his new teeth, look like pious lads chanting the Sāma-veda."⁴

Thus the Muni meditated whenever the deer was long absent from him; and contemplated him with a countenance animated with pleasure as he stood by his side. His abstraction was interrupted, the spirit of the king being engrossed by the fawn, even though he had abandoned family, wealth, and dominion. The firmness of the prince's mind became unsteady, and wandered with the wanderings of the young deer.

In the course of time the king became subject to its influence. He died, watched by the deer, with tears in its eyes, like a son mourning for his father; and he himself, as he expired, cast his eyes upon the animal, and thought of nothing else, being wholly occupied with one idea.

In consequence of this predominant feeling at such a season, he was born again, in the Jambumārga forest,⁵ as a deer, with the faculty of recollecting his former life; which recollection inspiring a distaste for the world, he left his mother, and again repaired to the holy place Śālagrāma. Subsisting there upon dry grass and leaves, he atoned for the acts which had led to his being born in such a condition; and upon his death he was next born as a Brāhmaṇa, still retaining the memory of his prior existence.

He was born in a pious and eminent family of ascetics, who were rigid observers of devotional rites. Possessed of all true wisdom, and acquainted with the essence of all sacred writings, he beheld soul as contradistinguished from matter (Prakṛti). Imbued with knowledge of self, he beheld the gods and all other beings as in reality the same. It did not happen to him to undergo investiture with the Brahmanical thread, nor to read the Vedas with a spiritual preceptor, nor to perform ceremonies, nor to study the scriptures. Whenever spoken to, he replied incoherently and in ungrammatical and unpolished speech.

His person was unclean, and he was clad in dirty garments. Saliva dribbled from his mouth, and he was treated with contempt by all the people. Regard for the consideration of the world is fatal to the success of devotion. The ascetic who is despised of men attains the end of the abstractions. Let therefore a holy man pursue the path of the righteous, without murmuring; and though men condemn him, avoid association with mankind.

This, the counsel of Hiranyagarbha,⁶ did the Brāhmaṇa call to mind, and hence assumed the appearance of a crazy idiot in the eyes of the world. His food was raw pulse, potherbs, wild fruit, and grains of corn. Whatever came in his way he ate, as part of a necessary, but temporary infliction⁷. Upon his father's death he was set to work in the fields by the brothers and his nephews, and fed by them with vile food; and as he was firm and stout of make, and a simpleton in outward act, he was the slave of every one that chose to employ him, receiving sustenance alone for his hire. The head servant of the king of Sauvīra, looking upon him as an indolent, untaught Brāhmaṇa, thought him a fit person to work without pay (and took him into his master's service to assist in carrying the palankin).

The king having ascended his litter, on one occasion, was proceeding to the hermitage of Kapila, on the banks of the Ikṣumatī river⁸, to consult the sage, to whom the virtues leading to liberation were known, what was most desirable in a world abounding with care and sorrow. Amongst those who by order of his head servant had been compelled gratuitously to carry the litter was the Brāhmaṇa, who had been equally pressed into this duty, and who, endowed with the holy universal knowledge, and remembering his former existence, bore the burden as the means of expiating the faults for which he was desirous to atone. Fixing his eyes upon the pole, he went tardily along, whilst the other bearers moved with alacrity; and the king, feeling the litter carried unevenly, called out, "Ho bearers! what is this? Keep equal pace together."

Still it proceeded unsteadily, and the Rājā again exclaimed, "What is this? how irregularly are you going!" When this had repeatedly occurred, the palankin-bearers at last replied to the king, "It is this man, who lags in his pace."

"First tell me," said the Brāhmaṇa, 'what it is of me that you have clearly seen', and then you may distinguish my properties as strong or weak. The assertion that you behold the palankin borne by me, or placed on me, is untrue. Listen, prince, to what I have to remark. The place of both the feet is the ground; the legs are supported by the feet; the thighs rest upon the legs; and the belly reposes on the thighs; the chest is supported by the belly; and the arms and shoulders are propped up by the chest; the palankin is borne upon the shoulders, and how can it be considered as my burden? This body which is seated in the palankin is defined as You; thence what is elsewhere called. This, is here distinguished as I and You and others are constructed of the elements; and the elements, following the stream of qualities, assume a bodily shape; but qualities, such as goodness and the rest, are dependant upon acts; and acts, accumulated in ignorance, influence the condition of all beings¹⁰. The pure, imperishable soul, tranquil, void of qualities, pre-eminent over nature (Prakṛti), is one, without increase or diminution, in all bodies. But if it be equally exempt from increase or diminution, then with what propriety can you say to me, 'I see that you are robust?' If the palankin rests on the shoulders, and they on the body; the body on the feet, and the feet on the earth; then is the burden borne as much by you as by me¹¹. When the nature of men is different, either in its essence or its cause, then may it be said that fatigue is to be undergone by me. That which is the substance of the palankin is the substance of you and me and all others, being an aggregate of elements, aggregated by individuality."

Having thus spoken, the Brāhmaṇa was silent, and went on hearing the palankin; but the king leaped out of it, and hastened to prostrate himself at his feet; saying, "Have compassion on me, Brahman, and cast aside the palankin; and tell me who you are, thus disguised under the appearance of a fool."

The Brāhmaṇa answered and said, "Hear me, Rājā. Who I am it is not possible to say : arrival at any place is for the sake of fruition; and enjoyment of pleasure, or endurance of pain, is the cause of the production of the body. A living being assumes a corporeal form to reap the results of virtue or vice. The universal cause of all living creatures is virtue or vice : why therefore inquire the cause (of my being the person I appear)."

The king said, "Undoubtedly virtue and vice are the causes of all existent effects, and migration into several bodies is for the purpose of receiving their consequences; but with respect to what you have asserted, that it is not possible for you to tell me who you are, that is a matter which I am desirous to hear explained. How can it be impossible, Brāhmaṇa, for any one to declare himself to be that which he is? There can be no detriment to one's-self from applying to it the word I;"

The Brāhmaṇa said, "It is true that there is no wrong done to that which is one's-self by the application to it of the word I; but the term is characteristic of error, of conceiving that to be the self (or soul) which is not self or soul. The tongue articulates the word I, aided by the lips, the teeth, and the palate; and these are the origin of the expression, as they are the causes of the production of speech. If by these instruments speech is able to utter the word I, it is nevertheless improper to assert that speech itself is I.¹² The body of a man, characterized by hands, feet, and the like, is made up of various parts; to which of these can I properly apply the denomination I?"

If another being is different specifically from me, most excellent monarch, then it may be said that this is I; that is the other: but when one only soul is dispersed in all bodies, it is then idle to say, Who are you? who am I? You are a king; this is a palankin; these are the bearers; these the running footmen; this is your retinue; yet it is untrue that all these are said to be yours.

The palankin on which you sit, is made of timber derived from a tree. What then? is it denominated either timber or a tree? People do not say that the king is perched upon a tree, nor that he is seated upon a piece of wood, when you have mounted your palankin. The vehicle is assemblage of pieces of timber, artificially joined together: judge, prince, for yourself in what the palankin differs really from the wood. Again; contemplate the sticks of the umbrella, in their separate state. Where then is the umbrella? Apply this reasoning to you and to me¹³.

A man, a woman, a cow, a goat, a horse, an elephant, a bird, a tree, are names assigned to various bodies, which are the consequences of acts. Man¹⁴ is neither a god, nor a man, nor a brute, nor a tree; these are mere varieties of shape, the effects of acts. The thing which in the world is called a king, the servant of a king, or by any other appellation, is not a reality; it is the creature of our imaginations: for what is there in the world, that is subject to vicissitude, that does not in the course of time go by different names. You are called the monarch of the world; the son of your father; the enemy of your foes; the husband of your wife; the father of your children. What shall I denominate you? How are you situated?

Now then, rightly understanding the question, think who I am; and how it is possible for me, after the truth is ascertained (of the identity of all), to recognise any distinction, or to speak of my own individuality by the expression I."

NOTES

1. One copy addresses Parāśara, Bhagavan sarvabhutesa, 'Sacred sovereign, lord of all creatures;' rather an unusual title for a sage, even though an inspired one. The other two copies begin, Samyagākhyātām. 'All has been thoroughly explained.'

2. See Bk. II. Ch. I.

3. The Mahānādī is properly a river in Orissa, but the name is applicable to any great stream, and its connexion with Śālagrāma Tirtha makes it probable that it is intended for the Gandaki or Gandaka, in which the Śālagram or Ammonite is most abundantly found. It may be here noticed that Śālagrāma is named amongst the Tirthas in the Mahābhārata : see Bk. II. Ch. I. n.6.

4. The applicability of this simile is not explained by the commentator : it refers possibly to the cropped or shaven heads of the religious students.

5. According to the Bhāgavata, Jamībumārga is the Kālanjara mountain or Kalanjar in Bundelkhand.

6. Hiranyagarbha or Brahmā is named here instead of the Yoga doctrine, which is sometimes ascribed to him as its author.

7. As a Kāla sanyama (कालसंयमः) a state of suffering or mortification lasting only for a season; or, in the other words, bodily existence; the body being contemplated as a sore, for which food is the unguent; drink, the lotion; and dress, the bandage.

8. A river in the north of India.

9. That is, what have you discerned of me, my body, life, or soul?

10. The condition—that is, the personal individuality—of any one is the consequence of his acts; but the same living principle animates him which is common to all living things.

11. The body is not the individual; therefore it is not the individual, but the body, or eventually the earth, which bears the burden.

12. That is, speech, or any or all of the faculties or senses, is not soul.

13. The aggregate limbs and senses no more constitute the individual, than the accidental combination of certain pieces of wood makes the fabric anything else than wood: in like manner as the machine is still timber, so the body is still mere elementary matter. Again; the senses are limbs, considered separately, no more constitute the man, than each individual stick constitutes the umbrella. Whether separate or conjoined, therefore, the parts of the body are mere matter; and as matter does not make up man, they do not constitute an individual.

14. The term in this and the preceding clause is Pumān: here used generically, there specifically.

चतुर्दशोऽध्यायः

पराशर उवाच

निशम्य तस्येति वचः परमार्थसमन्वितम्।

Parāśara said— Having heard these remarks, full of profound truth, the king was highly pleased with the Brāhmaṇa, and respectfully thus addressed him :

राजोवाच

King said— “What you have said is no doubt the truth; but in listening to it my mind is much disturbed. You have shown that to be discriminative wisdom which exists in all creatures, and which is the great principle that is distinct from plastic nature; but the assertions— ‘I do not bear the palankin—the palankin does not rest upon me—the body, by which the vehicle is conveyed, is different from me—the conditions of elementary beings are influenced by acts, through the influence of the qualities, and the qualities are the principles of action;’— what sort of positions are these?

Upon these doctrines entering into my ears, my mind, which is anxious to investigate the truth, is lost in perplexity. It was my purpose, illustrious sage, to have gone to Kapila Ṛṣi, to inquire of him what in this life was the most desirable object: but now that I have heard from you such words, my mind turns to you, to become acquainted with the great end of life.

To me, thus suppliant, then, explain what is the best of all things; for you are an ocean overflowing with the waters of divine wisdom."

The Brāhmaṇa replied to the king, "You, again, ask me what is the best of all things, not what is the great end of life;¹ but there are many things which are considered best, as well as those which are the great ends (or truths) of life. To him who, by the worship of the gods, seeks for wealth, prosperity, children, or dominion, each of these is respectively best. Best is the rite or sacrifice, that is rewarded with heavenly pleasures. Best is that which yields the best recompense, although it be not solicited. Self-contemplation, ever practised by devout ascetics, is to them the best. But best of all is the identification of soul with the supreme spirit. Hundreds and thousands of conditions may be called the best; but these are not the great and true ends of life. Hear what those are.

Wealth cannot be the true end of life, for it may be relinquished through virtue, and its characteristic property is expenditure for the gratification of desire. If a son were final truth, that would be equally applicable to a different source; for the son that is to one the great end of life, becomes the father of another. Final or supreme truth, therefore, would not exist in this world, as in all these cases those objects which are so denominated are the effects of causes, and consequently are not finite. If the acquisition of sovereignty were designated by the character of being the great end of all, then finite ends would sometimes be, and sometimes cease to be.

If you suppose that the objects to be effected by sacrificial rites, performed according to the rules of the Rk, Yajur, and Sāma Vedas, bc the great end of life, attend to what I have to say. Any effect which is produced through the causality of earth partakes of the character of its origin, and consists itself of clay; so any act performed by perishable agents, such as fuel, clarified butter, and Kuśa grass, must itself be of but temporary efficacy. The great end of life (or truth) is considcred by the wise to be eternal; but it would be transient, if it were accomplished through transitory things. If you imagine that this great truth is the performance of religious acts, from which no recompense is sought, it is not so; for such acts are the means of obtaining liberation, and truth is (the end), not the means. Meditation on self, again, is said to be for the sake of supreme truth; but the object of this is to establish distinctions (between soul and body), and the great truth of all is without distinctions. Union of self with supreme spirit is said to be the great end of all; but this is falsc; for one substance cannot become substantially another.²

Objects, then, which are considered most desirable are infinite. What the great end of all is, you shall, monarch, briefly learn from me. It is soul: one (in all bodies), pervading, uniform, perfect, pre-eminent over nature (Prakṛti), exempt from birth, growth, and decay, omniprescnt, undecaying, made up of true knowledge, independent, and unconnected with unrealities, with name, species, and the rest, in time present, past, or to come. The knowledge that this spirit, which is essentially one, is in one's own and in all other bodies, is the great end, or true wisdom, of one who knows the unity and the true principlcs of things. As one diffusive air, passing through the perforations of a flute, is distinguished as the notes of the scale (Sharga and the rest), so the nature of the great spirit is single, though its forms be manifold, arising from the consequences of acts. When the difference of the investing form, as that of god or the rest, is destroyed, then there is no distinction."

NOTES

1. You ask what is Śreyas (श्रेयस्) not what is Paramārtha (परमार्थः); the first means literally 'best', 'most excellent' and is here used to denote temporary and special objects, or sources of happiness, as wealth, posterity, power &c.; the latter is the one great object or end of life, true wisdom or truth, knowledge of the real and universal nature of soul.

2. But this is to be understood as applying to the doctrines which distinguish between the vital spirit (Jīvātmā) and the supreme spirit (Paramātmā), the doctrine of the Yoga. It is here argued, that it is absurd to talk of effecting a union between the soul of man and supreme soul; for if they are distinct essentially, they cannot combine, if they are already one and the same, it is nonsense to talk of accomplishing their union. The great end of life or truth is not to effect the union of two things, or two parts of one thing, but to know that all is unity

Parāśara continued— Having terminated these remarks, the Brāhmaṇa repeated to the silent and meditating prince a tale illustrative of the doctrines of unity.

Brāhmaṇa said— “Listen, prince,” he proceeded, “to what was formerly uttered by Ṛbhu, imparting holy knowledge to the Brāhmaṇa Nidāgha. Ṛbhu was a son of the supreme Brahmā, who, from his innate disposition, was of a holy character, and acquainted with true wisdom. Nidāgha, the son of Pulastya, was his disciple; and to him Ṛbhu communicated willingly perfect knowledge, not doubting of his being fully confirmed in the doctrines of unity, when he had been thus instructed.

The residence of Pulastya was at Viranagara, a large handsome city on the banks of the Devīkā river. In a beautiful grove adjoining to the stream the pupil of Ṛbhu, Nidāgha, conversant with devotional practices, abode. When a thousand divine years had elapsed, Ṛbhu went to the city of Pulastya, to visit his disciple. Standing at the doorway, at the end of a sacrifice to the Viśvadevas, he was seen by his scholar, who hastened to present him the usual offering, or Arghya, and conducted him into the house; and when his hands and feet were washed, and he was seated, Nidāgha invited him respectfully to eat (when the following dialoguc ensued):

Having thus spoken, the wife of Nidāgha, in obedience to her husband’s commands, prepared sweet and savoury food, and set it before the Brāhmaṇa; and Nidāgha, having stood before him until he had eaten of the meal which he had desired, thus reverentially addressed him :

Nidāgha said— ‘Have you eaten sufficiently, and with pleasure, great Brāhmaṇa? and has your mind received contentment from your food? Where is your present residence? whither do you purpose going? and whence, holy sir, have you now come?’

Rbhu said— ‘A hungry man, Brāhmaṇa, must needs be satisfied when he has finished his meal. Why should you inquire if my hunger has been appeased? When the earthy element is parched by fire, then hunger is engendered; and thirst is produced when the moisture of the body has been absorbed (by internal or digestive heat). Hunger and thirst are the functions of the body, and satisfaction must always be afforded me by that by which they are removed; for when hunger is no longer sensible, pleasure and contentment of mind are faculties of the intellect : ask their condition of the mind then, for man is not affected by them. For your three other questions, Where I dwell? Whither I go? and Whence I come? hear this reply. Man (the soul of man) goes every where, and penetrates every where, like the ether; and is it rational to inquire where it is? or whence or whither you go.

आदिमध्यावसानेषु किमन्नं सचिकारकम्॥ २८॥

I neither am going nor coming, nor is my dwelling in any one place; nor are you, thou; nor are others, others; nor am I, I. If you wonder what reply I should make to your inquiry why I made any distinction between sweetened and unsweetened food, you shall hear my explanation. What is there that is really sweet or not sweet, to one eating a meal? That which is sweet, is no longer so when it occasions the sense of repletion; and that which is not sweet, becomes sweet when a man (being very hungry) fancies that it is so. What food is there that first, middle, and last is equally grateful.

मृन्मयं हि गृहं यद्वन्मृदा लिसं स्थिरं भवेत्।

As a house built of clay is strengthened by fresh plaster, so is this earthly body supported by earthly particles; and barley, wheat, pulse, butter, oil, milk, curds, treacle, fruits, and the like, are composed of atoms of earth. This therefore is to be understood by you, that the mind which properly judges of what is or is not sweet is impressed with the notion of identity, and that this effect of identity tends to liberation.

“Having heard these words, conveying the substance of ultimate truth, Nidāgha fell at the feet of his visitor, and said, ‘Show favour to me, illustrious Brāhmaṇa, and tell me who it is that for my good has come hither, and by whose words the infatuation of my mind is dissipated.’

To this, Ṛbhu answered, ‘I am Ṛbhu, your preceptor, come hither to communicate to you true wisdom; and having declared to you what that is, I shall depart. Know this whole universe to be the one undivided nature of the supreme spirit, entitled Vāsudeva.’

Thus having spoken, and receiving the prostrate homage of Nidāgha, rendered with fervent faith, Ṛbhu went his way.

“After the expiration of another thousand years, Rbhu again repaired to the city where Nidāgha dwelt, to instruct him farther in true wisdom. When he arrived near the town, he beheld a prince entering into it, with a splendid retinue; and his pupil Nidāgha standing afar off, avoiding the crowd; his throat shrivelled with starvation, and bearing from the thicket fuel and holy grass. Rbhu approached him, and saluting him reverentially (as if he was a stranger) demanded why he was standing in such a retired spot.

निदाघ उवाच

'You have shown me,' observed Rbhu, 'at one moment the elephant and the king, without noticing any peculiar characteristic by which they may be distinguished. Tell me, venerable sir, is there any difference between them? for I am desirous to know which is here the elephant, which is the king.'

निदाघ उवाच

'The elephant,' answered Nidāgha, 'is underneath; the king is above him. Who is not aware, Brāhmaṇa, of the relation between that which bears and that which is borne?'

ऋभुरुवाच

अद्यःशब्दनिगद्यं किं किञ्चोर्द्धमभिधीयते॥११॥

To this Rbhu rejoined, 'Still explain to me, according to what I know of it, this matter: what is it that is meant by the word underneath, and what is it that is termed above?' As soon as he had uttered this,

ब्राह्मण उवाच

Brāhmaṇa said— Nidāgha jumped upon Rbhu, and said, 'Here is my answer to the question you have asked: I am above, like the Rājā; you are underneath, like the elephant. This example, Brāhmaṇa, is intended for your information.'

ऋभुरुवाच

तदेतत् त्वं समाचक्षव कतमस्त्वमहं तथा॥१४॥

'Very well,' said Rbhu, 'you, it seems, are as it were the Rājā, and I am like the elephant; but come now do you tell me which of us two is you; which is I.'

Brāhmaṇa said— “When Nidāgha heard these words, he immediately fell at the feet of the stranger, and said, ‘Of a surety you are my saintly preceptor Ṛbhu; the mind of no other person is so fully imbued with the doctrines of unity as that of my teacher, and hence I know that you are he.’ To this Ṛbhu replied, ‘I am your preceptor, by name Ṛbhu, who, pleased with the dutiful attention he has received, has come to Nidāgha to give him instruction: for this purpose have I briefly intimated to you divine truth, the essence of which is the non-duality of all.’

Having thus spoken to Nidāgha, the Brāhmaṇa Ṛbhu went away, leaving his disciple profoundly impressed, by his instructions, with belief in unity. He beheld all beings thenceforth as the same with himself, and, perfect in holy knowledge, obtained final liberation. “In like manner do you, oh king, who knows what duty is, regarding equally friend or foe, consider yourself as one with all that exists in the world. Even as the same sky is apparently diversified as white or blue, so Soul, which is in truth but one, appears to erroneous vision distinct in different persons.

Parāśara resumed— The king, being thus instructed, opened his eyes to truth, and abandoned the notion of distinct existence: whilst the Brāhmaṇa, who, through the recollection of his former lives, had acquired perfect knowledge, obtained now exemption from future birth. Whoever narrates or listens to the lessons inculcated in the dialogue between Bharata and the king, has his mind enlightened, mistakes not the nature of individuality, and the course of his migrations becomes fitted for ultimate emancipation.¹

1. This legend is a good specimen of a sectarian graft upon a Paurāṇik stem. It is in a great measure peculiar to the Viṣṇu P., as although it occurs also in the Bhāgavata, it is narrated there in a much more concise manner, and in a strain that looks like an abridgment of our next.

Maitreya said—The disposition of the earth and of the ocean and the system of the sun and the planets, the creation of the gods and the rest, the origin of the Ṛsis, the generation of the four castes, the production of brute creatures and the narratives of Dhruva and Prahlāda, have been fully related by you, my venerable preceptor. I am now desirous to hear from you the series of all the Manvantaras, as well as an account of those who preside over the respective periods, with Śakra, the king of the gods, at their head.

Parāśara replied— I will repeat to you, Maitreya, in their order, the different Manvantaras; those which are past and those which are to come.

The first Manu was Svāyambhuva, then came Svārocīṣa, then Auttami, then Tāmasa, then Raivata, then Cākṣuṣa: these six Manus have passed away. The Manu who presides over the seventh Manvantara, which is the present period, is Vaivasvata, the son of the sun.

द्वितीयमेतत् कथितमन्तरं शृणु चोत्तमम्॥ १२॥

The period of Svāyambhuva Manu, in the beginning of the Kalpa, has already been described by me, together with the gods, Ṛsis and other personages, who then flourished.¹ I will now, therefore, enumerate the presiding gods, Ṛsis and sons of the Manu, in the Manvantara of Svārocīṣa.² The deities of this period (or the second Manvantara) were the classes called Pārāvatas and Tuṣitas³; and the king of the gods was the mighty Vipaścīt. The seven Ṛsis⁴ were Urja, Stambha, Prāṇa, Dattoli, Ṛṣabha, Niścara and Arvarīvat; and Caitra, Kimpuruṣa and others, were the Manu's sons.⁵

अजः परशुदिव्याद्यास्तस्योत्तमिमनोः सुताः॥ १५॥

In the third period or Manvantara of Auttami,⁶ Suśānti was the Indra, the king of the gods; the orders of whom were the Sudhāmas, Satyas, Śivas. Pradarśanas and Vasavartis⁷; each of the five orders consisting of twelve divinities. The seven sons of Vasiṣṭha were the seven Ṛṣis⁸; and Aja, Paraśu, Divya and others, were the sons of the Manu.⁹

तामसस्यान्तरे देवाः सुरूपा हरयस्तथा।

पुत्रास्तु तामसस्यासन् राजानः सुमहाबलाः॥ १९॥

The Surūpas, Haris, Satyas and Sudhīs¹⁰ were the classes of gods, each comprising twenty-seven, in the period of Tāmasa, the fourth Manu.¹¹ Śibi was the Indra, also designated by his performance of a hundred sacrifices (or named Śatakratu). The seven Ṛṣis were Jyotirdhāma, Pṛthu, Kāvya, Caitra, Agni, Vanaka and Pivara.¹² The sons of Tāmasa were the mighty kings Nara, Khyāti, Sāntahaya, Jēnujaṅgha and others.¹³

बलबन्धुः सुसम्भारुः सत्यकाश्च तत्सुताः।
नरेन्द्राः सुमहावीर्या बभूवुर्मुनिसत्तम॥ २३॥

In the fifth interval the Manu was Raivata¹⁴: the Indra was Vibhu: the classes of gods, consisting of fourteen each, were the Amitābas, Abhūtarajasas, Vaikuṇṭhas and Sumedhasas¹⁵: the seven Ṛṣis were Hirānyaromā, Vedasrī, Urddhabāhu, Vedabāhu, Sudhāman, Parjanya and Mahāmuni¹⁶: the sons of Raivata were Balabandhu, Susambhāvyā, Satyaka and other valiant kings.

These four Manus, Svāroeiṣa, Auttamī, Tāmasa and Raivata, were all descended from Priyavrata, who, in consequence of propitiating Viṣṇu by his devotions, obtained these rulers of the Manvantaras for his posterity.

Cākṣuṣa was the Manu of the sixth period¹⁷: in which the Indra was Manojava: the five classes of gods were the Ādyas, Prastūtas, Bhavyas, Pṛthugas and the magnanimous Lekhas, eight of each¹⁸: Sumedhas, Virajas, Haviṣmat, Uttama, Madhu, Abhināman and Sahiṣṇu were the seven sages¹⁹: the kings of the earth, the sons of Cākṣuṣa, were the powerful Uru, Puru, Satadyumna and others.

The Manu of the present period is the wise lord of obsequies, the illustrious offspring of the sun: the deities are the Ādityas, Vasus and Rudras; their sovereign is Purandara: Vasiṣṭha, Kaśyapa, Atri, Jamadagni, Gautama, Viśvāmitra and Bharadvāja are the seven Ṛsis: and the nine pious sons of Vaivasvata Manu are the kings Ikṣvāku, Nābhāga, Dhṛṣṭa, Sanyāti, Nariṣyanta, Nābhanidiṣṭa, Karūṣa, Priṣadhra and the celebrated Vasumat.²⁰

The unequalled energy of Viṣṇu combining with the quality of goodness and effecting the preservation of created things, presides over all the Manvantaras in the form of a divinity. Of a portion of that divinity Yajña was born in the Svāyambhuva Manvantara, the willbegotten progeny of Ākūṭī.²¹ When the Svārocīṣa Manvantara had arrived, that divine Yajña was born as Ajita, along with the Tuṣita gods, the sons of Tuṣītā. In the third Manvantara, Tuṣita was again born of Satya, as Satya, along with the class of deities so denominated. In the next period, Satya became Hari, along with the Haris, the children of Hari. The excellent Hari was again born in the Raivata Manvantara, of Sambhūti, as Mānasa, along with the gods called Abhūtarajjas. In the next period, Viṣṇu was born of Viṣṇuṇī, as Vaikuṇṭha. In the present Manvantara, Viṣṇu was again born as Vāmana, the son of Kaśyapa by Aditi. With three paces he subdued the worlds and gave them, freed from all embarrassment, to Purandara.²²

These are the seven persons by whom, in the several Manvantaras, created beings have been protected. Because this whole world has been pervaded by the energy of the deity, he is entitled Viṣṇu, from the root Viś, 'to enter' or 'pervade'; for all the gods, the Manus, the seven Ṛsis, the sons of the Manus, the Indras the sovereigns of the gods, all are but the impersonated might of Viṣṇu.²³

1. The gods were said to be the Yāmas (Bk. I. Ch. VII.); the Ṛsis were Marīci, Aṅgiras, etc. (Bk. I. Ch. VII. n. 2); and the sons were Priyavrata and Uttānapāda (Bk. I. Ch. VII.). The Vāyu adds to the Yamas, the Ajitas, who share with the former, it observes, sacrificial offerings. The Matsya, Padma, Brahma Purāna and Hari Varnśā substitute for the sons, the grandsons of Svāyambhuva, Agnidhra and the rest (Bk. II. Ch. 1).

2. This Manu, according to the legend of his birth in the Mārkaṇḍeya Purāna, was the son of Svārocīṣa, so named from the splendour of his appearance when born and who was the son of the nymph Varuthinī by the Gandharba Kali. The text, in another place, makes him a son of Priyavrata.

3. The Vāyu gives the names of the individuals of these two classes, consisting each of twelve. It furnishes also the nomenclature of all the classes of divinities and of the sons of the Manus in each Manvantara. According to the same authority, the Tuṣitas were the sons of Kratu : the Bhāgavata calls them the sons of Tuṣīṭa by Vedaśiras. The divinities of each period are according to the Vāyu, those to whom offerings of the Soma juice and the like are presented collectively.

4. The Vāyu describes the Rṣis of each Manvantara as the sons or in some cases the descendants in a direct line, of the seven sages, Atri, Āṅgiras, Bhṛgu, Kaśyapa, Pulaha, Pulastya and Vasiṣṭha; with some inconsistency, for Kaśyapa, at least, did not appear himself until the seventh Manvantara. In the present series Urja is the son of Vasiṣṭha. Stambha springs from Kaśyapa, Prāṇa from Bhṛgu, Dattoli is the son of Pulastya, Ṛṣabha descends from Āṅgiras, Niścara from Atri and Arvarīvat is the son of Pulaha. The Brahma Purāna and Hari Varnśā have a rather different list or Aurva, Stambha, Kaśyapa, Prāṇa, Bṛhaspati, Cyavana and Dattoli: but the origin of part of this difference is nothing more than an imperfect quotation from the Vāyu Purāna; the two first, Aurva and Stambha, being specified as the son of Vasiṣṭha and the descendant of Kaśyapa and then the parentage of the rest being omitted : to complete the seven, therefore, Kaśyapa becomes one of them. Some other errors of this nature occur in these two works and from the same cause, blundering citation of the Vāyu, which is named as their authority (एते मर्षयस्तात् वायुप्रोक्ता महाव्रताः). A curious peculiarity also occurs in these mistakes. They are confined to the first eight Manvantaras. The Brahma Purāna omits all details of the last six and the Hari Varnśā inserts them fully and correctly, agreeably to the authority of the Vāyu. It looks, therefore, as if the compiler of the Hari

Varnśā had followed the Brahma, as far as it went, right or wrong : but had bad recourse to the original Vāyu P, when the Brahma failed him. Dattoni is sometimes written Dattoli and Dattotri; and the latter appears to have been the case with the copy of the Hari Varnśā employed by M. Langlois, who makes one of the Rṣis of this Manvantara, "le penitent Atri." He is not without countenance in some such reading, for the Padma Purāna changes the name to Dattātreya, no doubt suggested by Datta-atri. Dattātreya, however, is the son of Atri; while the Vāyu calls the person of the text the son of Pulastya. There can be no doubt therefore of the correct reading, for the son of Pulastya is Dattoli. (Bk. I. Ch. X.)

5. The Vāyu agrees with the text in these names, adding seven others. The Bhāgavata has a different series. The Padma has four other names, Nabha, Nabhasya, Prasṛti, Bhavana. The Brahmā has ten names, including two of these and several of the names of the Rṣis of the tenth Manvantara. The Matsya has the four names of the Padma for the sons of the Manu and gives seven others, Havīndhra, Sukṛta, Mūrti, Apas, Jyotiḥ, Aya, Smṛta (the names of the Brahmā), as the seven Prajāpatis of this period and sons of Vasiṣṭha. The sons of Vasiṣṭha, however, belong to the third Manvantara and bear different appellations. There is, no doubt, some blundering here in all the books except the Vāyu and those which agree with it.

6. The name occurs Auttamī, Auttama and Uttama. The Bhāgavata and Vāyu agree with our text (Bk. III. Ch. I) in making him a descendant from Priyavrata. The Mārkaṇḍeya calls him the son of Uttama, the son of Uttānapāda : and this appears to be the correct genealogy, both from our text and the Bhāgavata.

7. The Brahma and Hari Varnśā have, in place of these, the Bhānus; but the Vāyu and Mārkaṇḍeya concur with the text.

8. All the authorities agree in this: but the Brahma and Hari Varnśā appear to furnish a different series also; or even a third, according to the French translation : 'Dans le troisième Manvantara parurent comme Saptarchis leg fils de Vasichtha, de son nom appeles Vāsichthas, les fils de Hiranyakarpha et les illustres enfans d'Ourdja.' The text is, वसिष्ठपुत्राः सप्तासन् वासिष्ठा इति विश्रुताः।

हिरण्यर्भाभर्ष्य सुता और्जनामसुतेजसः॥ The meaning of which is, 'There were (in the first Manvantara) seven celebrated sons of Vasiṣṭha, who (in the third Manvantara) were sons of Brahmā (i.e. Ṛṣis), the illustrious posterity of Urjjā. We have already seen that Urjjā was the wife of Vasiṣṭha, by whom she had seven sons, Rajas' (see Bk. I. Ch. X.), in the Svāyambhuva Manvantara; and these were born again as the Ṛṣis of the third period. The name of these persons, according to the Matsya and Padma, are however very different from those of the sons of Vasiṣṭha, given Bk. I. Ch. X. or Kaukundihi, Kurundi, Dalaya, Saikha, Pravāhita, Mīta and Sammita.

9. The Vāyu adds ten other names to those of the text. The Brahmā gives ten altogether different. The Bhāgavata and Padma have each a separate nomenclature.

10. Of these, the Brahma and Hari Vartiśa notice only the Satyas : the Matsya and Padma have only Sādhyas. The Vāyu, Bhāgavata, Kūrma and Mārkandeya agree with the text.

11. He is the son of Priyavrata, according to the text, the Vāyu, etc. The Mārkandeya has a legend of his birth by a doe; and from his being begotten in dark, tempestuous weather (तमस), he derives his name.

12. Severally, according to the Vāyu, the progeny of Bhṛgu, Kaśyapa, Aṅgiras, Pulastyā, Atri, Vasiṣṭha and Pulaha. There is considerable variety in some of the names. Thus the Matsya has Kavi, Pṛthu, Agni, Salpa, Dhīmat, Kapi, Akapi. The Hari Vartiśa has Kāvya, Pṛthu, Agni, Jahnu, Dhātri, Kapivat, Akapivat. For the two last the Vāyu reads Gātra and Vanakapivat. The son of Pulaha is in his place (Bk I. Ch. X. n. 6), Arvarivat or Vanakapivat. Gātra is amongst the sons of Vasiṣṭha (BK. I Ch. X). The Vāyu is therefore probably most correct, although our text, in regard to these two denominations, admits of no doubt; अग्निर्वनकस्तथा पीवरश्च।

13. The Vāyu, agree with the text; the Vāyu naming eleven, the Brahma, Matsya and Padma have a series of ten names, Sutapas, Tapomūla; of which seven are the Ṛṣis of the twelfth Manvantara.

14. Raivata, as well as his three predecessors, is regarded usually as a descendant of Priyavrata. The Mārkandeya has a long legend of his birth, as the son of king Durgama by the nymph Revati, sprung from the constellation Revati, whom Ritavāk, a Muni, caused to fall from heaven. Her radiance became a lake on mount Kumuda, hence called Raivataka; and from it appeared the damsel, who was brought up by Pramuca Muni. Upon the marriage of Revati, the Muni, at her request, restored the asterism to its place in the skies.

15. The Brahma inserts of these only the Abhūtarajasas, with the remark, that 'they were of like nature (with their name) देवाशाभूतरजसस्तथा प्रकृतयः स्तुताः। i.e., they were exempt from the quality of passion. M. Langlois, in rendering the parallel passage of the Hari Vartiśa, has confounded the epithet and the subject : 'dont les dieux furent les Pracritis, depourvu de colere et de passion.' He is also at a loss what to do with the terms Pāriplava and Raibhya, in the following passage; पारिप्लवश्चैभ्यश्च देवतागणविशेषौ। asking, 'qu'est ce quo Pāriplava? qu'est ce que Rebhya?' If he had the commentary at hand, these questions would have been unnecessary: they are there said to be two classes of divinities : पारिप्लवश्चैभ्यश्च देवतागणविशेषौ।

16. There is less variety in these names than usual. Vedabāhu is read Devabāhu; Sudhāman, Satyanetra; and Mahāmuni, Muni, Yajur, Vasiṣṭha and Yadudhra. According to the Vāyu, those of the text are respectively of the lineage of Aṅgiras, Bhṛgu, Vasiṣṭha, Pulastyā, Atri, Pulaha and Kaśyapa. There is considerable variety in the names of the Manu's sons.

17. Cākṣuṣa, according to the best authorities, descended from Dhruva (see Bk. I. Ch. XIII.); but the Mārkandeya has a legend of his birth as the son of a Kṣatriya, named Anamitra; of his being exchanged at his birth for the son of Viśrānta Rājā and being brought up by the prince as his own; of his revealing the business when a man and propitiating Brahmā by his devotions; in consequence of which he became a Manu. In his former birth he was born from the eye of Brahmā : when his name, from Cākṣuṣa, 'the eye.'

18. The authorities agree as to the number, but differ as to the names : reading for Ādyas, Āryas and Āpyas: for Prastūtas, Prabhūtas and Prasūtas; for Pṛthugas, Pṛthukas and Pṛthusas; and, which is a more wide deviation, Ṙbhus for Bhavyas. M. Langlois omits the Prasūtas and inserts Divaukas; but the latter, meaning 'divinities,' is only an epithet. The Hari Vartiśa has, आद्याः प्रसूता ऋभवः पृथुगाश्चदिवौकौसः। लखाश्च— The comment adds, दिवौकौस इति सर्वेषां विशेषणं।

19. The Vāyu reads Sudhāman for the first name; Unnata for Uttama; and Abhimāna for Abhināman. The latter occurs also Abhināmin (Matsya) and Atināman (Hari Varnśa). The latter reads, no doubt incorrectly, Bhṛgu, Nabha and Vivasvat for Uttama, Madhu and Haviśmat. The sons of Cākṣuṣa are enumerated, Bk. I. Ch. XIII.

20. There is no great variety of nomenclature in this Manvantara. The Vāyu adds to the deities the Sādhyas, Viśvas, Maruts and gods sprung from Bhṛgu and Aṅgiras. The Bhāgavata adds the Rbhūs : and most include the two Āśvins as a class. Of the Maruts, however, the Hari Varnśa remarks that they are born in every Manvantara, seven times seven (or forty-nine); that in each Manvantara four times seven or twenty-eight, obtain emancipation, but their places are filled up by persons reborn in that character. So the commentator explains the passages मन्वन्तरेषु सर्वेषु प्राणिदिशः सप्त सप्तकाः and मन्वन्तरे व्यतीक्रान्ते चत्वारः सप्तकाः गणाः सप्तसप्तका एकोनपंचाशत् मरुतो देवाः प्रतिमन्वन्तरे भवन्ति। Comment, तेषां मध्ये चत्वारः सप्तका अष्टाविंशतिमरुतः। Comment. It may be suspected, however, that these passages have been derived from the simple statement of the Matsya, that in all the Manvantara classes of Ṛsis appear by seven and seven and having established a code of law and morality, depart to felicity : मन्वन्तरेषु सर्वेषु सप्त सप्त महर्षयः। कृत्वा धर्मव्यवस्थानं प्रयाप्ति परमं पदं। The Vāyu has a rather different list of the seven Ṛsis; or Vasumat, the son of Vasiṣṭha; Vatsāra, descended from Kaśyapa; Viśvāmitra, the son of Gādhi and of the Kuśika race; Jamadagni, son of Kuru, of the race of Bhṛgu; Bharadvāja, son of Br̥haspati; Śaradvat, son of Gautama, of the family of Utathya; and Brahmakoṣa or Atri, descended from Brahmā. All the other authorities agree with our text.

21. The nominal father being the patriarch Ruci. (See Bk. I. Ch. VII.)

22. There is no further account of this incarnation in the Viṣṇu Purāṇa. Fuller details occur in the Bhāgavata, Kūrma, Matsya and Vāmana Purāṇas. The first of these (b. VIII. c. 15-23) relates the penance and sacrifices of Bali, son of Virocana, by which he had overcome Indra and the gods and obtained supreme dominion over the three spheres. Viṣṇu, at the request of the deities, was born as a dwarf, Vāmana, the son of Aditi by Kaśyapa, who, applying to Bali for alms, was promised by the prince whatever he might demand, notwithstanding Śukra, the preceptor of the Daityas, apprised him whom he had to deal with. The dwarf demanded as much space as he could step over at three steps; and upon the assent of Bali, enlarged himself to such dimensions as to stride over the three worlds. Being worshipped however by Bali and his ancestor Prahlāda, he conceded to them the sovereignty of Pātāla.

23. See the same etymology, Bk. I. ch. I. n. 7.

Parāsara said— Sanjñā, the daughter of Viśvakarman, was the wife of the sun and bore him three children, the Manu (Vaivasvata), Yama and the goddess Yamī (or the Yamunā river). Unable to endure the fervours of her lord, Sanjñā gave him Chāyā¹ as his handmaid and repaired to the forests to practise devout exercises. The sun, supposing Chāyā to be his wife Sanjñā, begot by her three other children, Śaniścara (Saturn), another Manu (Sāvarṇi) and a daughter Tapati (the Tapti river). Chāyā, upon one occasion, being offended with Yama,² the son of Sanjñā, denounced an imprecation upon him and thereby revealed to Yama and to the sun that he was not in truth Sanjñā, the mother of the former. Being further informed by Chāyā that his wife had gone to the wilderness, the sun beheld her by the eye of medication engaged in austerities, in the figure of a mare (in the region of Uttara Kuru). Metamorphosing himself into a horse, he rejoined his wife and begot three other children, the two Āśvins and Revanta and then brought Sanjñā back to his own dwelling. To diminish his intensity, Viśvakarman placed the luminary on his lathe, to grind off some of his effulgence; and in this manner reduced it an eighth, for more than that was inseparable.³ The parts of the divine Vaiṣṇava splendour, residing in the sun, that were filed off by Viśvakarman, fell blazing down upon the earth and the artist constructed of them the discus of Viṣṇu, the trident of Śiva, the weapon⁴ of the god of wealth, the lance of Kārtikeya and the weapons of the other gods: all these Viśvakarman fabricated from the superfluous rays of the sun.⁵

The son of Chāyā, who was called also a Manu, was denominated Sāvarṇi,⁶ from being of the same caste (Savarna) as his elder brother, the Manu Vaivasvata. He presides over the ensuing or eighth Manvantara; the particulars of which and the following, I will now relate. In the period in which Sāvarṇi shall be the Manu, the classes of the gods will be Sutapas, Amitābhās and Mukhyas; twenty-one of each. The seven Ṛsis will be Dīptimat, Gālava, Rāma, Kṛpa, Drauṇi; my son Vyāsa will be the sixth and the seventh will be Ṛṣyaśringa.⁷ The Indra will be Bali, the sinless son of Virocana, who through the favour of Viṣṇu is actually sovereign of part of Pātāla. The royal progeny of Sāvarṇi will be Virajas, Arvarīvas, Nirmoha and others.

The ninth Manu will be Dakṣa-sāvarṇī.⁸ The Pāras, Marīcigarbhās and Sudharmas will be the three classes of divinities, each consisting of twelve; their powerful chief will be the Indra Adbhuta, Savana, Dyutimat, Bhavya, Vasu, Medhātithi, Jyotiṣmān and Satya will be the seven R̄ṣis. Dhṛtaketu, Dr̄ptiketu, Pañcahasta, Nirāmaya, Pṛthuśrava and others, will be the sons of the Manu.

In the tenth Manvantara the Manu will be Brahmā-sāvarṇī: the gods will be the Sudhāmans, Viruddhas and Śatasankhyas: the Indra will be the mighty Śānti: the R̄ṣis will be Haviṣmān, Sukṛti, Satya, Apāmmūrtti, Nābhāga, Apratīmaujas and Satyaketu: and the ten sons of the Manu will be Sukṣetra, Uttamaujas, Hariṣeṇa and others.

and sons of the Manu, will be Savarga, Sarvadharma, Devānīka and others.

Tapasvī, Sutapas, Tapomūrtti, Taporati, Tapodhṛti, Tapodyuti and Tapodhana will be the R̄ṣis: and Devavān, Upadeva, Devaśreṣṭha and others, will be the Manu's sons and mighty monarchs on the earth.

In the fourteenth Manvantara, Bhautya will be the Manu¹¹; Śuci, the Indra: the five classes of gods will be the Cākṣusas, the Pavitras, Kaniṣhas, Bhrājiras and Vāvriddhāś: the seven Ṛsis will be Agnibāhu, Śuci, Śukra, Māgadha, Grdhra, Yukta and Ajita: and the sons of the Manu will be Uru, Gabhīra, Bradhna and others, who will be kings and will rule over the earth.¹²

At the end of every four ages there is a disappearance of the Vedas and it is the province of the seven Ṛsis to come down upon earth from heaven to give them currency again. In every Kṛta age the Manu (of the period) is the legislator or author of the body of law, the Smṛti: the deities of the different classes receive the sacrifices during the Manvantaras to which they severally belong: and the sons of the Manu themselves and their descendants, are the sovereigns of the earth for the whole of the same term. The Manu, the seven Ṛsis, the gods, the sons of the Manu, who are the kings and Indra, are the beings who preside over the world during each Manvantara.

An entire Kalpa, oh Brāhmaṇa, is said to comprise a thousand ages or fourteen Manvantaras;¹³ and it is succeeded by a night of similar duration; during which, he who wears the form of Brahmā, Janārdana, the substance of all things, the lord of all and creator of all, involved in his own illusions and having swallowed up the three spheres, sleeps upon the serpent Śeṣa, amidst the ocean.¹⁴ Being after that awake, he, who is the universal soul, again creates all things as they were before, in combination with the property of foulness (or activity): and in a portion of his essence, associated with the property of goodness, he, as the Manus, the kings, the gods and their Indras, as well as the seven Ṛsis, is the preserver of the world. In what manner Viṣṇu, who is characterised by the attribute of providence during the four ages, effected their preservation, I will next, Maitreya, explain.

ददाति सर्वभूतानां सर्वभूतहिते रतः॥५४॥

एवमेष जगत् सर्वं परिपाति करोति च।।
हन्ति चानेष्वनन्तात्मा नास्त्यस्माद् व्यतिरेकि यत्॥५८॥

In the Kṛta age, Viṣṇu, in the form of Kapila and other inspired teachers, assiduous for the benefit of all creatures, imparts to them true wisdom. In the Treta age he restrains the wicked, in the form of a universal monarch and protects the three worlds.¹⁵ In the Dvāpara age, in the person of Veda-vyāsa, he divides the one Veda into four and distributes it into innumerable branches: and at the end of the Kali or fourth age he appears as Kaeki and re-establishes the iniquitous in the paths of rectitude. In this manner the universal spirit preserves, creates and at last destroys, all the world.

इति श्रीविष्णुपुराणे त्रितीयांशे द्वितीयोऽध्यायः॥

Thus, Brāhmaṇa, I have described to you the true nature of that great being who is all things and besides whom there is no other existent thing, nor has there been, nor will there be, either here or elsewhere. I have also enumerated to you the Manvantaras and those who preside over them. What else do you wish to hear?

NOTES

1. That is, her shadow or image. It also means 'shade'. The Bhāgavata, however, makes both Sanjñā and Chāyā daughters of Viśvakarman. According to the Matsya, Vivasavat, the son of Kaśyapa and Aditi, had three wives, Rajñī, the daughter of Raivata, by whom he had Revanta; Prabhā, by whom he had Prabhātā; and by Sanjñā, the daughter of Tvaṣṭri, the Manu and Yama and Yamunā. The story then proceeds much as in the text.

2. Yama, provoked at her partiality for her own children, abused Chāyā and lifted up his foot to kick her. She cursed him to have his leg affected with sores and worms; but his father bestowed upon him a cock, to eat the worms and remove the discharge; and Yama, afterwards propitiating Mahādeva, obtained the rank of Lokapāla and sovereign of Tartarus.

3. The Matsya says he trimmed the sun every where except in the feet, the extent of which is could not discern. Consequently in pictures or images the feet of the sun must never be delineated, under pain of leprosy, etc.

4. The term of Śivikā, which properly means 'a litter'. The commentator calls it Astra, 'a weapon'.

5. This legend is told, with some variations of no great importance, in the Matsya, Mārkaṇḍeya and Padma Purāṇa (Svarga Khanḍa), in the Bhāgavata and Hari Varnśa.

6. The Mārkaṇḍeya, while it admits Sāvarṇi to be the son of the sun, has a legend of his former birth, in the Svārocīṣa Manvantara, as Suratha Rājā, who became a Manu by having then propitiated Devī. It was to him that the Durgā Māhātmya or Caṇḍī, the popular narrative of Durgā's triumphs over various demons, was narrated.

7. The Vāyu has Jāmadagnya or Paraśurāma, of the Kuśika race; Gālava, of that of Bhṛgu; Dvaiḍpāyana (or Vyāsa), of the family of Vasiṣṭha, Krpa, the son Śaradvat; Diptimat, descended from Atri; Ṛṣyaśrīna, from Kaśyapa; and Aśvatthāman, the son of Droṇa, of the Bharadvāja family. The Matsya and Padma have Śatānanda in place of Diptimat.

8. The four following Sāvarṇis are described in the Vāyu as the mind-engendered, sons of a daughter of Dakṣa, named either Suvaratā (Vāyu) or Priyā (Brahmā) by himself and the three gods, Brahmā, Dharma and Rudra, to whom he presented her on mount Meru; whence they are called also Meru-sāvarṇis. They are termed Sāvarṇis from their being of one family or caste : यस्मात्सवर्णस्त्वेषां वै ब्रह्मादीनां कुमारकाः। सवर्णं मनवस्त्वेषां सवर्णत्वं च तेषु ज्ञत्। According to the same authority, followed by the Hari Varnśa, it appears that this Manu is also called Rohita. Most of the details of this and the following Manvantaras are omitted in the Matsya, Brahma, Padma and Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇas. The Bhāgavata and Kūrma give the same as our text; and the Vāyu, which agrees very nearly with it, is followed in most respects by the Hari Varnśa. The Matsya and the Padma are peculiar in their series and nomenclature of the Manus themselves, called the 9th Raucya, 10th Bhautya, 11th Merusāvarṇi, son of Brahmā, 12th Rtu, 13th Ritadhāman and 14th Visvaksena. The Bhāgavata called the two last Manus, Deva-sāvarṇi and Indra-sāvarṇi.

9. Hence the Vāyu identifies the first with days, the second with nights and the third with hours.

10. The son of the Prajāpati Ruci (Vāyu), by the nymph Mānīni, the daughter of the Apsaras Pramalocā (Mārkaṇḍeya).

11. Son of Kavi, by the goddess, Bhūti, according to the Vāyu; but the Mārkaṇḍeya makes Bhūti the son of Āṅgiras, whose pupil Śānti, having suffered the holy fire to get out in his master's absence, prayed to Agni and so propitiated him, that he not only re-lighted the flame, but desired Śānti to demand a further boon. Śānti accordingly solicited a son for his Guru; which son was Bhūti, the father of the Manu Bhautya.

12. Although the Purāṇas which give an account of the Manvantaras agree in some of the principal details, yet in the minor ones they offer many varieties, some of which have been noticed. These chiefly regard the first six and the eighth. Except in a few individual peculiarities, the authorities seem to arrange themselves in two classes; one comprehending the Viśnu, Vāyu, Kūrma, Bhāgavata and Mārkaṇḍeya; and the other the Matsya, Padma, Brahma and Hari Varṇa. The Mārkaṇḍeya, although it agrees precisely with the Viśnu in its nomenclature, differs from it and from all, in devoting a considerable number of its pages to legends of the origin of the Manus, all of which are evidently of comparatively recent invention and several of which have been no doubt suggested by the etymology of the names of the Manus.

13. A thousand ages of the gods and fourteen Manvantaras are not precisely the same thing, as has been already explained. (See Bk. I. Ch. III, n. 6.)

14. The order of the text would imply, that as Brahmā he sleeps upon Śeṣa; but if this be intended, it is at variance with the usual legend, that it is as Viśnu or Nārāyaṇa that the deity sleeps in the intervals of dissolution. The commentator accordingly qualifies the phrase Brahmarūpadhara (ब्रह्मरूपधर) by the term Divā (दिवा) : 'Viśnu wears the form of Brahmā by day; by night he sleeps on Śeṣa, in the person of Nārāyaṇa : रात्रौ श्रीनारायणरूपेण शेषाहै शते। This however may be suspected to be an innovation upon an older system; for in speaking of the alternations of creation and dissolution, they are always considered as contemporaneous with the day and night of Brahmā alone.

15. As a Cakravartin.

Maitreya said— I have learnt from you, in due order, how this world is Viśṇu; how it is in Viśṇu; how it is from Viśṇu; nothing further is to be known: but I should desire to hear how the Vedas were divided, in different ages, by that great being, in the form of Vedavyāsa? and what were the branches into which the Vedas were distributed?

Parāśara said—The branches of the great tree of the Vedas are so numerous, Maitreya, that it is impossible to describe them at length. I will give you a summary account of them.

In every Dvāpara (or third) age, Viṣṇu, in the person of Vyāsa, in order to promote the good of mankind, divides the Veda, which is properly but one, into many portions: observing the limited perseverance, energy and application of mortals, he makes the Vedas four-fold, to adapt it to their capacities; and the bodily form which he assumes, in order to effect that classification, is known by the name of Vedavyāsa. Of the different Vyāsas in the present Manvantara¹ and the branches which they have taught, you shall have an account.

Twenty-eight times have the Vedas been arranged by the great R̄sis in the Vaivasvata Manvantara in the Dvāpara age and consequently eight and twenty Vyāsas have passed away; by whom, in their respective periods, the Veda has been divided into four. In the first Dvāpara age the distribution was made by Svāyambhu (Brahmā) himself; in the second, the arranger of the Veda (Vedavyāsa) was Prajāpati (or Manu); in the third Uśanas; in the fourth, Brhaspati; in the fifth, Sāvitri; in the sixth, Mṛtyu (death or Yama); in the seventh Indra; in the eighth, Vasiṣṭha; in the ninth, Sārasvata; in the tenth, Tridhāman; in the eleventh, Trivr̄ṣan; in the twelfth, Bharadvāja, in the thirteenth, Antariṣṭa; in the fourteenth, Vapra; in the fifteenth, Trayyāruṇa²; in the sixteenth, Dhanañjaya; in the seventeenth, Kritañjaya; in the eighteenth, Riṇa; in the nineteenth, Bharadvāja; in the twentieth, Gautama; in the twenty-first, Uttama, also called Haryātmā; in the twenty-second, Veṇa, who is likewise named Rājaśravas; in the twenty-third, Somaśuṁ māpaṇa, also Triṇavindu; in the twenty-fourth, Rkṣa, the descendant of Bhṛgu, who is known also by the name Vālmiki; in the twenty-fifth, my father Śakti was the Vyāsa; I was the Vyāsa of the twenty-sixth Dvāpara and was succeeded by Jaratkāru; the Vyāsa of the twenty-eighth, who followed him, was Kṛṣṇa Dvaipāyana. These are the twenty-eight elder Vyāsas, by whom, in the preceding Dvāpara ages, the Veda has been divided into four. In the next Dvāpara, Drauṇi (the son of Drona) will be the Vyāsa, when my son, the Muni Kṛṣṇa Dvaipāyana, who is the actual Vyāsa, shall cease to be (in that character).³

The syllable Om is defined to be the eternal monosyllabic Brahma.⁴ The word Brahma is derived from the root Vṛ̥ha (to increase), because it is infinite (spirit) and because it is the cause by which the Vedas (and all things) are developed. Glory to Brahma, who is addressed by that mystic word, associated eternally with the triple universe⁵ and who is one with the four Vedas. Glory to Brahma, who, alike in the destruction and renovation of the world, is called the great and mysterious cause of the intellectual principle (Mahat); who is without limit in time or space and exempt from diminution or decay; in whom (as connected with the property of darkness) originates worldly illusion; and in whom resides the end of soul (fruits or liberation), through the properties of light and of activity (or goodness and foulness). He is the refuge of those who are versed in the Sāmkhya philosophy; of those who have acquired control over their thoughts and passions. He is the invisible, imperishable Brahma; varying in form invariable in substance; the chief principle, self-engendered; who is said to illuminate the caverns of the heart; who is indivisible, radiant, undecaying, multiform. To that supreme Brahma be forever adoration.

That form of Vāsudeva, who is the same with supreme spirit, which is Brahma and which, although diversified as threefold, is identical, is the lord, who is conceived by those that contemplate variety in creation to be distinct in all creatures. He, composed of the Rk, Sāma and Yajur Vedas, is at the same time their essence, as he is the soul of all embodied spirits. He, distinguished as consisting of the Vedas, creates the Vedas and divides them by many subdivisions into branches : he is the author of those branches : he is those aggregated branches; for he, the eternal lord, is the essence of true knowledge⁶.

NOTES

1. The text has, 'Hear from me an account of Vyāsas of the different Manvantaras' (यस्मिन् मन्त्रते ये ये व्यासाः); but this is inconsistent with what follows, in which the enumeration is confined to the Vaivasvata Manvantara.

2. This name occurs as that of the one of the kings of the solar dynasty and is included by Colebrooke amongst the persons of royal descent, who are mentioned as authors of hymns in the Rgveda. As. Res. VIII. 383.

3. A similar list of Vyāsas is given in the Kūrma and Vāyu Purāṇas. Many of the individuals appear as authors of different hymns and prayers in the Vedas; and it is very possible that the great portion, if not all of them, had a real existence, being the framers or teachers of the religion of the Hindus before a complete ritual was compiled.

4. We have already had occasion to explain the sanctity of this mono-syllable (see Bk. I. Ch. I n. 1), which ordinarily commences different portions of the Vedas and which, as the text describes it, is identified with the supreme, undefinable deity or Brahma. So in the Bhagavadgītā : ओमित्येकाक्षरं ब्रह्म व्याहरन् मामनुस्मरन्! 'Repeating Om, the monosyllable, which is Brahma and calling me to mind : ' which is not exactly the same idea that is conveyed by Schlegel's version; 'Mono-syllabum mysticum Om pronuntiando, numen adorans, mei memor;' where 'numen adorans', although it may be defended as necessary to the sense, is not expressed by the words of the text, nor compatible with Hindu notions. In one of the MSS. employed, the transcriber has evidently been afraid of desecrating this sacred monosyllable and has therefore altered the text, writing it धूवमेकाक्षरं ब्रह्म द्वापराहे व्यवस्थितं instead of धूवमेकाक्षरं ओमिल्लेकं व्यवस्थितं।

5. The daily prayers of the Brāhmaṇa commence with the formula. Om̄ bhūḥ, bhuvaḥ, svar : Om̄ earth, sky, heaven : these are the three mystical terms called Vyāhṛtis and are scarcely of less sanctity than the Praṇava itself. Their efficacy and the order of their repetition preceding the Gāyatrī, are fully detailed in Manu, II. 76-81. In the Mitākṣara they are directed to be twice repeated minutely, with Om̄ prefixed to each; Om̄ bhūḥ, Om̄ bhuvaḥ, Om̄ svar; the breath being suppressed by closing the lips and nostrils : ओं भूः ओं भुवः ओम् स्वरितित्रीन् वारान् मुखनासिकासंचारिण वायुत्रुन्धन् मनसा जपेत्।

6. The form or sensible type of Vāsudeva is here considered to be the monosyllable Om̄ and which is one with the three mystical words, Bhūḥ, Bhuvaḥ, Svar and with the Vedas : consequently the Vyāhṛtis and the Vedas are also forms of Vāsudeva, diversified as to their typical character, but essentially one and the same.

Parāśara said— The original Veda, in four parts, consisted of one hundred thousand stanzas; and from it sacrifice of ten kinds¹, the accomplisher of all desires, proceeded. In the twenty-eighth Dvāpara age my son Vyāsa separated the four portions of the Veda into four Vedas. In the same manner as the Vedas were arranged by him, as Vedavyāsa, so were they divided in former periods by all the preceding Vyāsas and by myself : and the branches into which they were subdivided by him were the same into which they had been distributed in every aggregate of the four ages. Know, Maitreya, the Vyāsa called Kṛṣṇa Dvaipāyana to be the deity Nārāyaṇa; for who else on their earth could have composed the Mahābhārata²? Into what portions the Vedas were arranged by my magnanimous son, in the Dvāpara age, you shall hear.

When Vyāsa was enjoined by Brahmā to arrange the Vedas in different books, he took four persons, well read in those works, as his disciples. He appointed Paila reader of the Rk³; Vaiśampāyana of the Yajuṣ; and Jaiminī of the Sāmaveda and Sumantu, who was conversant with the Atharvaveda, was also the disciple of the learned Vyāsa. He also took Sūta who was named Lomaharṣaṇa, as his pupil in historical and legendary traditions⁴.

There was but one Yajurveda; but dividing this into four parts, Vyāsa instituted the sacrificial rite that is administered by four kinds of priests : in which it was the duty of the Adhvaryu to recite prayers (Yajus) (or direct the ceremony); of the Hotri, to repeat the hymns (Rcas); of the Udgātri, to chant other hymns (Sāma); and of the Brāhmaṇa, to pronounce the formulae called Atharva. Then the Muni, having collected together the hymns called Rcas, compiled the Rgveda; with the prayers and directions termed Yajusas he formed the Yajurveda; with those called Sama, Sāmaveda; and with the Atharvas he composed the rules of all the ceremonies suited to kings and the function of the Brāhmaṇa agreeably to practice⁵.

This vast original tree of the Vedas, having been divided by him into four principal stems, soon branched out into an extensive forest. In the first place, Paila divided the Rgveda and gave the two Samhitās (or collections of hymns) to Indrapramati and to Bāskali. Bāskali⁶ subdivided his Samhitā into four, which he gave to his disciples Baudhya, Agnimāthara, Yajñavalkya and Parāśara; and they taught these secondary shoots from the primitive branch, Indrapramati imparted his Samhitā to his son Maṇḍukeya and it thence descended through successive generations, as well as disciples.⁷ Vedamitra, called also Śākalya, studied the same Samhitā, but he divided it into five Samhitā, which he distributed amongst many disciples, named severally Mudgala, Gosvalu, Vātsya, Śāliya and Siśira⁸, Śākapūrṇi made a different division of the original Samhitā into three portions and added a glossary (Nirukta), constituting a fourth⁹. The three Samhitās were given to his three pupils, Krauñca, Vaitālaki and Valāka; and a fourth, (hence named) Niruktakṛt, had the glossary¹⁰. In this way branch sprang from branch. Another Bāskali¹¹ composed three other Samhitās, which he taught to his disciples Kālāyani, Gārgya and Kathājava¹². These are they by whom the principal divisions of the R̄k have been promulgated¹³.

NOTES

1. According to the Gr̄hya portion of the Sāmaveda, there are five great sacrificial ceremonies; 1. Agnihotra, burnt-offerings or libations of clarified butter on sacred fire; 2. Darśapaurṇamāsa, sacrifices at new and full moon; 3. Cāturmasya, sacrifices every four months; 4. Paśuyajña or Aśvamedha, sacrifice of a horse or animal; and 5. Soma-yajña, offering and libations of the juice of the acid asclepias. These, again, are either Prākṛta, 'simple' or 'Vaikṛta, 'modified'; and being thus doubled, constitute ten.

2. The composition of the Mahābhārata is always ascribed to the Vyāsa named Kṛṣṇa Dvaipāyana, the contemporary of the events there described. The allusion in the text establishes the priority of the poem to the Viṣṇu Purāṇa.

3. Or rather, 'he took Paila as teacher'. The expression is, R̄gveda śrāvakam Pailam jagrāha (ऋग्वेदश्रावकं पैलं जग्राह). Śrāvaka means properly 'he who causes to hear', 'a lecturer', 'a preacher'; although, as in the case of its applicability to the laity of the Buddhist and Jainas, it denotes a disciple. The commentary however observes, that the text is sometimes read ऋग्वेदपाराणं 'one who had gone through the R̄gveda'. So in the preceding verse it is said, 'he took four persons, well read in the Vedas, as his disciples:' अथ शिष्यान् स जग्राह चतुरो वेदपाराणान् and again it is said, 'Sumantu, conversant with the Atharvaveda, was his disciple:' तथैवाथर्वेदवित्। सुमन्तुस्तस्य शिष्योऽभूत्॥ It is clear, therefore, that the Vedas were known, as distinct works, before Kṛṣṇa Dvaipāyana; and it is difficult to understand how he earned his title of arranger or Vyāsa; at any rate, in undertaking to give order to the prayers and hymns of which the Vedas consist, Paila and the others were rather his coadjutors than disciples; and it seems probably that the first establishment of a school, of which the Vyāsa was the head and the other persons named were the teachers.

4. The Itihāsa and Purāṇas; understanding by the former, legendary and traditional narratives. It is usually supposed that by the Itihāsa the Mahābhārata is especially meant; but although this poem is ascribed to Kṛṣṇa Dvaipāyana, the recitation of it is not attributed to his pupil, Roma or Lomaharṣaṇa; it was first narrated by Vaiśampāyana and after him by Sauti, the son of Lomaharṣaṇa.

5. From this account, which is repeated in the Vāyu Purāṇa, it appears that the original Veda was the Yajuṣ or in other words was a miscellaneous body of precepts, formulae, prayers and hymns, for sacrificial ceremonies; Yajuṣ being derived by the grammarians from Yaj (यज्), 'to worship'. The derivation of the Vāyu Purāṇa, however, is from Yuj., 'to join', 'to employ'; the formulae being those especially applied to sacrificial rites or set apart for that purpose from the general collection : यच्छिष्टं च यजुर्वेदे तेन यज्ञमथायुजत्। युजानः सयजुर्वेदे इति शास्त्रविनिश्चयः॥ again, प्रयुज्यते ह्यश्वेष्टस्तेन वा युज्यते तु सः। The commentator on the text however, citing the former of these passages from the Vāyu, reads it, यजनान्दि यजुर्वेदे इति शास्त्रस्य निश्चयः confining the derivation to Yaj, 'to worship'. The concluding passage, relating to the Atharvan, refers in regard to regal ceremonies, to those of expiation, Śānti. The function of the Brāhmaṇa (ब्रह्मण्व यथास्थिति) is not explained; but from the preceding specification of the four orders of priests who repeat at sacrifice portions of the several Vedas, it relates to the office of the one that is termed specifically the Brāhmaṇa; so the Vāyu has ब्रह्मत्वमकरोद्यजे वेदेनार्थर्वणेन तु। 'He constituted the function of the Brāhmaṇa at sacrifices with the Atharvaveda.'

6. Both in our text and in that of the Vāyu this name occurs both Bāskala and Bāskali. Colebrooke writes it Bāhkala and Bāhkati, As. Res., VIII. 374.

7. The Vāyu supplies the detail Maṇḍukeya or as one copy writes, Mārkanḍeya, taught the Saṁhitā of his son Satyaśvas; he to his son Satyahita; and he to his son Satyaśrī. The latter had three pupils, Śākalya, also called Devamitra (sic in MS.), Rathāntara and another Bāskali, called also Bharadvāja. The Vāyu has a legend of Śākalya's death, in consequence of his being defeated by Yājñavalkya in a disputation at a sacrifice celebrated by Janaka.

8. These names in the Vāyu are Mudgala, Golaka, Khāliya, Mātsya, Saiśireya.

9. The commentator, who is here followed by Colebrooke, states that he was a pupil of Indrapramati; but from the Vāyu it appears that Śākapūrṇi was another name of Rathāntara, the pupil of Satyaśrī, the author of the Saṁhitās and a Nirukta or glossary; whence Colebrooke supposes him the same with Yāska. As. Res. VIII, 375. It is highly probable that the text of the Vāyu may be made to correct that of the Viṣṇu in this place, which is inaccurate, notwithstanding the copies agree : they read, संहितात्रियं चक्रे शाकपूर्णरथेतरं निरुक्तमकरोत्तद्वच्चतुर्थं मुनिसत्तम्। Here Śākapūrṇi-atha-itarām is the necessary construction; but query if it should not be Śākapūrṇi Rathāntara. The parallel passage in the Vāyu is, प्रोवाच संहितास्तिसः शाकपूर्णिरथान्तरः। निरुक्तं च पुनश्चक्रे चतुर्थं द्विजसत्तमः। Now in describing the pupils of Satyaśrī, Rathāntara was named clearly enough शाकल्पः प्रथमस्तेषां तस्मादन्योरथान्तरः। बाष्टलिश्च भरद्वाज इति शाखाप्रवर्तक। In another passage it would seem to be implied that this Bāskali was the author of the Saṁhitās and Rathāntara of the Nirukta only : (Svayambhuva बाष्टलिश्च भरद्वाजस्तिसः प्रोवाच संहिताः। रथान्तरो निरुक्तं च पुनश्चक्रे चतुर्थकं।) However this may be, his being the author of the Nirukta identified him with Śākapūrṇi and makes it likely that the two names should come in juxtaposition in our text, as well as in the Vāyu. It must be admitted, however, that there are some rather inexplicable repetitions in the part of the Vāyu where this account occurs, although two copies agree in the reading. That a portion of the Vedas goes by the name of Rathāntara we have seen (Bk. I. Ch. V); but as far as is yet known, the name is confined to different prayers or hymns of the Uhya Gāna of the Sāmaveda. The text of the Viṣṇu also admits of a different explanation regarding the work of Śākapūrṇi and instead of a threefold division of the original, the passage may mean that he composed a third Saṁhitā. So Colebrooke says "the Viṣṇu Purāṇa omits the Śākhās of Aśvalāyana and Sāṅkyāyana and intimates that Śākapūrṇi gave the third varied edition from that of Indrapramati." The Vāyu, however, is clear in ascribing three Saṁhitās or Śākhās to Śākapūrṇi.

10. In the Vāyu the four pupils of Śākapūrṇi are called Kenava Dālaki, Śatavalāka and Naigama.

11. This Bāskali may either be, according to the commentator, the pupil of Paila, who, in addition to the four Saṁhitās previously noticed, compiled three others; or he may be another Bāskali, a fellow-pupil of Śākapūrṇi. The Vāyu makes him a disciple of Satyaśrī the fellow-pupil of Śākalya and Rathāntara and adds the name or title Bharadvāja.

12. In the Vāyu they are called Nandāyanīya, Pannagāri and Ārjjava.

13. Both the Viṣṇu and Vāyu Purāṇas omit two other principal divisions of the Rk, those of Aśvalāyana and Sāṅkyāyana or the Kausītakī. As Res. VIII. 375. There is no specification of the aggregate number of Saṁhitās of the Rk in our text or in the Vāyu; but they describe eighteen, including the Nirukta; or as Colebrooke states, sixteen (As. Res. VIII. 374); that is, omitting the two portions of the original as divided by Paila. The Kūrma Purāṇa states the number at twenty-one; but treatises on the study of the Vedas reduce the Śākhās of the Rk to five.

Parāśra continued— Of the tree of the Yajurveda there are twenty-seven branches, which Vaiśampāyana, the pupil of Vyāsa, compiled and taught to as many disciples.¹ Amongst these, Yājñavalkya, the son of Brahmarāta, was distinguished for piety and obedience to his preceptor. It had been formerly agreed by the Munis, that any one of them who, at a certain time, did not join an assembly held on mount Meru should incur the guilt of killing a Brāhmaṇa, within a period of seven nights.²

Vaiśampāyana alone failed to keep the appointment and consequently killed, by an accidental kick with his foot, the child of his sister. He then addressed his scholars and desired them to perform the penance expiatory of Brahmanicide on his behalf. Without any hesitation Yājñavalkya refused and said, "How shall I engage in penance with these miserable and inefficient Brāhmaṇas?" On which his Guru, being incensed, commanded him to relinquish all that he had learnt from him. "You speak contemptuously," he observed "of these young Brāhmaṇas, but of what use is a disciple who disobeys my commands?"

He then departed. The other scholars of Vaiśampāyana, transforming themselves to partridges (Tittiri), picked up the texts which he had disgorged and which from that circumstance were called Taittirīya;³ and the disciples were called the Caraka professors the Yajuṣ, from Caraṇa, 'going through' or 'performing' the expiatory rites enjoined by their master.⁴

Thus eulogised by Yājñavalkya, the sun, in the form of a horse, appeared to him and said,

"Demand what you desire." To which the sage, having prostrated himself before the lord of day, replied, "Give me a knowledge of those texts of the Yajuṣ with which even my preceptor is unacquainted." Accordingly the sun imparted to him the texts of the Yajuṣ called Ayātayāma (unstudied), which were unknown to Vaiśampāyana; and because these were revealed by the sun in the form of a horse, the Brāhmaṇas who study this portion of the Yajuṣ are called Vājis (horses). Fifteen branches of this school sprang from Kaṇva and other pupils of Yājñavalkya.⁵

NOTES

1. The Vāyu divides these into three classes, containing each nine and discriminated as northern, middle and eastern : उदीच्य मध्यदेशाश्च प्रच्याश्रैव पृथग्विधाः। Of these, the chiefs were severally Śyāmāyani, Āruṇi and Ānalavi or Ālambi. With some inconsistency, however, the same authority states that Vaiśampāyana composed and gave to his disciples eighty-six Samhitās.

2. The paralleled passages in the Vāyu rather implies that the agreement was to meet within seven nights : ततस्ते सगणा सर्वे वैशम्पायनवर्जिताः। प्रयुः सप्तरात्रेण यत्र सन्धिः कृतोऽभवत्।

3. Also called the black Yajuṣ. No notice of this legend, as Colebrooke observes (As. Res. VIII. 376), occurs in the Veda itself; and the term Taittirīya is more rationally accounted for in the Anukramaṇi or index of the black Yajuṣ. It is there said that Vaiśampāyana taught it to Yāska, who taught it to Taittiri, who also became a teacher; whence the term Taittirīya, for a grammatical rule explains it to mean, 'The Taittiriyas are those who read what was said or repeated by Tittiri.' तित्तिरिण प्रोक्तमधीयते। तैत्तिरीयाः॥ Pāṇini, 4.3.102. The legend, then, appears to be nothing more than a Paurāṇik invention, suggested by the equivocal sense of Tittiri, a proper name or a partridge. Much of the myths of the Hinuds, the obviously of that of the Greeks and Romans originates in this source. It was not confined, at least amongst the former, to the case that Creuzer specifies : "Telle ou telle expression cessa d'être comprise, et l'on inventa des mythes pour éclaircir ces malentendus;" but was wilfully perpetrated, even where the word was understood, when it afforded a favourable opportunity for a fable. It may be suspected in the present instance that the legend is posterior, not only to the Veda, but to the grammatical rule or it would have furnished Pāṇini with a different etymology.

4. This is another specimen of the sort of Paronomasia explained in the preceding note. The Carakas are the students of a Śākhā, so denominated from its teacher Caraka. (As. Res. VIII. 377). So, again, Pāṇini, 4.3.107 : 'The readers of that which is said by Caraka are Carakas.' चरकेन प्रोक्तं चरकाः। Caraka has no necessary connection with Cara, 'to go'. The Vāyu states they were also called Cātakas, from Caṭa (चट), 'to divide', because they shared amongst them their master's guilt. 'Those pupils of Vaiśampāyana were called Cātakas by whom the crime of Brahmanicide was shared; and Carakas from its departure;' वैशम्पायनशिष्यास्ते चरका समुदाहताः ब्रह्महत्यातुयैशीर्णा चरणाच्च चरका स्मृताः।

5. The Vāyu names the fifteen teachers of these schools, Kaṇva, Vaidheya, Śālin, Madhyandina, Sapeyin, Vidagdha, Uddālin, Tāmrāyani, Vātsya, Gālava, Śaiśiri, Āṭavya, Parṇa, Virana and Sampārayana, who were the founders of no fewer than 101 branches of the Vajasaneyi or white Yajuṣ. Colebrooke specifies several of these, as the Jābālas, Baudhāyanas, Tāpanīyas. As. Res. VIII. 376.

You shall now hear, Maitreya, how Jaiminī, the pupil of Vyāsa, divided the branches of the Sāmaveda. The son of Jaiminī was Sumantu and his son was Sukarman, who both studied the same Sarihitā under Jaiminī.¹ The latter composed the Sāhasra Samhitā (or compilation of a thousand hymns), which he taught to two disciples, Hiranyanābha, also named Kauśalya (or of Kośala) and Pausyini.² Fifteen disciples of the latter were the authors of as many Samhitās : they were called the northern chanters of the Sāman. As many more, also the disciples Hiranyanābha, were termed the eastern chanters of the Sāman, founding an equal number of schools. Lokākṣi, Kauthumi, Kuśidī and Lāngali were the pupils of Pausyin; and by them and their disciples many other branches were formed. While another scholar of Hiranyanābha, named Kr̥ti, taught twenty-four Samhitās to as many pupils; and by them, again, was the Sāmaveda divided into numerous branches.³

I will now give you an account of the Saṁhitās of the Atharvaveda. The illustrious Muni Sumantu taught this Veda to his pupil Kabandha, who made it twofold and communicated the two portions to Devadarśa and the Pathya. The disciples of Devadarśa were Maudga, Brahmabali, Śaulkāyani and Pippalāda. Pathya had three pupils, Jājali, Kaumudādi and Śaunaka; and by all these were separate branches instituted. Śaunaka having divided his Saṁhitā into two, gave one to Babhru and the other to Saindhavāyana; and from them sprang to schools, the Saindhavas and Munjakeśas.⁴ The principal subjects of difference in the Saṁhitās of the Atharveda are the five Kalpas or ceremonials : the Nakṣatra kalpa or rules for worshipping the planets; the Vaitāna Kalpa or rules for oblations, according to the Vedas generally; the Saṁhitā kalpa rules for sacrifices, according to different schools; the Aṅgiras Kalpa, incantations and prayers for the destruction of foes and the like; and the Śanti Kalpa or prayers for averting evil.⁵

Accomplished in the purpose of the Purāṇas, Vyāsa compiled a Paurāṇik Saṁhitā, consisting of historical and legendary traditions, prayers and hymns and sacred chronology.⁶ He had a distinguished disciple, Sūta, also termed Romaharṣaṇa and to him the great Muni communicated the Purāṇas. Sūta had six scholars, Sumati, Agnivarcas, Mitrayu, Śāṁśapāyana, Akṛtavraṇa, who is also called Kaśyapa and Sāvarṇi. The three last composed a fourth, called Romaharṣaṇika. The substance of which four Saṁhitās is collected into this (Viśnu) Purāṇa.

The first of all the Purāṇas is entitled the Brahma. Those who are acquainted with the Purāṇas enumerate eighteen or the Brahma, Padma, Vaiṣṇava, Śaiva, Bhāgavata, Nāradīya, Mārkaṇḍeya, Āgenya, Bhaviṣyat, Brahmavaivarta, Liṅga, Vārāh, Skanda, Vāmana, Kūrma, Matsya, Garuḍa, Brahmanḍa. The creation of the world and its successive reproductions, the genealogies of the patriarchs and kings, the periods of the Manus and the transactions of the royal dynasties, are narrated in all these Purāṇas.

This Purāṇa which I have repeated to you, Maitreya, is called the Vaiṣṇava and is next in the series to the Pādma; and in every part of it, in its narratives of primary and subsidiary creation, of families and of periods, the mighty Viṣṇu is declared in this Purāṇa.⁷

The four Vedas, the six Āṅgas (or subsidiary portions of the Vedas, viz., Śikṣā, rules of reciting the prayers, the accents and tones to be observed; Kalpa, ritual; Vyākaraṇa, grammar; Nirukta, glossaries comment; Chandas, metre and Jyotiṣa, (astronomy), with Mimāṃsā (theology), Nyāya (logic), Dharma (the institutes of law) and the Purāṇas, constitute the fourteen principal branches of knowledge or they are considered as eighteen, with the addition of these four; the Āyurveda, medical science (as taught by Dhanvantari); Dhanurvcda, the science of archery or arms, taught by Bhṛgu; Gāndharvaveda or the drama and the arts of music, dancing, of which the Muni Bharata, was the author; and the Arthsāstram or science of government, as laid down first by Brhaspati.

There are three kinds of Ṛṣis or inspired sages; royal Ṛṣis or princes who have adopted a life of devotion, as Viśvāmitra; divine Ṛṣis or sages who are demigods also, as Nārada; and Brāhmaṇa Ṛṣis or sage who are the sons of Brahmā or Brahmanas as Vasiṣṭha and others.⁸

I have thus described to you the branches of the Vedas and their subdivisions; the persons by whom they were made; and the reason why they were made (or the limited capacities of mankind). The same branches are instituted in the different Manvantaras. The primitive Veda, that of the progenitor of all things, is eternal; these branches are but its modifications (or Vikalpas).

I have thus related to you, Maitreya, the circumstances relating to the Vedas, which you desired to hear. Of what else do you wish to be informed⁹?

NOTES

1. The Vāyu makes Sukarman the grandson of Sumantu, his son being called Sunvat.

2. Some copies read Pauṣpini. The Vāyu agrees with our text, but alludes to a legend of Sukarman having first taught a thousand disciples, but they were all killed by Indra, for reading on an unlawful day or one when sacred study is prohibited.

3. The Vāyu specifies many more names than the Viṣṇu, but the list is rather confused. Amongst the descendants of those named in the text, Rāyānanīya (or Rāṇāyanīya), the son of Lokāksi, is the author of a Saṃhitā still extant; Saumitri his son was the author of three Saṃhitās; Parāśara, the son of Kauthumi, compiled and taught six Saṃhitās; and Sāligotra, a son of Lāngali, established also six schools. Kṛti was of royal descent : हिरण्यनाभस्य कृतिः शिष्य नृपात्मजः। he and Pausyini were the two most eminent teachers of the Sāma-veda.

4. According to the commentator, Muñjakeśa is another name for Babhru; but the Vāyu seems to consider him as the pupil of Saīndhava, but the text is corrupt : सैन्धवो मुञ्जके शाय (भिन्नो चास्य द्विधा पुनः).

5. The Vāyu has an enumeration of the verses contained in the different Vedas, but it is very indistinctly given in many respects, especially as regards the Yajuṣ. The Ṛk is said to comprise 8600 Ṛcās. The Yajuṣ, as originally compiled by Vyāsa, 12000 : of which the Vājasneyi contains 1900 Ṛcās and 7600 Brāhmaṇas; the Caraka portion contains 6026 stanzas and consequently the whole exceeds 12000 verses. The stanzas of the Sāman are said to be 8014; and those of the Atharvan 5980. Colebrooke states the verses of the whole Yajuṣ to be 1987; of the Śatapatha Brāhmaṇa of the same Veda 7624; and of the Atharvan 6015.

6. Or of stories (Ākhyānas) and minor stories or tales (Upākhyānas); of portions dedicated to some particular divinity, as the Śiva gītā, Bhagavadgītā; and accounts of the periods called Kalpas, as the Brahma kalpa, Vārāha kalpa, etc.

7. For remarks upon this enumeration see Introduction.

8. A similar enumeration is given in the Vāyu, with some additions. Ṛṣis is derived from Ṛṣ, 'to get to' or 'approach'. The Brahmarṣis, it is said, are descendants of the five patriarchs, who were the founders of races or gotras of Brahmanas or Kaśyapa, Vasiṣṭha, Aṅgiras, Atri and Bhṛigu. The Devarṣis are Nara and Nārāyaṇa, the sons of Dharmā; the Bālakhilyas, who sprung from Kratu; Kardama, the son of Pulaha; Kubera, the son of Pulastya; Acala, the son of Pratyūṣa; Nārada and Parvata, the sons of Kaśyapa. Rājarṣis are Iksvāku and other princes. The Brahmarṣis dwell in the sphere of Bhramā; the Devarṣis in the region of the gods; and the Rājarṣis in the heaven of Indra.

9. No notice is taken here of a curious legend which is given in the Mahābhārata, in the Gadā Parvan. It is there said, that during a great drought the Brāhmaṇas, engrossed by the care of subsistence, neglected the study of the sacred books and the Vedas were lost. The Ṛṣi Sārasvata alone, being fed with fish by his mother Sarasvatī, the personified river so named, kept up his studies and preserved the Hindu scriptures. At the end of the famine the Brāhmaṇas repaired to him to be taught and sixty thousand disciples again acquired a knowledge of the Vedas from Sārasvata. This legend appears to indicate the revival or more probably the introduction, of the Hindu ritual by the race of Brāhmaṇas or the people called Sārasvata; for, according to the Hindu geographers, it was the name of a nation, as it still is the appellation of a class of Brāhmaṇas who chiefly inhabit the Punjab. (As. Res. VII. 219, 338, 341). The Sārasvata Brāhmaṇas are met with in many parts of India and are usually fair-complexioned, tall and handsome men. They are classed in the Jāti mālās or popular lists of castes, amongst the five Gauḍa Brāhmaṇas and are divided into ten tribes; they are said also to be especially the Purohitas or family priests of the Kṣatriya or military castes;

(see the Jāti mālā, printed in Price's Hindi Selections, II. 280); circumstances in harmony with the purport of the legend and confirmatory of the Sārasvatas of the Punjab having been prominent agents in the establishment of the Hindu religion in India. The holy land of the Hindus or the primary seat, perhaps, of Brahmanism, has for one of its boundaries the Sarasvatī river : see Bk. II. Ch. IV. n. 7.

Maitreya said— You have indeed related to me, most excellent Brāhmaṇa, all that I asked of you; but I am desirous to hear one thing which you have not touched on. This universe, composed of seven zones, with its seven sub-terrestrial regions and seven spheres - this whole egg of Brahmā—is every where swarming with living creatures, large or small, with smaller and smallest and larger and largest; so that there is not the eighth part of an inch in which they do not abound. Now all these are captives in the chains of acts and at the end of their existence become slaves to the power of Yama, by whom they are sentenced to painful punishments. Released from these inflictions, they are again born in the condition of gods, men or the like; and thus living beings, as the Śāstras apprise us, perpetually revolve. Now the question I have to ask and which you are so well able to answer, is, by what acts men may free themselves from subjection to Yama?

Bhīṣma said to the prince, "There formerly came on a visit to me a friend of mine, a Brāhmaṇa, from the Kaliṅga country, who told me that he had once proposed this question to a holy Muni, who retained the recollection of his former births, by whom what was and what will be, was accurately told. Being importuned by me, who placed implicit faith in his words, to repeat what that pious personage had imparted to him, he at last communicated it to me; and what he related I have never met with elsewhere.

I was appointed by Brahmā, who is reverenced by all the immortals, to restrain mankind and regulate the consequences of good and evil in the universe. But he who obeys Hari, as his spiritual guide, is here independent of me; for Viṣṇu is of power to govern and control me.'

As gold is one substance still, however diversified as bracelets, tiaras or earrings, so Hari is one and the same, although modified in the forms of gods, animals and man. As the drops of water, raised by wind from the earth, sink into the earth again when the wind subsides, so the varieties of gods, men and animals, which have been detached by the agitation of the qualities, are reunited, when that disturbance ceases, with the eternal. He who through holy knowledge diligently adores the lotus foot of that Hari, who is reverenced by the gods, is released from all the bonds of sin; and you must avoid him as you would avoid fire fed with oil."

Bhīṣma said— So also, Nakula, I have faithfully communicated to you all I heard from my pious friend, when he came from his country of Kaliṅga to visit me. I have thus explained to you, as was fitting, that there is no protection in the ocean of the world except Viśnu; and that the servants and ministers of Yama, the king of the dead himself and his tortures, are all unavailing against one who places his reliance on that divinity."

I have thus, resumed Parāśara, related to you what you wished to hear and what was said by the son of Vivasvat.³ What else do you wish to hear?

NOTES

1. Nakula is one of the Pāñdava princes and consequently grand nephew, not grandson, of Bhīṣma; he is great grandson of Parāśara; and it is rather an anomaly for the latter to cite a conversation in which Nakula formerly bore a part.

2. Or Yama and Niyama. The duties intended by these terms are variously enumerated. The commentator on the text specifies under the first head, absence of violence or cruelty to other beings (Ahimsā), honesty (Asteya), truth (Satya), chastity (Brahmacarya) and disinterestedness or non acceptance of gifts (Aparigraha). Under Niyama are comprehended purity (Śauca), contentment (Santoṣa), devotion (Tapas), study of the Vedas (Svādhyāya) and adoration of the supreme (Iśvara-praṇidhāna).

3. Or Vaivasvata. This section is called the Yama-gītā.

Aurva replied, "He who pleases Viṣṇu obtains all terrestrial enjoyments; heaven and a place in heaven; and what is best of all, final liberation : whatever he wishes and to whatever extent, whether much or little, he receives it, when Acyuta is content with him. In what manner his favour is to be secured, that also I will, oh king, impart to you, agreeably to your desire. The supreme Viṣṇu is propitiated by a man who observes the institutions of caste order and purificatory practices; no other path is the way to please him. He who offers sacrifices, sacrifices to him; he who murmurs prayer, prays to him; he who injures living creatures, injures him; for Hari is all beings. Janārdana therefore is propitiated by him who is attentive to established observances and follows the duties prescribed for his caste. The Brāhmaṇa, the Kṣatriya, the Vaiśya and the Śūdra, who attends to the rules enjoined by his caste, best worships Viṣṇu. Keśava is most pleased with him who does good to others' who never utters abuse, calumny or untruth; who never covets another's wife or another's wealth and who bears ill-will towards none; who neither beats nor slays any animate or inanimate thing; who is ever diligent in the service of the gods, of the Brāhmaṇas and of his spiritual preceptor; who is always desirous of the welfare of all creatures, of his children and of his own soul; in whose pure heart no pleasure is derived from the imperfections of love and hatred. The man, oh monarch, who conforms to the duties enjoined by scriptural authority for every caste and condition of life, is he who best worships Viṣṇu: there is no other mode."

To which Aurva answered and said, "Attentively listen to the duties which I shall describe as those severally of the Brāhmaṇa, the Kṣatriya, the Vaiśya and the Śūdra. The Brāhmaṇa should make gifts, should worship the gods with sacrifices, should be assiduous in studying the Vedas, should perform ablutions and libations with water and should preserve the sacred flame. For the sake of subsistence he may offer sacrifice on behalf of others and may instruct them in the Śāstras; and he may accept presents of a liberal description in a becoming manner (or from respectable persons and at an appropriate season). He must ever seek to promote the good of others and do evil unto none; for the best riches of a Brāhmaṇa are universal benevolence. He should look upon the jewels of another person as if they were pebbles; and should, at proper periods, procreate offspring by his wife. These are the duties of a Brāhmaṇa.

The guardianship of the earth is indeed his especial province; by the discharge of this duty a king attains his objects and realises a share of the merit of all sacrificial rites. A Brāhmaṇa may follow the occupations of a Kṣatriya or a Vaiśya; the Kṣatriya may adopt those of the Vaiśya and the Vaiśya those of the Kṣatriya; but these two last should never descend to the functions of the Śūdra, if it be possible to avoid them⁴; and if that be not possible, they must at least shun the functions of the mixed castes. I will now, Rājā, relate to you the duties of the several Āśramas or conditions of life."

NOTES

1. Sagara, as we shall see, was a king of the solar race. Aurva was a sage, the grandson of Bhṛgu. When the sons of king Kṛtavīrya persecuted and slew the children of Bhṛgu, to recover the wealth which their father and lavished upon them, they destroyed even the children in the womb. One of the women of the race of Bhṛgu, in order to preserve her embryo, secreted it in her thigh (Uru), whence the child on his birth was named Aurva; from his wrath proceeded a flame, that threatened to destroy the world; but at the persuasion of his ancestors he cast it into the ocean, where it abode with the face of a horse. Aurva was afterwards religious preceptor to Sagara and bestowed upon him the Āgneyāstram or fiery weapon, with which he conquered the tribes of barbarians, who had invaded his patrimonial possessions. Mahābh. Ādi Parvan, Dāna Dharma Purāṇa, Hari Vaṁśa.

2. Most of the Purāṇas, especially the Kūrma, Padma, Vāmana, Agni and Garuḍa, contain chapters or sections more or less in detail upon the moral and ceremonial duties of the Hindus; and a considerable portion of the Mahābhārata, especially in the Mokṣa Dharma Parvan, is devoted to the same subject. No other Paurāṇik work, however, contains a series of chapters exactly analogous to those which follow and which contain a compendious and systematic description of the Ācāras or personal and social obligations of the Hindus. The tenor of the whole is conformable to the institutes of Manu and many passages are the same.

3. The Pākayajña or sacrifice in which food is offered, implies either the worship of the Viśvadevas, the rites of hospitality or occasional oblations, on building a house, the birth of a child or any occasion of rejoicing. It is to be understood, however, that this injunction intends his performing these ceremonies through the agency of a Brāhmaṇa, as a Śūdra cannot repeat the mantras or prayers that accompany them; and it might be a question how far he might be present for he ought not even to hear such prayers repeated. The performance of funeral rites involves some personal share and the Śūdra must present the cakes, but it must be done without mantras; as the Mitakṣara; 'This rite (the presentation of cakes) must be performed by the Śūdras, without formulae on the twelfth day'. शुद्राणामयेतत्कर्म कर्तव्यं द्वादशेद्वि। The Vāyu Purāṇa, directs the performance of the five great sacrifices by Śūdras, only omitting the mantras : शुद्रेणापि प्रकर्तव्या पंचैते मन्त्रवर्जिताः। It may be suspected that the Purāṇas relaxed in some degree from the original rigour; for it may be inferred that the great ceremonies were altogether withheld from Śūdras in the time of Manu, who declares that none have any right or part (Adhikāra) in his code except those who perform rites with mantras or the three regenerate castes (II. 16); and denounces as heinous sins teaching the Vedas to Śūdras, performing sacrifices for them or taking gifts from them X 109, 110, 111. Yājñavalkya, however, allows them to perform five great rites with the Namaskāra or the simple salutation. नमस्कारेण मन्त्रेण पञ्च यज्ञात्रहापयेत्। which Gautama confirms. Some restrict the sense of mantra, also, to the prayers of the Vedas and allow the Śūdras to use those of the Purāṇas; as Śūlapāṇi : न वेदेष्वधिकावो शूद्रस्य विद्यते पुराणेष्वधिकारः। and the Titthi Tattva is cited in the Śūdra Kamalākāra as allowing them any mantras except those of the Vedas : वैदिकेतरमन्त्रपाठे शूद्रस्याधिकारः। performance of religious rites. In the morning Sandhyā he is first to salute the sun; in the evening, fire and then to address his preceptor with respect. He must stand when his master is standing; move when he is walking and sit beneath him when he is seated; he must never sit, nor walk, nor stand when his teacher does the reverse. When desired by him, let him read the Veda attentively, placed before his preceptor; and let him eat the food he has collected as alms, when permitted by his teacher.¹ Let him bathe in water which has first been used for his preceptor's ablutions; and every morning bring fuel and water and whatsoever else may be required.

4. This last clause reconciles what would else appear to be an incompatibility with Manu, who permits the Vaiśya in time of distress to descend to the servile acts of a Śūdra, X. 98.

"When the scriptural studies appropriate to the student have been completed and he has received dismissal from his Guru, let the regenerate man enter into the order of the householder; and taking unto himself, with lawful ceremonies, house, wife and wealth, discharge to the best of his ability the duties of his station;² satisfying the manes with funeral cakes; the gods with oblations; guests with hospitality; the sages with holy study; the progenitors of mankind with progeny, the spirits with the residue of oblations; and all the world with words of truth.³ A householder secures heaven by the faithful discharge of these obligations. There are those who subsist upon alms and lead an erratic life of self-denial, at the end of the term during which they have kept house. They wander over the world to see the earth and perform their ablutions, with rites enjoined by the Vedas at sacred shrines : houseless and without food and resting for the night at the dwelling at which they arrive in the evening. The householder is to them a constant refuge and parent : it is his duty to give them a welcome and to address them with kindness; and to provide them, whenever they come to his house, with a bed, a seat and food. A guest disappointed by a householder, who turns away from his door, transfers to the latter all his own misdeeds and bears away his religious merit.⁴

When the householder, after performing the acts incumbent on his condition, arrives at the decline of life, let him consign his wife to the care of his sons and go himself to the forests.⁵ Let him there subsist upon leaves, roots and fruit and suffer his hair and beard to grow and braid the former upon his brows; and sleep upon the ground : his dress must be made of skin or of Kāśa or Kuśa grasses; and he must bathe thrice a day; and he must offer oblations to the gods to fire and treat all that come to him with hospitality : he must beg alms and present food to all creatures; he must anoint himself with such unguents as the woods afford; and in his devotional exercises he must be durant of heat and cold. The sage who diligently follows these rules and leads the life of the hermit (or Vānaprastha), consumes, like fire, all imperfections and conquers for himself the mansions of eternity.

NOTES

1. These directions are the same as those prescribed by Manu though not precisely in the same words. II.175.

2. So Manu, III. 4.

3. The great obligations or as Jones terms them, sacraments, the Mahāyajñas or great sacrifices, are according to Manu, but five; Brahmayajña, sacred study, Pitṛyajña, libations to the manes; Devayajña, burnt-offerings to the gods; Baliyajña, offerings to all creatures; and Nṛyañja, hospitality. III. 70, 71. The Prajāpatiyajña or propagation of offspring and Satyayajña, observance of truth, are apparently later additions.

4. This is also the doctrine of Manu, III. 100.

5. Manu, VI. 3.

6. Manu, VI. 33.

7. The text use the term Dvijāti, which designates a man of the three first castes. The commentator cites various authorities to prove that its sense should be Brāhmaṇa only, who alone is permitted to enter the fourth order, गतिस्तुर्याश्रमे नास्ति बाहुजोरुजयोः क्वचित्। तुर्याश्रमे गतिः प्रोक्ता मुखजानां स्वयमभुवेति दत्तात्रेयोर्कृः। ब्राह्मणः प्रव्रजेदगृहादिति यम हवत्तर्वौधायनवचनाच्च॥ 'Entrance into the fourth order is never for the Kṣatriya and Vaiśya. Entrance into the fourth order is for Brāhmaṇas, according to Svayambhu. So says Dattātreya : "Let the Brāhmaṇa proceed from his dwelling is also the expression of Yama, Samvartta and Baudhāyana.'" But this is not the general understanding of the law, nor was it originally so restricted apparently. Manu does not so limit it.

Sagara then addressed Aurva and said, "You have described to me, venerable Brāhmaṇa, the duties of the four orders and of the four castes. I am now desirous to hear from you the religious institutes which men should individually observe, whether they be invariable, occasional or voluntary. Describe these to me; for all things are known, chief of Bhṛgu's race, unto you."

To this Aurva replied, "I will communicate to you, oh king, that which you have asked, the invariable and occasional rites which men should perform : do you attend.

"When a son is born, let his father perform for him the ceremonies proper on the birth of a child and all other initiatory rites, as well as a Śrāddha, which is a source of prosperity. Let him feed a couple of Brāhmaṇas, seated with their faces to the east; and according to his means offer sacrifices to the gods and progenitors. Let him present to the manes¹ balls of meat mixed with curds, barley and jujubes, with the part of his hand sacred to the gods or with that sacred to Prajāpati.² Let a Brāhmaṇa perform such a Śrāddha, with all its offerings and circumambulations, on every occasion of good fortune.³

Next, upon the tenth day after birth, let the father give a name to his child; the first term of which shall be the appellation of a god, the second of a man, a Śarman or Varman; the former being the appropriate designation of a Brāhmaṇa, the latter of a warrior; while Gupta and Dāsa are best fitted for the names of Vaiśyas and Śūdras.⁴ A name should not be void of meaning; it should not be indecent, nor absurd, nor ill-omened, nor fearful; it should consist of an even number of syllables; it should not be too long nor too short, nor too full of long vowels; but contain a due proportion of short vowels and be easily articulated. After this and the succeeding initiatory rites,⁵ the purified youth is to acquire religious knowledge, in the mode that has been described, in the dwelling of his spiritual guide.

He must not marry a girl who is vicious or unhealthy, of low origin or labouring under disease; one who has been ill brought up; one who talks improperly; one who inherits some malady from father or mother ; one who has a beard or who is of a masculine appearance; one who speaks thick or thin or croaks like a raven; one who keeps her eyes shut or has the eyes very prominent; one who has hairy legs or thick-ankles or one who has dimples in her cheeks when she laughs.⁸ Let not a wise and prudent man marry a girl of such a description : nor let a considerate man wed a girl of a harsh skin; or one with white nails; or one with red eyes; or with very fat hands and feet; one who is a dwarf or who is very tall; or one whose eyebrows meet or whose teeth are fat apart and resemble tusks. Let a householder marry a maiden who is in kin at least five degrees remote from his mother and seven from his father, with the ceremonies enjoined by law.⁹

The householder who espouses a female connected with him by similarity of religious and civil obligations and along with her discharges the duties of his condition, derives from such a wife great benefits."

NOTES

1. To the Nāndimukhas. The Pitrs or progenitors, are so termed here from words occurring in the prayer used on the occasion of a festive Śrāddha. As. Res. VII. 270.

2. With the Daiva tīrtha, the tips of the fingers; or with the Prājāpatya tīrtha, the part of the hand at the root of the little finger. Manu, II. 58, 59. The second is called by Manu the Kāya tīrtha, from Ka, a synonym of Prajāpati.

3. The Śrāddha is commonly an obsequial or funeral sacrifice, but it implies offerings to the progenitors of an individual and of mankind and always forms part of a religious ceremony on an occasion of rejoicing or an accession of prosperity, this being termed the Abhyudaya or Vṛddhi Śrāddha. As. Res. VII. 270.

4. So Manu, II. 30, 31, 32. The examples given in the comment are, Somaśarman, Indravarman, Candragupta and Śivadāsa, respectively appropriate appellations of men of the four castes.

5. Or Saṁskāras; initiatory ceremonies, purificatory of the individual at various stages.

6. Or the vow or pledge he has taken, that he will follow for life the observances of the student or ascetic; both of which are enumerated in the Nirṇaya Sindhu, as acts prohibited in the Kali age; a man is not to continue a student or Brahmacāri, i.e. a coenobite, for life; nor is he to become a mendicant without previously passing through the order of householder. In practice, however, the prohibition is not infrequently disregarded.

7. By this is to be understood, according to the commentator, merely a young girl, but at the same time one not immature; for otherwise, he observes, a man of thirty, by which age he completes his sacred studies, would espouse a girl of but ten years age. According to Manu, however, the period of religious study does not terminate until thirty-six; and in the East a girl of twelve would be marriageable. The text of Yājñavalkya has merely the word Yavīyasi, 'a very young woman.' It is worthy of remark here, that neither that text, nor the text of Manu, nor the interpretation of our text, authorises the present practice of the nuptials of children. The obligation imposed upon a man of a life of perfect continence until he is more than thirty is singularly Malthusian.

8. For the credit of Hindu taste it is to be noticed that the commentator observes the hemstitch in which this last clause occurs is not found in all copies of the text.

9. See Manu, III. 5.

10. These different modes of marriage are described by Manu, III. 27.

Aurva replied to him thus : "Listen, Prince, to an account of those perpetual observances, by adhering to which both worlds are subdued. Those who are called Sādhus (saints) are they who are free from all defects; and the term Sat means the same or Sādhu : those practices or observances (Ācāras) which they follow are therefore called Sadācāras, 'the institution or observances of the pious.'¹ The seven Ṛsis, the Manus, the patriarchs, are they who have enjoined and who have practised these observances.

Let the wise man awake in the Muhūrtta of Brahmā (or in the third Muhūrtta, about two hours before sunrise) and with a composed mind meditate on two of the objects of life (virtue and wealth) and on topics not incompatible with them. Let him also think upon desire, as not conflicting with the other two; and thus contemplate with equal indifference the three ends of life, for the purpose of counteracting the unseen consequence of good or evil acts. Let him avoid wealth and desire, if they give uneasiness to virtue; and abstain from virtuous or religious acts if they involve misery or are censured by the world.² Having risen, he must offer adoration to the sun; and then, in the south-east quarter, at the distance of a bow-shot or more or any where remote from the village, void the impurities of nature. The water that remains after washing his feet he must throw away into the courtyard of the house.

A wise man will never void urine on his own shadow, nor on the shadow of a tree, nor on a cow nor against the sun, nor on fire, nor against the wind, nor on his Guru, nor men of the three first castes; nor will he pass either excrement in a ploughed field or pasturage or in the company of men or on a high road or in rivers and the like, which are holy or on the bank of a stream or in a place where bodies are burnt; or any where quickly. By day let him void them with his face to the north and by night with his face to the south, when he is not in trouble. Let him perform these actions in silence and without delay; covering his head with a cloth and the ground with grass. Let him not take, for the purposes of cleanliness, earth from an ant-hill, nor a rat-hole, nor from water, nor from the residue of what has been so used, nor soil that has been employed to plaster a cottage, nor such as has been thrown up by insects or turned over by the plough. All such kinds of earth let him avoid, as means of purification.

One handful is sufficient after voiding urine; three after passing ordure: then ten handfuls are to be rubbed over the left hand and seven over both hands. Let him then rinse his mouth with water that is pure, neither fetid, nor frothy, nor full of bubbles; and again use earth to cleanse his feet, washing them well with water. He is to drink water then three times and twice wash his face with it; and next touch with it his head, the cavities of the eyes, ears and nostrils, the forehead, the navel and the heart.³ Having finally washed his mouth, a man is to clean and dress his hair and to decorate his person, before a glass, with unguents, garlands and perfumes.

He is then according to the custom of his caste, to acquire wealth, for the sake of subsistence; and with a lively faith worship the gods. Sacrifices with the acid juice, those with clarified butter and those with offerings of food, are comprehended in wealth; wherefore let men exert themselves to acquire wealth for these purposes.⁴

As preparatory to all established rites of devotion the household should bathe in the water of a river, a pond, a natural channel or a mountain torrent; or he may bathe upon dry ground, with water drawn from a well or taken from a river or other source, where there is any objection to bathing on the spot.⁵ When bathed and clad in clean clothes, let him devoutly offer libations to the gods, sages and progenitors, with the parts of the hand severally sacred to each.

He must then present, with the part of the hand sacred to manes, water to his paternal grandfather and great-grandfather, to his maternal grandfather, great-grandfather and his father; and at pleasure to his own mother and his mother's mother and grandmother, to the wife of his preceptor, to his preceptor, his maternal uncle and other relations,⁶ to a dear friend and to the king.

who are my kindred and not my kindred and who were my relations in a former life, all who desire libations from me, receive satisfaction from this water! May this water and sesamum, presented by me, relieve the hunger and thirst of all who are suffering from those inflections, wheresoever they may be!⁷ Presentations of water, given in the manner, oh king, which I have described, yield gratification to all the world : and the sinless man, who in the sincerity of faith pours out these voluntary libations, obtains the merit that results from affording nutriment to all creatures.

The residue of the oblation let him offer to the earth, to water and to rain, in a pitcher at hand; and to Dhātā and Vidhātā at the doors of his house and in the middle of it to Brahmā.

Having uttered this prayer, let the devout believer cast the food upon the ground, for the nourishment of all kinds of beings; for the householder is hence the supporter of them all. Let him scatter food upon the ground for dogs, outcasts, birds and all fallen and degraded persons.

"The householder is then to remain at eventide in his courtyard as long as it takes to milk a cow,¹⁴ or longer if he pleases, to await the arrival of a guest. Should such a one arrive, he is to be received with a hospitable welcome; a seat is to be offered to him and his feet are to be washed and food is to be given him with liberality and he is to be civilly and kindly spoken to; and when he departs, to be sent away by his host with friendly wishes. A householder should ever pay attention to a guest who is not an inhabitant of the same village, but who comes from another place and whose name and lineage are unknown. He who feeds himself and neglects the poor and friendless stranger in want of hospitality, goes to hell. Let a householder who has a knowledge of Brahmā reverence a guest, without inquiring his studies, his school, his practices or his race.¹⁵

O king, "A householder should also at the perpetual Śrāddha entertain another Brāhmaṇa, who is of his own country, whose family and observances are known and who performs the five sacramental rites. He is likewise to present to a Brāhmaṇa learned in the Vedas four handfuls of food, set apart with the exclamation Hanta; and he is to give to a mendicant religious student three handfuls of rice or according to his pleasure when he has ample means. These, with the addition of the mendicant before described, are to be considered as guests; and he who treats these four descriptions of persons with hospitality acquires himself of the debt due to his fellow men. The guest who departs disappointed from any house and proceeds elsewhere, transfers his sins to the owner of that mansion and takes away with him such a householder's merits. Brahmā, Prajāpati, Indra, fire, the Vasus, the sun, are present in the person of a guest and partake of the food that is given to him. Let a man therefore be assiduous in discharging the duties of hospitality; for he who eats his food without bestowing any upon a guest feeds only upon iniquity.

"In the next place the householder must provide food for a married damsel, remaining in her father's dwelling; for any one who is ill; for a pregnant woman; for the aged and the infants of his house; and then he may eat himself. He who eats while these are yet unfed is guilty of sin in this life and when he dies is condemned in hell to feed upon phlegm. So he who eats without performing ablutions is fed in hell with filth; and he who repeats not his prayers, with matter and blood: he who eats unconsecrated food, with urine; and he who eats before the children and the rest are fed is stuffed in Tartarus with ordure.

Hear therefore, oh kings of kings, how a householder should feed, so that in eating no sin may be incurred, that invariable health and increased vigour may be secured and all evils and hostile machinations may be averted. Let the householder, having bathed and offered libations to the gods and manes and decorated his hand with jewels, proceed to take his meal, after having repeated the introductory prayers and offered oblations with fire and having given food to guests, to Brāhmaṇas, to his elders and to his family.

wholesome, boiled with clean water, procured from no vile person nor by improper means, nor improperly cooked.

He must not eat in an unfit place or out of season, nor in an incommodious attitude; nor must he first cast any of his meal into the fire. Let his food be made only with suitable texts; let it be good of its kind; and it must not be stale, except in the case of fruit or meat;¹⁶ nor must it be of dry vegetable substances, other than jujubes¹⁷ or preparations of molasses; but never must a man eat of that of which the juices have been extracted.¹⁸ Nor must a man eat so as to leave no residue of his meal, except in the case of flour, cakes, honey, water, curds and butter.

fluids, then partakes of solid food and finishes with fluids again, will ever be strong and healthy. In this manner let him feed without fault, silent and contented with his food; taking, without uttering a word, to the extent of five handfuls, for the nutriment of the vital principle.

Having eaten sufficiently, the householder is then to rinse his mouth, with his face turned towards the east or the north; and having again sipped water, he is to wash his hands from the wrist downwards. With a pleased and tranquil spirit he is then to take a seat and call to memory his tutelary deity; and then he is thus to pray : "May fire, excited by air, convert this food into the earthly elements of this frame and in the space afforded by the ethereal atmosphere cause it to digest and yield me satisfaction! May this food, in its assimilation, contribute to the vigour of the earth, water, fire and air of my body and afford unmixed gratification!

For verily Viṣṇu is the eater and the food and the nutriment : the through this belief may that which I have eaten be digested.'

"Having repeated this prayer, the householder should rub his stomach with his hand and without indolence perform such rites as confer repose, passing the day in such amusements as are authorised by holy writings and are not incompatible with the practices of the righteous; until the Sandhyā, when he must engage in pious meditation. At the Sandhyā at the close of the day he must perform the usual rites before the sun has quite set; and in the morning he must perform them before the stars have disappeared.¹⁹ The morning and evening rites must never be neglected, except at seasons of impurity, anxiety, sickness or alarm. He who is preceded by the sun in rising or sleeps when the sun is setting, unless it proceed from illness and the like, incurs guilt which requires atonement; and therefore let a man rise before the sun in the morning and sleep not until after he has set. They who sinfully omit both the morning and the evening service go after death to the hell of darkness.

In the evening, then, having again dressed food, let the wife of the householder, in order to obtain the fruit of the Vaiśvadeva rite, give food, without prayers, to outcasts and unclean spirits. Let the householder himself, according to his means, again show hospitality to any guest who may arrive, welcoming him with the salutation of evening, water for his feet, a seat, a supper and a bed. The sin of want of hospitality to a guest who comes after sunset is eight times greater than that of turning away one who arrives by day. A man should therefore most especially show respect to one who comes to him in the evening for shelter, as the attentions that gratify him will give pleasure to all the gods. Let the householder, then, according to his ability, afford a guest food, potherbs, water, a bed, a mat or, if he can do no more, ground on which to lie.

"After eating his evening meal and having washed his feet, the householder is to go to rest. His bed is to be entire and made of wood: it is not to be scanty, nor cracked, nor uneven, nor dirty, nor infested by insects, nor without a bedding: and he is to sleep with his head either to the east or to the south; any other position is unhealthy. In due season a man should approach his wife, when a fortunate asterism prevails, in an auspicious moment and on even nights, if she is not unbathed, sick, unwell, averse, angry, pregnant, hungry or over-fed. He should be also free from similar imperfections, should be neatly attired and adorned and animated by tenderness and affection. There are certain days on which unguents, flesh and women are unlawful, as the eighth and fourteenth lunar days, new moon and full moon,²⁰ and the entrance of the sun into a new sign. On these occasions the wise will restrain their appetites and occupy themselves in the worship of the gods, as enjoined by holy writ, in meditation and in prayer; and he who behaves differently will fall into a hell where ordure will be his food. Let not a man stimulate his desires by medicines, nor gratify them with unnatural objects or in public or holy places. Let him not think incontinently of another's wife, much less address her to that end; for such a man will be born in future life as a creeping insect. He who commits adultery is punished both here and hereafter; for his days in this world are cut short and when dead he falls into hell. Thus considering, let a man approach his own wife in the proper season or even at other times."

NOTES

1. Jones renders Ācāra (आचार), 'the immemorial customs of good men' (Manu, II. 6); following the explanation of Kullūka Bhaṭṭa, which is much the same as that of our text : कम्बलवल्ककाद्याचरअरूपः साधूनां धार्मिकानां। 'Ācāra means the use of blankets or bark, for dress. Sādhus are pious or just men.' Ācāras are, in fact, all ceremonial and purificatory observances or practices, not expiatory, which are enjoined either by the Vedas or the codes of law.

2. That is, he may omit prescribed rites, if they are attended with difficulty or danger; he may forego ablutions, if they disagree with his health; and he may omit pilgrimage to holy shrines, if the way to them is infested by robbers. Again, it is enjoined in certain ceremonies to eat meat or drink wine; but these practices are generally reprehended by pious persons and a man may therefore disregard the injunction.

3. Many of these directions are given by Manu, IV, 45.

4. That is, wealth is essential to the performance of religious rites and it is also the consequence of performing them. A householder should therefore diligently celebrate them, that he may acquire property and thus be enabled to continue to sacrifice. According to Gautama there are seven kinds of each of the three sorts of sacrificial rites particularised in the text or those in which the Soma juice, oiled butter or food are presented. Of the latter, according to Manu, there are four varieties, the offering of food to the Vaiśvadevas, to spirits, to deceased ancestors and to guests. II, 86. The seven of Gautama are, offerings to progenitors on certain eighth days of the fortnight, at the full and change, at Śrāddha generally and to the manes on the full moon of four different months or Śrāvaṇa, Agraḥāyaṇa, Caitra and Āśvin.

5. A person may perform his ablutions in his own house, if the weather or occupation prevent his going to the water. If he be sick, he may use warm water; and if bathing be altogether injurious, he may perform the mantra snāna or repeat the prayers used at ablution, without the actual bath.

6. The whole series is thus given by Colebrooke; As. Res. V. 367. Triple libations of tīla (sesamum seeds) and water are to be given to the father, paternal grandfather and great-grandfather; to the mother, maternal grand-father, great-grandfather and great great-grandfather; and single libations are to be offered to the paternal and maternal grandmother and great grandmother, to the paternal uncle, brother, son, grandson, daughter's son, son-in-law, maternal uncle, sister's son, father's sister's son, mother's sister and other relatives. With the exception of those, however, offered to his own immediate ancestors, which are obligatory, these libations are optional and are rarely made.

7. The first part of this prayer is from the Sāmaṇeva and is given by Colebrooke. As. Res. V. 367.

8. The rite is not addressed to Brahmā specially, but he is to be invoked to preside over the oblations offered to the gods and sages subsequently particularised.

9. Kāsyapa, the son of Kaśyapa, is Āditya or the sun. Anumati is the personified moon, wanting a digit of full. The objects and order of the ceremony here succinctly described differ from those of which Colebrooke gives an account (As. Res. VII. 236) and from the form of oblations given by Ward (Account of the Hindus, II. 447); but, as observed by Colebrooke, "oblations are made with such ceremonies and in such form, as are adapted to the religious rite which is intended to be subsequently performed." As. Res. VII. 237.

10. See also Manu, III. 84 and the As. Res. VII. 275.

11. Or this ceremony may be practised instead of the preceding.

12. This prayer is said by Colebrooke to be taken from the Purāṇas (As. Res. VII. 275): he translates the last clause, 'May they who gave neither food, nor means of obtaining it.' In our text the phrase is येषां—नैवात्रसिद्धिर्नत्यापमस्ति। which the commentator explains by येषामत्रं नास्ति येषां च सत्यत्रे नात्र सिद्धिः पाकसाधनं गत्सीयर्थः; understanding Annasiddhi to mean 'means of dressing food', Pāka sādhana. The following passages of the prayer are evidently peculiar to the Viśnu Purāṇa.

13. Either fourteen classes of Bhūtas or spirits or the same number of living beings or eight species of divine, one of human and five of animal creatures.

14. This, according to the commentator, is equal to the fourth part of Ghaṭikā which, considering the latter synonymous with Muhūrtta or one-thirtieth of the day and night, would be twelve minutes.

15. These precepts and those which follow, are of the same tenor as those given by Manu on the subject of hospitality (III, 99), but more detailed.

16. By stale, as applied to meat, is intended in this place probably meat which has been previously dressed as part of an offering to the gods or manes :

meat which is dressed in the first instance for an individual being prohibited; as by Yājñavalkya : वृथामांसं तज्जर्येत्! 'Let him avoid flesh killed in vain;' or that which is not the residue of an offering to the gods, देवादच्चावशिष्टं यन्नभवति। So also Manu, V.7.

17. By dried vegetables, etc. (शूष्कशाकादिकं) is to be understood unboiled vegetables or potherbs dressed without being sprinkled with water : जलोपसेकं विना पक्तं। Instead of बदरिकेभ्यः 'jujubes', the reading is sometimes हरितकेभ्यः 'myrobalans' : the other term, गुडपक्वेभ्यः, is explained 'sweet-meats'. The construction here, however, is somewhat obscure.

18. As oil-cake or the sediment of any thing after expression.

19. So Manu, II. 101 and IV. 93.

20. So Manu, IV. 128.

A wise man will not form a friendship nor walk in the same path with one who is disesteemed, who is a sinner or a drunkard, who has many enemies or who is lousy, with a harlot or her gallant, with a pauper or a liar, with a prodigal, a slanderer or a knave. Let not a man bathe against the strength of a rapid stream, nor enter a house on fire, not climb to the top of a tree; nor (in company) clean his teeth or blow his nose, nor gape without covering his mouth, nor clear his throat, nor cough, nor laugh loudly, nor emit wind with noise, nor bite his nails, not cut grass, nor scratch the ground,¹ nor put his beard into his mouth, nor crumble a clod of clay; nor look his mouth while he is naked:⁵ he must not upon the chief planetary bodies when he is wash his mouth or perform any sacred rite, unclean. Let him not express disgust at a corpse, for the odour of a dead body is the produce of the moon. Let a decent man ever avoid by night the place where four roads meet, the village tree, the grove adjacent to the place where bodies are burnt and a loose woman.

Let him not receive the protection of the unworthy, nor attach himself to the dishonest.

Let him not approach a beast of prey; and let him not tarry long when he has risen from sleep. Let him not lie in bed when he is awake, nor encounter fatigue when it is time to rest. A prudent man will avoid, even at a distance, animals with tusks and horns; and he will shun exposure to frost, to wind and to sunshine. A man must neither bathe, nor sleep, nor rinse with his waistband unfastened: and be must not offer oblations to fire, nor sacrifice to the gods, nor wash his mouth, nor salute a Brāhmaṇa, nor utter a prayer, with only one garment on.

Let him never associate with immoral persons: half an instant is the limit for the intercourse of the righteous with them. A wise man will never engage in a dispute with either his superiors or inferiors: controversy and marriage are to be permitted only between equals. Let not a prudent man enter into contention: let him avoid unprofitable enmity. A small loss may be endured; but he should shun the wealth that is acquired by hostility.

He must never pass round a temple upon his left hand, nor perform the ceremony of circumambulating any venerable object in the reverse direction. A man who is attentive to the duties of his station will not go forth from his house without saluting the chaplets, flowers, gems, clarified butter and venerable persons in it. At proper seasons he will salute respectfully the places where four roads meet, when engaged in offering oblations with fire. Let him liberally relieve the virtuous who are poor and reverence those who are learned in the Vedas. He who is a worshipper of the gods and sages, who gives cakes and water to the manes and who obtains the regions after death. He who speaks wisely, moderately and kindly, goes to those worlds which are the inexhaustible sources of happiness. He who is intelligent, modest, devout and who reverences wisdom, his superiors and the aged, goes to heaven.

Let therefore a wise man ever speak the truth when it is agreeable and when the truth would inflict pain let him hold his peace. Let him not utter that which, though acceptable, would be detrimental; for it were better to speak that which would be salutary, although it should give exceeding offence.⁸ A considerate man will always cultivate, in act, thought and speech, that which is good for living beings, both in this world and in the next."⁹ Aurva continued—"The bathing of a father without disrobing is enjoined when a son is born; and he is to celebrate the ceremony proper for the event, which is the Śrāddha offered upon joyous occasions.¹ With composed mind and thinking on nothing else, the Brāhmaṇa should offer worship to both the gods and progenitors and should respectfully circumambulate, keeping Brāhmaṇas on his left hand and give them food. Standing with his face to the east, he should present, with the parts of the hand sacred to the gods and to Prajāpati, balls of food,² with curds, unbruised grain and jujubes; and should perform, on every accession of good fortune, the rite by which the class of progenitors termed Nāndīmukha is propitiated.³ A householder should diligently worship the Pitṛs so named, at the marriage of a son or daughter, on entering a new dwelling, on giving a name to a child, on performing his tonsure and other purificatory ceremonies, at the binding of the mother's hair during gestation or on first seeing the face of a son or the like. The Śrāddha on such occasions, however, has been briefly alluded to. Hear now, oh king the rules for the performance of obsequial rites.

"Having washed the corpse with holy water, decorated it with garlands and burnt it without the village, the kinsmen, having bathed with their clothes on, are to stand with their faces to the south and offer libations to the deceased, addressing him by name and adding, "wherever you may be."⁴ They then return, along with the cattle coming from pasture, to the village; and upon the appearance of the stars retire to rest, sleeping on mats spread upon the earth. Every day (while the mourning lasts) a cake or ball of food⁵ is to be placed on the ground, as an offering to the deceased; and rice, without, flesh, is to be daily eaten. Brāhmaṇas are to be fed for as many days as the mourner pleases, for the soul of the defunct derives satisfaction accordingly as his relatives are content with their entertainment. On the first day or the third or seventh or ninth (after the death of a person), his kinsmen should change their raiment and bathe out of doors and offer a libation of water, with (tila) sesamum-seeds.

On the fourth day⁶ the ashes and bones should be collected; after which the body of one connected with the deceased by offerings of funeral cakes may be touched (by an indifferent person), without thereby incurring impurity; and those who are related only by presentation of water are qualified for any occupation.⁷ The former class of relatives may use beds, but they must still refrain from unguents and flowers and must observe continence, after the ashes and bones have been collected (until the mourning is over).

When the deceased is a child or one who is abroad or who has been degraded or a spiritual preceptor, the period of uncleanness is but brief and the ceremonies with fire and water are discretionary. The food of a family in which a kinsman is deceased is not to be partaken of for ten days⁸; and during that period, gifts, acceptance, sacrifice and sacred study are suspended.

The term of impurity for a Brāhmaṇa is ten days; for a Kṣatriya, twelve; for a Vaiśya, half a month; and a whole month for a Śūdra.⁹ On the first day after uncleanness ceases, the nearest relation of the deceased should feed Brāhmaṇas at his pleasure, but in uneven numbers and offer to the deceased a ball of rice upon holy grass placed near the residue of the food that has been eaten. After the guests have been fed, the mourner, according to his caste, is to touch water, a weapon, a goad or a staff, as he is purified by such contact. He may then resume the duties prescribed for his caste and follow the avocation ordinarily pursued by its members.

"The Śrāddha enjoined for an individual is to be repeated on the day of his death (in each month for a year),¹⁰ but without the prayers and rites performed on the first occasion and without offerings to the Viśvadevas. A single ball of food is to be offered to the deceased, as the purification of one person and Brāhmaṇas are to be fed. The Brāhmaṇas are to be asked by the sacrificer if they are satisfied; and upon their assent, the prayer, 'May this ever satisfy such a one (the deceased) is to be recited.

"This is the Śrāddha called Ekoddīṣṭa, which is to be performed monthly to the end of a twelve month from the death of a person; at the expiration of which the ceremony called Sapindāna is to be observed. The practices of this rite are the same as those of the monthly obsequies, but a lustration is to be made with four vessels of water, perfumes and sesamum: one of these vessels is considered as dedicated to the deceased, the other three to the progenitors in general; and the contents of the former are to be transferred to the other three, by which the deceased becomes included in the class of ancestors, to whom worship is to be addressed with all the ceremonies of the Śrāddha.

The persons who are competent to perform the obsequies of relations connected by the offering of the cake are the son, grandson, great grandson, a kinsman of the deceased, the descendants of a brother or the posterity of one allied by funeral offerings. In absence of all these, the ceremony may be instituted by those related by presentations of water only or those connected by offerings of cakes or water to maternal ancestors. Should both families in the male line be extinct, the last obsequies may be performed by women or by the associates of the deceased in religious or social institutions or by any one who becomes possessed of the property of a deceased kinsman.

Obsequial rites are of three descriptions, initiative, intermediate and subsequent. The first are those which are observed after the burning of the corpse until the touching of water, weapons (or until the cessation of uncleanness). The intermediate ceremonies are the Śrāddhas called Ekoddiṣṭa, which are offered every month: and the subsequent rites are those which follow the Sapiṇḍikaraṇa, when the deceased is admitted amongst the ancestors of his race; and the ceremonies are thenceforth general or ancestral. The first set of rites (as essential) are to be performed by the kindred of the father or mother, whether connected by the offering of the cake or of water, by the associates of the deceased or by the prince who inherits his property.

The first and the last rites are both to be performed by sons and other relations and by daughter's sons and their sons; and so are the sacrifices on the day of the person's death. The last class or ancestral rites, are to be performed annually, with the same ceremonies as are enjoined for the monthly obsequies; and they may be also pertained by females. As the ancestral rights are therefore most universal, I will describe to you, oh king, at what seasons and in what manner, they should be celebrated."

NOTES

1. The offerings of the Hindus to the Pitṛs partake of the character of those of the Romans to the lares and manes, but bear a more conspicuous part in their ritual. They are said indeed by Manu (III. 203), in words repeated in the Vāyu and Matsya Purāṇas and Hari Vaṁśa, to be of more moment than the worship of the gods : देवकार्यादपि सदा पितॄकार्यं विशिष्टते। These ceremonies are not to be regarded as merely obsequial; for independently of the rites addressed to a recently deceased relative and in connection with him to remote ancestors and to the progenitors of all beings, which are of a strictly obsequial or funereal description, offerings to deceased ancestors and the Pitṛs in general, form an essential ceremony on a great variety of festive and domestic occasions. The Nirṇaya Sindhu, in a passage referred to by Colebrooke (As. Res. VII.) specifies the following Śrāddhas : 1. The Nitya or perpetual; daily offerings to ancestors in general; 2. The Naimittika or occasional; as the Ekoddiṣṭa or obsequial offerings on account of a kinsman recently deceased; 3. The Kāmya, voluntary; performed for the accomplishment of a special design (अभिप्रत्यसिद्धये); 4. The Vṛddhi; performed on occasions of rejoicing or prosperity; 5. The Sapiṇḍana; offerings to all individual and to general ancestors; 6. The Pārvāṇa Śrāddha; offerings to the manes on certain lunar days called Parvas or day of full moon and new moon and the eighth and fourteenth days of the lunar fortnight; 7. The Gosthi; for the advantage of a number of learned persons or of an assembly of Brāhmaṇas, invited for the purpose; 8. The Śuddhi; one performed to purify a person from some defilement; an expiatory Śrāddha; 9. The Karmāṅga; one forming part of the initiatory ceremonies or Saṅskāras, observed at conception, birth, tonsure; 10. The Daiva; to which the gods are invited; 11. The Yātrā Śrāddha; held by a person going a journey; and 12. The Puṣṭi Śrāddha; one performed to promote health and wealth. Of these, the four which are considered the most solemn are the rite performed for a parent or near relative, lately deceased; that which is performed for kindred collectively; that observed on certain lunar days; and that celebrated on occasions of rejoicing : अन्न पार्वणैकोदिष्ट वृद्धिसप्तिहौकरणात्मकं चतुर्विधनेव मुख्यं। Nirṇaya Sindhu, p. 271.

2. Manu directs the balls to be made from the remainder of the clarified butter constituting the previous oblation to the gods. III. 215. Kullūka Bhaṭṭa explains, however, the oblation to consist partly of Anna (अन्न) food or boiled rice. The latter is the article of which the balls chiefly consist. Yājñīavalkya directs them to be made of rice and sesamum-seeds. The Vāyu Purāṇa adds to these two ingredients, honey and butter : but various kinds of fruit, of pulse and of grain and water, frankincense, sugar and milk, are also mixed up in the Piṇḍas. Their size also differs; and according to Āṅgiras, as quoted by Hemādri in the Śrāddha Mayūkha, they may be of the dimension of the fruit of the jujube or of the hogplum, of the fruit of the Bel or of the wood-apple or of a fowl's egg. Some authorities direct Piṇḍas of a different size for different Śrāddha; prescribing them no larger than the wood-apple at the first or pure funereal ceremony and as big as a cocoa-nut at the monthly and annual Śrāddha. In practice the Piṇḍa is usually of such a magnitude that it may be conveniently held by the hand.

3. We have here the authority of the text for classing the Nāndimukhas amongst the Pitṛs (see Bk. III. Ch. X): the verse is, नान्दोमुखः पितॄणः येन आदेन पार्थिवः प्रीयते ततु कर्तव्यं पुरुषैः सर्ववृद्धिषु॥ and the same Gaṇa or class is presently again named : नान्दी मुखं पितॄणं पूज्येत् प्रथते गृहै॥ The Mantra of the Vṛddhi or festival Śrāddha is also said, in the Nirṇaya Sindhu, to be नाणोमुख्येभ्यः पितॄभ्यः स्वाहा॥ According to the authorities, however, which are cited in that work, there seems to be some uncertainty about the character of the Nāndimukhas; and they are addressed both as Pitṛs and gods : being in the former case either the ancestors prior to the great grandfather, ancestors collectively or a certain class of them; and in the latter, being identified with the Viśvadevas or a class of them called also Urddhavaktra. The term Nāndimukha is also applied to the rite itself or to the Vṛddhi Śrāddha and to one addressed to maternal ancestors. Nirṇaya Sindhu, p. 268.

4. "An oblation of water must be next presented from the joined palm of the hand, naming; the deceased and the family from which he sprang and saying, 'May this oblation reach you.' As. Res. VII. 244. The text has, यत्र यत्र स्थितायैतदमुकायेति वादिनः।

5. The proper period of mourning is ten days, on each of which offerings of cakes and libations of water, are to be made to the deceased, augmenting the number of cakes each day, so that on the last day ten cakes are presented. When the period is shorter, the same number of ten cakes must be distributed amongst the several days or they may be presented on one day. Nirṇaya Sindhu, p. 429.

6. It should be, more correctly, on that day on which the mourning ceases or as previously mentioned, the first, third, seventh or ninth ; but the authorities vary and besides these, the second and fourth days and certain days of the fortnight or month, are specified. Nirṇaya Sindhu, p. 432.

7. They are no longer unclean. The Sapindas or those connected by offerings of cakes to common ancestors, extend to seven degrees, ascending or descending. The Samānodakas or those similarly connected by presentations of water, to fourteen degrees.

8. That is, a mere guest or stranger is not to partake of it. The food directed to be given to Brāhmaṇas is given in general only to the relatives of the deceased, who are already unclean. In this respect our text and the modern practice seem to differ from the primitive system, as described by Manu, III. 187. The eleventh or twelfth day is the term on which the Śrāddha which crowns the whole of the funeral rites is to be performed and when Brāhmaṇas are to be invited. Nirṇaya Sindhu, p. 437.

9. The number of Piṇḍas, however, is for each case the same or ten, Nirṇaya Sindhu, p. 429.

10. So Manu, III. 251. It may be doubted if the monthly Śrāddha was part of the ancient system, although Kullūka Bhaṭṭa supposes it to be referred to (v. 248) and supplies the fancied omission of the text.

11. Pūrva, 'first'; Madhyama, 'middle;' and Uttara, 'last.'

It is not easy for a man to effect his object, who is desirous of worshipping the Pitṛs or the gods on a day of new moon when the stars are those of Dhaniṣṭhā, Purūvabhadrapada or Śatābhīṣā. Hear also an account of another class of Śrāddhas, which afford especial contentment to progenitors, as explained by Sanatkumāra, the son of Brahmā, to the magnanimous Purūrvavas, when full of faith and devotion to the Pitṛs he inquired how he might please them. The third lunar day of the month Viśākhā (April, May) and the ninth of Kārtika (October, November), in the light fortnight; the thirteenth of Nabha (July, August) and the fifteenth of Māgha (January, February), in the dark fortnight; are called by ancient teachers the anniversaries of the first day of a Yuga or age (Yugādya) and are esteemed most sacred. On these days, water mixed with sesamun-seeds should be regularly presented to the progenitors of mankind; as well as on every solar and lunar eclipse; on the eighth lunations of the dark fortnights of Agraḥāyaṇa, Māgha and Phālguna (December–February); on the two days commencing the solstices, when the nights and days alternately begin to diminish; on those days which are the anniversaries of the beginning of the Manvantaras; when the sun is in the path of the goat; and on all occurrences of meteoric phenomena. A Śrāddha at these seasons contents the Pitṛs for a thousand years : such is the secret which they have imparted.

The fifteenth day of the dark half of the month Māgha, when united with the conjunction of the asterism over which Varuṇa presides (Śatābhīṣā), is a season of no little sanctity, when offerings are especially graceful to the progenitors. Food and water presented by men who are of respectable families, when the asterism Dhaniṣṭha is combined with the day of new moon, content the Pitṛs for ten thousand years; while they repose for a whole age when satisfied by offerings made on the day of new moon when Ārdrā is the lunar mansion.

"He who, after having offered food and libations to the Pitṛs, bathes in the Ganges, Sutlej, Vipāśā (Beyah), Sarasvatī or the Gomatī at Naimiṣa, expiates all his sins. The Pitṛs also say, "After having received satisfaction for a twelve month, we shall further derive gratification by libations offered by our descendants at some place of pilgrimage, at the end of the dark fortnight of Māgha.' The songs of the Pitṛs confer purity of heart, integrity of wealth, prosperous seasons, perfect rites and devout faith; all that men can desire. Hear the verses that constitute those songs, by listening to which all those advantages will be secured, oh prince, by you. 'That enlightened individual who begrudges not his wealth, but presents us with cakes, shall be born in a distinguished family. Prosperous and affluent shall that man ever be, who in honour of us gives to the Brāhmaṇas. if he is wealthy, jewels, clothes, land, conveyances, wealth or any valuable presents; or who, with faith and humility, entertains them with food, according to his means, at proper seasons. If he cannot afford to give them dressed food, he must, in proportion to his ability, present them with unboiled grain or such gifts, however trifling, as he can bestow. Should he be utterly unable even to do this, he must give to some eminent Brāhmaṇa, bowing at the same time before him, sesamum-seeds adhering to the tips of his fingers and sprinkle water to us, from the palms of his hands, upon the ground; or he must gather, as he may, fodder for a day and give it to a cow; by which he will, if firm in faith, yield us satisfaction. If nothing of this kind is practicable, he must go to a forest and lift up his arms to the sun and other regents of the spheres and say aloud—

च्छाद्वोपयोग्यं स्वपितृत्रोऽस्मि।

तुष्ण्यन्तु भक्त्या पितरो मध्यैते।

कृतो भुजौ वर्त्मनि मारुतस्य॥ ३०॥

'I have no money, nor property, nor grain, nor anything whatever fit for an ancestral offering. Bowing therefore to my ancestors, I hope the progenitors will be satisfied with these arms tossed up in the air in devotion.'

These are the words of the Pitṛs themselves; and he who endeavours, with such means as he may possess, to fulfil their wishes, performs the ancestral rite called a Śrāddha.'

NOTES

1. We may here take the opportunity of inquiring who are meant by the Pitṛs; and generally speaking, they may be called a race of divine beings, inhabiting celestial regions of their own and receiving into their society the spirits of those mortals for whom the rite of fellowship in obsequial cakes with them, the Sapindikarana, has been duly performed. The Pitṛs collectively therefore, include a man's ancestors; but the principal members of this order of beings are of a different origin. The Vāyu, Matsya and Padma Purāṇas and Hari Varīṣa, profess to give an account of the original Pitṛs. The account is much the same and for the most part in the same words, in all. They agree in distinguishing the Pitṛs into seven classes; three of which are without form (अमूर्त्यः) or composed of intellectual, not elementary substance and assuming what forms they please; and four are corporal (समूर्त्यः). When they come to the enumeration of the particular classes they somewhat differ and the accounts in all the works are singularly imperfect. According to a legend given by the Vāyu and the Hari Varīṣa, the first Pitṛs were the sons of the gods. The gods having offended Brahmā, by neglecting to worship him, were cursed by him to become fools; but upon their repentance he directed them to apply to their sons for instruction. Being taught accordingly the rites of expiation and penance by their sons. They addressed them as fathers; whence the son of the gods were the first Pitṛs. ते पुत्रानब्रुवन् प्रीता लब्धसंज्ञा दिवौकसः। यूद्य वै पिरोऽस्माकं यैर्बद्यं प्रतिबोधितः॥ So the Matsysa has मन्वन्तरेषु जायन्ते पितरो देवसूनवः। 'The Pitṛs are born in the Manvantaras as the sons of the gods.' The Hari Varīṣa makes the sons assume the character of fathers, addressing them, 'Depart, children.' गम्यतां पुत्रकाश्चति पुत्रैरुक्ताः। Again; the Vāyu Purāṇa declares the seven orders of Pitṛs to have been originally the first gods, the Vairājas, whom Brahmā, with the eye of Yoga, beheld in the eternal spheres and who are the gods of the gods :लोका सान्तानिका नाम यत्र तिष्ठन्ति भास्वरा:। ते वैराजा इति ख्याता देवानां

दिवि देवताः। आदि देवा इति ख्याताः। तेषां सप्त समाख्याता गणास्ते लोकपूजिताः। अमूर्त्यस्त्रयस्तेषां चत्वारस्तु समूर्त्यः॥ Again; in the same work we have the incorporeal Pitṛs called Vairājas, from being the Prajāpati Viraja; अमूर्त्यः पितृगणाः पुत्रास्ते वै प्रजापते:। विरजस्य द्विजाः श्रेष्ठा वैराजा इति विश्रुताः॥ The Matsya agrees with this latter statement and adds that the gods worship them; अमूर्त्यः पितृगणा विराजस्य प्रजापते:। यजन्ति यान् देवगणा वैराजा इति विश्रुताः। The Hari Varnśa has the same statement, but more precisely distinguishes the Vairājas as one class only of the incorporeal Pitṛs. The commentator states the same, calling the three incorporeal Pitṛs, Vairājas, Agniśvāttas and Varhiṣads; and the four corporeal orders, Sukālas, Āngiratas, Susvadhas and Somapās. The Vairājas are described as the fathers of Menā, the mother of Umā. Their abode is variously termed the Sāntānika, Sanātana and Soma loka. As the posterity of Viraja, they are the Somasads of Manu. The other classes of Pitṛs the three Purāṇas agree with Manu in representing as the sons of the patriarchs and in general assign to them the same offices and posterity. They are the following :

Agniśvāttas—sons of Marīci and Pitṛs of the gods (Manu-Matsya, Padma) : living in Soma-loka and parents of Achchodā (Matsya, Padma, Hari Varnśa). The Vāyu makes them residents of Virāja-loka, sons of Pulastya, Pitṛs of the demigods and demons and parents of Pīvarī; omitting the next order of Pitṛs, to whom these circumstances more accurately refer. The commentator on the Hari Varnśa derives the name from Agniśu (अग्निः), 'in or by oblations to fire.' and Āttā (आत्मः), 'obtained,' 'invoked.'

Varhiṣads—sons of Atri and Pitṛs of the demons (Manu) : sons of Pulastya. Pitṛs of the demons, residents in Vaibhrāja, fathers of Pīvarī (Matsya, Padma, Hari V).

These three are the formless or incorporeal Pitṛs.

Somapās—descendants of Bhṛgu or sons of Kavi by Svadhā, the daughter of Agni; and Pitṛs of the Brāhmaṇas (Manu and Vāyu Purāṇa). The Padma calls them Uṣmapās. The Hari Varnśa calls the Somapās to whom it ascribes the same descent as the Vāyu, the Pitṛs of the Śūdras; and the Sukālas the Pitṛs of the Brāhmaṇas.

Haviṣmantas—in the solar sphere, sons of Āngiratas and Pitṛs of the Kṣatriyas (Manu, Vāyu, Matsya, Padma, Hari Varnśa).

Ājyapās—sons of Kardama, Pitṛs of the Vaisyas Kāmaduhaloka (Manu); but the law giver calls them the sons of Pulastya. The Pitṛs of the Vaiśyas are called Kāvyas in the Nandi Upapurāṇa; and in the Hari Varnśa and its comment they are termed Susvadhas, sons of Kardama, descended from Pulaha.

Sukālins—sons of Vasiṣṭha and Pitṛs of the Śūdras (Manu and Vāyu Purāṇa). They are not mentioned in the Padma. The Matsya inserts the name and descent, but specifies them as amongst the incorporeal Pitṛs : अमूर्त्यमत्तः पितृस वशिष्ठस्य सुकालिनः। नामा ते मानसा सर्वे ते धर्मसूर्त्यः॥ It may be suspected that the passage is corrupt. The Hari Varnśa makes the Sukālas sons of Vasiṣṭha, the Pitṛs of the Brāhmaṇas; and gives the title of Somapās to the Pitṛs of the Śūdras. In general this work follows the Vāyu; but with omissions and transpositions, as if it had carelessly mutilated its original.

Besides these Pitṛs or progenitors, other heavenly beings are sometimes made to adopt a similar character; thus Manu says, "the wise call our fathers Vasus; our paternal grandfathers, Rudras; our paternal great grandfathers, Ādityas; agreeably to a text of the Vedas;" that is, these divine beings are to be mediated upon along with and as not distinct from, progenitors. Hemādri quotes the Nandi Upapurāṇa for a different practice and directs Viṣṇu to be identified with the father, Brahmā with the grandfather and Śiva with the great grandfather. This, however, is Śaivya innovation. The Vaiṣṇavas direct Aniruddha to be regarded as one's-self and Pradyumna, Sankarsana and Vāsudeva as the three ancestors. Again, they are identified with Varuṇa, Prājāpatya and Agni; or again with months, seasons and years. Nirṇaya Sindhu, p. 284. It may be doubted how far any of these correctly represent the original notions inculcated by the texts of the Vedas, from which, in the most essential particulars, they are derived.

2. When the Yogatāra or principal star seen, is the chief star or stars of these asterisms or lunar mansions respectively, see the table given by Colebrooke. As. Res. IX. P. 346. The first three named in the text are stars in Scorpio, Libra and Arcturus; the second three are stars in Cancer, Gemini and Orion; and the third are stars in the Dolphin, Pegasus and Aquarius.

He who having eaten himself in a Śrāddha and fed Brāhmaṇas and appointed them to their sacred offices, is guilty of incontinence, thereby sentences his progenitors to shameful suffering. In the first place, the Brāhmaṇas before described are to be invited; but those holy men who come to the house without an invitation are also to be entertained. The guests are to be reverendly received with water for their feet and the like; and the entertainer, holding holy grass in his hand, is to place them, after they have rinsed their mouths, upon seats. An uneven number of Brāhmaṇas is to be invited in sacrifices to the manes; an even or uneven number in those presented to the gods; or one only on each occasion.⁶

Let him feed the Brāhmaṇas who are appropriated to the gods and to maternal ancestors, with their faces to the north; and those set apart for the paternal ancestors and ancestors in general, with their faces to the east. Some say that the viands of the Śrāddha should be kept distinct for these two sets of ancestors, but others maintain that they are to be fed with the same food, at the same time.

Having spread Kuśa grass for seats and offered libations according to rule, let the sensible man invoke the deities, with the concurrence of the Brāhmaṇas who are present.⁸ Let the man who is acquainted with the ritual offer a libation to the gods with water and barley, having presented to them flowers, perfumes and incense. Let him offer the same to the Pitṛs, placed upon his left; and with the consent of the Brāhmaṇas, having first provided seats of Kuśa grass doubled, let him invoke with the usual prayers the manes to the ceremony, offering a libation, on his left hand, of water and sesamum. He will then, with the permission of the Brāhmaṇas, give food to any guest who arrives at the time or who is desirous of victuals or who is passing along the road; for holy saints and ascetics, benefactors of mankind, are traversing this earth, disguised in various shapes.⁹ On this account let a prudent man welcome a person who arrives at such a season; for inattention to a guest frustrates the consequences of an ancestral offering.

Next addressing the oblation to Soma, the lord of the progenitors; and giving the third to Vaivasvata. He is then to place a very little of the residue of the oblation in the dishes of the Brāhmaṇas; and next, presenting them with choice viands, well dressed and seasoned and abundant, he is to request them civilly to partake of it at their pleasure. The Brāhmaṇas are to eat of such food I attentively, in silence, with cheerful countenances and at their ease. The sacrificer is to give it to them, not churlishly, nor hurriedly, but with devout faith.

With the part of his hand sacred to the manes he must offer sesamum-seeds and water from his joined palms; and with the same part of his hand he must present cakes to his maternal ancestors. He should in lonely places, naturally beautiful and by the side of sacred streams, diligently make presents (to the manes and the Brāhmaṇas).¹² Upon Kuśa grass the tips of which are pointed to the south and lying near the fragments of the meant, let the householder present the first ball of food, consecrated with flowers and incense, to his father; the second to his grandfather; and the third to his great grandfather; and let him satisfy those who are contented with the wipings of his hand, by wiping it with the roots of Kuśa grass.¹³

After presenting balls of food to his maternal ancestors in the same manner, accompanied by perfumes and incense, he is to give to the principal Brāhmaṇas water to rinse their mouths; and then, with attention and piety, he is to give the Brāhmaṇas gifts, according to his power, soliciting their benedictions, accompanied with the exclamation 'Svādhā'!¹⁴ Having made presents to the Brāhmaṇas, he is to address himself to the gods, saying, 'May they who are the Viśvadevas be pleased with this oblation!' Having thus said and the blessings to be solicited having been granted by the Brāhmaṇas, he is to dismiss first the paternal ancestors and then the gods. The order is the same with the maternal ancestors and the gods in respect to food, donation and dismissal, commencing with the washing of the feet, until the dismissing of the gods and Brāhmaṇas, the ceremonies are to be performed first for paternal ancestors and then for ancestors on the mother's side. Let him dismiss the Brāhmaṇas with kindly speeches and profound respect and attend upon them at the end of the Śrāddha, until permitted by them to return. The wise man will then perform the invariable worship of the Viśvadevas and take his own meal along with his friends, his kinsmen and his dependants.

"In this manner an enlightened householder will cerebrate the obsequial worship of his paternal and maternal ancestors, who, satisfied by his offerings, will grant him all his desires. Three things are held pure at obsequies, a daughter's son, a Nepal blanket and sesamum-seeds;¹⁵ and the gift or naming or sight of silver is also propitious.¹⁶ The person offering a Śrāddha should avoid anger, walking about and hurry; these three things are very objectionable. The Viśvadevas and paternal and maternal ancestors and the living members of a man's family are all nourished by the offerer of ancestral oblations.

The class of Pitṛs derives support from the moon and the moon is sustained by acts of austere devotion. Hence the appointment of one who practises austerities is most desirable. A Yogi set before a thousand Brāhmaṇas enables the institutor of obsequial rites to enjoy all his desires."¹⁷

NOTES

1. The Brāhmaṇas here particularised are termed Triṇāciketa, Trimadhu and Trisuparṇa; and are so denominated, according to the commentator, from particular parts of the Vedas. The first is so called from studying or reciting three Anuvākas of the Kāṭ haka branch of the Yajurveda, commencing with the term Triṇāciketa; the second, from three Anuvākas of the same Veda, beginning Madhvātā; and the third, from a similar portion, commencing Brahmavan namāmi. The first and third terms occur in Manu, III. 185; and Kullūka Bhaṭṭa explains Triṇāciketa to mean a portion of the Yajurveda and the Brāhmaṇa who studies it and Trisuparṇa, a part of the Rk and the Brāhmaṇa who is acquainted with it. The Nirṇaya Sindhu explains the terms in a like manner, but calls the Trisuparṇa as well as the Triṇāciketa prayers, portions of the Yajus. The Trimadhu it assigns to the Rk. Other explanations are also given to the terms Triṇāciketa and Trisuparṇa : the first being explained a Brāhmaṇa who thrice performs the ceremony called Cayana; and the last, one who, after the seven ascending generations, worships the Pitṛs termed Somapāś. These explanations are however considered less correct than the preceding and which are thus given in the authority cited : त्रिणाचिकेतस्तिनुपर्णो यजुर्वेदैकदेशौ तद्वतेन तदध्यायिनौ। त्रिमधुः ऋग्वेदैकदेशः तदध्यायी॥।

2. For the six Āṅgas, see Bk. III. Ch. VI.

3. So the commentator distinguishes the Vedavit, the Brāhmaṇa who understands the meaning of the text of the Vedas, from the Śrotriya, who practises the rites he studies.

4. Portions of the Sāman contained in the Āraṇyaka are called the Jyeṣṭha, 'elder' or 'principal' Sāman.

5. Manu, III. 150.

6. As two or five at a ceremony dedicated to the gods; three at the worship of the Pitṛs. (Nirṇaya Sindhu, p. 311).

7. The worship of the Viśvadevas (see Bk. III. Ch. XIV) forms a part of the general Śrāddhas and of the daily sacrifices of the householder. According to the Vāyu this was a privilege conferred upon them by Brahmā and the Pitṛs, as a reward for religious austerities practised by them upon Himālaya. Their introduction as a specific class seems to have originated in the custom of sacrificing to the gods collectively or to all the gods, as the name Viśvadevas implies. They appear, however, as a distinct class in the Vedas and their assumption of this character is therefore of ancient date. The daily offering to them is noticed by Manu, II. 90, 172; and offerings to 'the gods' are also enjoined at the beginning and end of a Śrāddha. Kullūka Bhaṭṭa understands here the Viśvadevas and it probably is so; but in another verse different divinities are specified : "First having satisfied Agni, Soma, Yama with clarified butter, let him proceed to satisfy the manes of his progenitors." See As. Res. VII. 265, 271, etc.

8. The text is तदनुज्ञा 'with their assent'; but no noun occurs in the sentence with which the relative is connected. It must mean the Brāhmaṇas, however, as in this passage of Vṛddha Parāśara; 'Let the sacrificer place his left hand on the Brāhmaṇa's right keen and say, "Shall I invoke the Viśvadevas?" and being desired to invoke them, let him address them with the two mantras, "Viśvedevas, he is come! Viśvadevas, hear him!" ततः सञ्चरं न्यस्य विप्रं दक्षिणजानुनि। देवानावाहयिष्येऽहमिति वाचमुदीरयेत्॥। आवाहयेत्यनुजातो विष्वेदेवा स आगतः विष्वेदेवा शृणुतेमिति मंत्रद्वयं पठेत्॥।

9. This notion occurs more than once in the Vāyu, in nearly the same words : सिद्धा हि विप्रल्पेण चरन्ति पृथिवीमिमाम्। तस्मादतिथिमायान्तमभिगच्छेत् कृतांजलिः॥।

10. This places the initiatory oblations noticed by Manu (see Supra note 7) subsequent to the offerings to the Viśvadevas.

11. The Rakṣoghna mantra : the extinguishing of a lamp, lighted to keep off evil spirits, which is accompanied by a mantra or prayer. As. Res. VII. 274.

12. Part of this passage is in the words of Manu, III. 207 : अवकाशेषु चोक्षेषु जलतिरेषु चैवहि। It is omitted in the MSS. in the Bengali character.

13. Manu, III. 216.

14. "Then let the Brāhmaṇas address him saying, 'Svadhā!' for in all ceremonies relating to deceased ancestors, the world Svadhā is the highest benison." Manu, III. 252.

15. We have here the words of Manu : त्रीणि श्राद्धे पवित्राणि दौहित्रं कुतपस्तिलाः। III. 235. 'Three things are held pure at such obsequies, the daughter's son, the Nepal blanket and sesamum-seed.' Sir Wm. Jones's translation of these terms rests upon the explanation of Kullūka Bhaṭṭa of this and the verse preceding; ब्रतस्थमपि दौहित्रं श्राद्धे यते न भोजयेत्। कुतपं चासने दद्यात्। 'Let him give his daughter's son, though a religious student, food at a Śrāddha and the blanket for a seat.' The commentator on our text says that some understand by Dauhitra, clarified butter made from the milk of a cow fed with grass gathered on the day of new moon; and some explain it a plate or dish of buffalo horn. Kutapa he interprets by Aṣṭama Muhūrta, the eighth hour of the day or a little afternoon, although he admits that some render it a blanket made of goats' wool. These explanations are also noticed in the Nirṇaya Sindhu, p. 302; and upon the authority of the Matsya Purāna, Kutapa is said to mean eight things, which equally consume (Tapa) all sin (Ku) or noon, a vessel of rhinoceros' horn, a Nepal blanket, silver, holy grass, sesamum, kine and a daughter's son : मध्याहः स्वदूषात्रे च तथा नेपालकम्बलः। रौप्यं दधर्स्तिला गावो दौहित्रशाष्टमः स्मृतः। पापं कुत्सितमित्याहुस्तस्य सन्तापकारिणः। अष्टावते यतस्तस्मात् कुतपा इति विश्रुताः।

16. So the Matsya Purāna has 'the gift, sight and name of silver are desired:' रजतस्य तथा दानं दर्शनं नाम चेष्टते। The notion originates with Manu, III. 202.

17. The same doctrine is inculcated by the Vāyu Purāna; but it appears to be a Paurāṇik innovation, for Manu places the Brāhmaṇa intent on scriptural knowledge and on austere devotion on a level and makes no mention of the Yogi, III. 134.

grain, with clarified butter,¹ with fish or the flesh of the hare, of birds, of the hog, the goat, the antelope, the deer, the gayal or the sheep or with the milk of the cow and its products.² They are forever satisfied with flesh (in general) and with that of the long-eared white goat in particular. The flesh of the rhinoceros, the Kālāśāka potherb and honey, are also especial sources of satisfaction to those worshipped at ancestral ceremonies.

The birth of that man is the occasion of satisfaction to his progenitors who performs at the due time their obsequial rites at Gaya. Grains that spring up spontaneously, rice growing wild, panic of both species (white or black), vegetables that grow in forests, are fit for ancestral oblations; as are barley, wheat, rice, sesamum, various kinds of pulse and mustard.

The milk of animals with undivided hoofs, of a camel, a ewe, a deer or a buffalo, is unfit for ancestral oblations. If an obsequial rite is looked at by a eunuch, a man ejected from society, an outcast, a heretic, a drunken man or one diseased, by a cock, a naked ascetic,³ a monkey, a village hag, by a woman in her courses or pregnant, by an unclean person or by a carrier of corpses, neither gods nor progenitors will partake of the food. The ceremony should therefore be performed in a spot carefully enclosed. Let the performer cast sesamum on the ground and drive away malignant spirits. Let him not give food that is fetid or vitiated by hairs or insects or mixed with acid gruel or stale. Whatever suitable food is presented with pure faith and with the enunciation of name and race, to ancestors, at an obsequial oblation, becomes food to them (or gives them nourishment).

In former times, O king of the earth! this song of the Pitrs was heard by Ikṣvāku, the son of Manu, in the groves of Kalāpa (on the skirts of the Himālaya mountains) : 'Those of our descendants shall follow a righteous path who shall reverently present us with cakes at Gaya. May he be born in our race who shall give us, on the thirteenth of Bhādrapada and Māgha, milk, honey and clarified butter; or when he marries a maiden or liberates a black bull⁴ or performs any domestic ceremony agreeable to rule, accompanied by donations to the Brāhmaṇas!'⁵

1. See Manu, III. 266. The articles are much the same; the periods of satisfaction somewhat vary.

2. The expression Gavya (गव्य) implies all that is derived from a cow, but in the text it is associated with 'flesh;' and as the commentator observes, some consider the flesh of the cow to be here intended : मांसमध्यपाठानांसमेवेत्यचे। but this, he adds, relates to other ages. In the Kali or present age it implies milk and preparations of milk. The sacrifice of a cow or calf formed part of the ancient Śrāddha. It then became typical or a bull was turned loose, instead of being slaughtered; and this is still practised on some occasions. In Manu, the term Gavya is coupled with others, which limit its application : संवत्सरं तु गव्येन पयसा पायसेन च। 'A whole year with the milk of cows and food made of that milk.' III. 271.

3. Nagna is literally 'naked', but, as explained in the following chapter, means a Jain mendicant. No such person is included by Manu (III. 239) amongst those who defile a Śrāddha by looking upon it. The Vāyu contains the same prohibition : नग्नादयो न पश्येयुः।

4. Nila vṛṣa; but this animal is not altogether or always black. In the Brahma Purāṇa, as quoted in the Nirṇaya Sindhu, it is said to be of a red colour, with light face and tail and white hoofs and horns; or a white bull, with black face; or a black bull, with white face, tail and feet.

5. Very full descriptions of the Śrāddha occur in almost all the Purāṇas, especially in the Vāyu, Kūrma, Mārkaṇḍeya, Vāmana and Garuḍa. The Matsya and Padma (Śrīṣṭi Khaṇḍa) contain descriptions which are much the same as that of the Vāyu. The accounts of the Brahmā, Agni and Varāha are less full and regular than in some of the others; and in none of them is the subject so fully and perspicuously treated as in our text. For satisfactory information, however, the Śrāddha Mayūkha and the Nirṇaya Sindhu should be consulted.

Parāśara replied— The Rk, Yajur and Sāma Vedas constitute the triple covering of the several castes and the sinner who throws this off is said to be naked (or apostate). The three Vedas are the raiment of all the orders of men and when that is discarded they are left bare.¹ On this subject hear what I heard my grandfather, the pious Vasiṣṭha, relate to the magnanimous Bhīṣma :

There was formerly a battle between the gods and demons, for the period of a divine year, in which the gods were defeated by the demons under the command of Hrāda.² The discomfited deities fled to the northern shore of the milky ocean, where engaging in religious penance they thus prayed to Viṣṇu :

Maitreya said—You have told me, venerable sir, that an ancestral rite is not to be looked upon by certain persons, amongst whom you

"May the first of beings, the divine Viṣṇu, be pleased with the words that we are about to address to him, in order to propitiate the lord of all worlds; from which mighty cause all created things have originated and into whom they shall again dissolve! Who is able to declare his praise? We, who have been put to shame by the triumph of our foes, will glorify you, although your true power and might be not within the reach of words.

Upon the conclusion of their prayers, the gods beheld the sovereign deity Hari, armed with the shell, the discus and the mace, riding on Garuḍa. Prostrating themselves before him, they addressed him and said, "Have compassion upon us, O lord, and protect us, who have come to you for succour from the Daityas. They have seized upon the three worlds and appropriated the offerings which are our portion, taking care not to transgress the precepts of the Veda. Although we, as well as they, are parts of you, of whom all beings consist, yet we behold the world impressed by the ignorance of unity, with the belief of its separate existence. Engaged in the duties of their respective orders and following the paths prescribed by holy writ, practising also religious penance, it is impossible, for us to destroy them. Do you, whose wisdom is immeasurable, instruct us in some device by which we may be able to exterminate the enemies of the gods."

Parāśara continued— "When the mighty Viṣṇu heard their request, he emitted from his body an illusory form, which he gave to the gods and thus spoke" :

Viṣṇu said— "This deceptive vision shall wholly beguile the Daityas, so that, being led astray from the path of the Vedas, they may be put to death; for all gods, demons or others, who shall be opposed to the authority of the Veda, shall perish by my might, while exercised for the preservation of the world. Go then and fear not; let this delusive vision precede you; it shall this day be of great service to you, oh gods!"

Having thus spoken by Viṣṇu, gods saluted him and proceeded to that place wherfrom they came. The deceptive vision also returned with them.

NOTES

1. This idea is expressed in nearly the same terms in the Vāyu p. : सर्वषामेव भूतानां त्रयी संवरणं स्मृता। परित्यजन्ति ये मोहाते वै नग्नादयो जनाः॥ 'The three Vedas are the covering of all beings and they who throw it off through delusion are called Nagnas, naked.' The notion is probably original with neither of the Purāṇas and the metaphorical sense of the term is not that in which it was first employed; ascetics, whether of the Bauddha or of the Digambara order of Jains, being literally Nagnas or going naked. The qualified application of it, however, was rendered necessary by the same practice being familiar to ascetics of the orthodox faith. To go naked was not necessarily a sign of a heretic and therefore his nudity was understood to be, rejecting the raiment of holy writ. Thus the Vāyu Purāṇa extends the word to all ascetics, including naked Brāhmaṇas, who practise austerities fruitlessly, that is, heretically or hypocritically; वृथा दण्डी वृथा मुण्डी वृथा ननश्च यो द्विजः। वृथा ब्रती वृथा जापी ते वै नग्नादयो जनाः॥ 'The Brāhmaṇa who unprofitably bears a staff, shaves his head, goes naked, makes a vow or mutters prayers, all such persons are called Nagnas and the like.'

CHAPTER 18

अष्टादशोऽध्यायः

(असुरेभ्यो मायामोहस्योपदेशदानम् बौद्धयर्मोत्पत्तिः,

Parāśara said— After this, the great delusion, having proceeded to earth, beheld the Daityas engaged in ascetic penances upon the banks of the Narmadā river;¹ and approaching them in the semblance of a naked mendicant, with his head shaven and carrying a bunch of a peacock's feathers,² he thus addressed them in gentle accents :

मायामोह उवाच

हे दैत्यपतयो! ब्रूत यदर्थं तप्यते तपः।
ऐहिकं वाथ पारन्त्रं तपसः फलमिच्छुष्टा॥ ३॥

"Ho, lords of the Daitya race! Wherefore is it that you practise these acts of penance? Is it with a view to recompense in this world or in another?"

"If you are desirous of final emancipation," answered the seeming ascetic, "attend to my words, for you are worthy of a revelation which is the door to ultimate felicity. The duties that I will teach you are the secret path to liberation ; there are none beyond or superior to them : by following them you shall obtain either heaven or exemption from future existence. You, mighty beings, are deserving of such lofty doctrine."

By such persuasions and by many specious arguments, did this delusive being mislead the Daityas from the tenets of the Vedas; teaching that the same thing might be for the sake of virtue and of vice; might be and might not be; might or might not contribute to liberation; might be the supreme object and not the supreme object; might be effect and not be effect; might be manifest or not be manifest, might be the duty of those who go naked or who go clothed in much raiment : and so the Daityas were seduced from their proper duties by the repeated lessons of their illusory preceptor, maintaining the equal truth of contradictory tenets;³ and they are called Arhatas,⁴ from the phrase he had employed of "You are worthy (Arhatha) of this great doctrine;" that is, of the false doctrines which he persuaded them to embrace.

The foes of the gods being thus induced to apostatise from the religion of Vedas, by the delusive person sent by Viśṇu, became in their turn teachers of the same heresies and perverted others; and these, again, communicating their principles to others, by whom they were still further disseminated, the Vedas were in a short time deserted by most of the Daitya race. Then the same deluder, putting on garments of a red colour, assuming a benevolent aspect and speaking in soft and agreeable tones, addressed others of the same family and said to him,

मायामोह उवाच

"If, mighty demons, you cherish a desire either for heaven or for final repose, desist from the iniquitous massacre of animals (for sacrifice) and hear from me what you should do. Know that all that exists is composed of discriminative knowledge. Understand my words, for they have been uttered by the wise.

Parāśara said— In this manner, exclaiming to them, "Know!" (Budhyadvam) and they replying, "It is known" (Budhyati), these Daityas were induced by the arch deceiver to deviate from their religious duties (and become Buddhas), by his repeated arguments and variously urged persuasions.⁵ When they had abandoned their own faith, they persuaded others to do the same and the heresy spread and any deserted the practices enjoined by the Vedas and the laws.

The delusions of the false teacher paused not with the conversion of the Daityas to the Jaina and Baudha heresies, but with various erroneous tenets he prevailed upon others to apostatise, until the whole were led astray and deserted the doctrines and observances inculcated by the three Vedas. Some then spoke evil of the sacred books; some blasphemed the gods; some treated sacrifices and other devotional ceremonies with scorn; and others calumniated the Brāhmaṇas.

"The precepts," they cried, "that lead to the injury of animal life (as in sacrifices) are highly reprehensible. To say that casting butter into flame is productive of reward, is mere childishness. If Indra, after having obtained, godhead by multiplied rites, is fed upon the wood used as fuel in holy fire, he is lower than a brute, which feeds at least upon leaves. If an animal slaughtered in religious worship is thereby raised to heaven, would it not be expedient for a man who institutes a sacrifice to kill his own father for a victim?

If that which is eaten by one at a Śrāddha gives satisfaction to another, it must be unnecessary for one who resides at a distance to bring food for presentation in person."⁶ "First, then let it be determined what may be (rational) believed by mankind and then," said their preceptor, "you will find that felicity may be expected from my instructions. The words of authority do not, mighty Asuras, fall from heaven : the text that has reason is alone to be acknowledged by me and by such as you are."⁷ By such and similar lessons the Daityas were perverted, so that not one of them admitted the authority of the Vedas.

When the Daityas had thus declined from the path of the holy writings, the deities took courage and gathered together for battle. Hostilities accordingly were renewed, but the demons were now defeated and slain by the gods, who had adhered to the righteous path. The armour of religion, which had formerly protected the Daityas, had been discarded by them and upon its abandonment followed their destruction.⁸

ततो मैत्रेय! तमार्गवर्त्तिनो येऽभवञ्चनाः।

यस्तु सन्त्यज्य गार्हस्थ्यं वानप्रस्थो न जायते।
परिन्नाइ वापि मैत्रेय! स नग्नः पापकृत्रः॥ ३६॥

Thus, Maitreya, you are to understand that those who have seceded from their original belief are said to be naked, because they have thrown off the garment of Vedas. According to the law there are four conditions or orders of men (of the three first castes), the religious student, the householder, the hermit and the mendicant. There is no fifth state; and the unrighteous man who relinquishes the order of the householder and does not become either an anchorite or a mendicant, is also a naked (seceder).

पक्षं नित्यक्रियाहाने: कर्ता मैत्रेय! मानवः॥ ३८॥

The man who neglects his permanent observances for one day and night, being able to perform them, incurs thereby sin for one day; and should he omit them, not being in trouble or a fortnight, he can be purified only by arduous expiation.

संवत्सरं क्रियाहानिर्यस्य पुंसोऽभिजायते।

प्रयान्त्यनर्वितान्यत्र लोके तस्मान्न पापकृत्॥ ४१॥

The virtuous must stop to gaze upon the sun after looking upon a person who has allowed a year to elapse without the observance of the perpetual ceremonies; and they must bathe with their cloths on should they have touched him : but for the individual himself no expiation has been declared. There is no sinner upon earth more culpable than one in whose dwelling the gods, progenitors and spirits, are left to sigh unworshipped.

 देवतापितृभूतानि तथानभ्यर्च्य योऽतिथीन्।
 भुइके स पातकं भुइके निष्कृतिस्तस्य कीदृशी॥४५॥

Let not a man associate, in residence, sitting or society, with him whose person or whose house has been blasted by the sighs of the gods, progenitors and spirits. Conversation, interchange of civilities or association with a man who for a twelve month has not discharged his religious duties, is productive of equality of guilt; and the person who eats in the house of such a man or sits down with him or sleeps on the same couch with him, becomes like him instantaneously. Again; he who takes his food without showing reverence to the gods, progenitors, spirits and guests, commits sin.

 यान्ति ते नग्नसंज्ञां तु हीनकर्मस्ववस्थिताः॥४६॥

How great is his sin! The Brāhmaṇas and men of the other castes, who turn their faces away from their proper duties, become heretics and are classed with these who relinquish pious works.

चतुर्णा यत्र वर्णानां मैत्रेयात्यन्तसङ्करः।

 अनभ्यर्च्य ऋषीन् देवान् पितृन् भूतातिथींस्तथा।
 यो भुइके तस्य सम्भाषात् पतिन्ति नरके नराः॥४८॥

Remaining in a place where there is too great an intermixture of the four castes is detrimental to the character of the righteous. Men fall into hell who converse with one who takes his food without offering a portion to the gods, the sages, the manes, spirits and guests.

तस्यादेतान्नरो नग्नांस्त्रयीसन्त्यागदूषितान्।

 श्रद्धावद्धिः कृतं यत्नादेवान् पितृपितामहान्।
 न प्रीणयति तच्छ्राद्धं यदेभिरवलोकितम्॥५०॥

Let therefore a prudent person carefully avoid the conversation or the contact and the like, of those heretics who are rendered impure by their desertion of the three Vedas. The ancestral rite, although performed with zeal and faith, pleases neither gods nor progenitors if it be looked upon by apostates.

It is related that there was formerly a king named Śatadhanu, whose wife Śaivyā was a woman of great virtue. She was devoted to her husband, benevolent, sincere, pure, adorned with every female excellence, with humility and discretion. The Rājā and his wife daily worshipped the god of gods, Janārdana, with pious meditations, oblations of fire, prayers, gifts, fasting and every other mark of entire faith and exclusive devotion.

On one occasion, when they had fasted on the full moon of Kārtika and had bathed in the Bhagirathi, they beheld, as they came up from the water, a heretic approach them, who was the friend of the Rājā's military preceptor. The Rājā, out of respect to the latter, entered into conversation with the heretic; but not so did the princess; reflecting that she was observing a fast, she turned from him and cast her eyes up to the sun.

On their arrival at home, the husband and wife, as usual, performed the worship of Viśnu, agreeably to the ritual.

अन्वारुरोह तं देवी चितास्थं भूपतिं पतिम्॥६०॥

After a time the Rājā, triumphant over his enemies, died; and the princess ascended the funeral pile of her husband.

In consequence of the fault committed by Śatadhanu, by speaking to an infidel when he was engaged in a solemn fast, he was born again as a dog. His wife was born as the daughter of the king of Kāśī, with a knowledge of the events of her pre-existence, accomplished in every science and endowed with every virtue. Her father was anxious to give her in marriage to some suitable husband, but she constantly opposed his design and the king was prevented by her from accomplishing her nuptials.

With the eye of divine intelligence she knew that her own husband has been regenerate as a dog and going once to the city of Vidiśā she saw the dog and recognised her former lord in him. Knowing that the animal was her husband, she placed upon his neck the bridal garland, accompanying it with the marriage rites and prayers : but he, eating the delicate food presented to him, expressed his delight after the fashion of his species; at which she was much ashamed and bowing reverently to him, thus spoke to her degraded spouse :

पत्न्युवाच

Spouse said— "Recall to memory, illustrious prince, the ill-timed politeness on account of which you have been born as a dog and are now fawning upon me. In consequence of speaking to a heretic, after bathing in a sacred river, you have been condemned to this abject birth. Do you not remember it?"

Parāśara said— Thus reminded, the Rājā recollected his former condition and was lost in thought and felt deep humiliation. With a broken spirit he went forth from the city and falling dead in the desert, was born a new as a jackal.

In the course of the following year the princess knew what had happened and went to the mountain Kolāhala to seek for her husband. Finding him there, the lovely daughter of the king of the earth said to her lord, thus disguised as a jackal, Spouse said— “Do you not remember, oh king, the circumstance of conversing with a heretic, which I called to your recollection when you was a dog?” The Rājā, thus addressed, knew that what the princess had spoken was true and thereupon desisted from food and died.

He then became a wolf; but his blameless wife knew it and came to him in the lonely forest and awakened his remembrance of his original state. “No wolf are you,” she said, “but the illustrious sovereign Śatadhanu. You was then a dog, then a jackal and are now a wolf.”

Upon this, recollecting himself, the prince abandoned his life and became a vulture; in which form his lovely queen still found him and aroused him to a knowledge of the past. “Prince,” she exclaimed, “recollect yourself; away with this uncouth form, to which the sin of conversing with a heretic has condemned you!” The Rājā was next born as a crow; when the princess, who through her mystical powers was aware of it, said to him, “You are now yourself the eater of tributary grain, to whom, in a prior existence, all the kings of the earth paid tribute.”⁹

Parāśara said— Having abandoned his body, in consequence of the recollections excited by these words, the king next became a peacock, which the princess took to herself and petted and fed constantly with such food as is agreeable to birds of its class. The king of Kāśī instituted at that time the solemn sacrifice of a horse. In the ablutions with which it terminated the princess caused her peacock to be bathed, bathing also herself; and she then reminded Śatadhanu how he had been successively born as various animals.

On recollecting this, he resigned his life. He was then born as the son of a person of distinction and the princess now assenting to the wishes of her father to see her wedded, the king of Kāśī caused it to be made known that she would elect a bridegroom from those who should present themselves as suitors for her hand. When the election took place, the princess made choice of her former lord, who appeared amongst the candidates and again invested him with the character of her husband.

They lived happily together and upon her father's decease Śatadhanu ruled over the country of Videha. He offered many sacrifices and gave away many gifts and begot sons and subdued his enemies in war; and having duly exercised the sovereign power and cherished benignantly the earth, he died, as became his warrior birth, in battle. His queen again followed him in death and conformably to sacred precepts, once more mounted cheerfully his funeral pile.

The king then, along with his princess, ascended beyond the sphere of Indra to the regions where all desires are forever gratified, obtaining ever-during and unequalled happiness in heaven, the perfect felicity that is the rarely realised reward of conjugal fidelity.¹⁰ Such, Maitreya, is the sin of covering with a heretic and such are the expiatory effects of bathing after the solemn sacrifice of a horse, as I have narrated them to you.

Let therefor a man carefully avoid the discourse or contact of an unbeliever, especially at seasons of devotion and when engaged in the performance of religious rites preparatory to a sacrifice. If it be necessary that a wise man should look at the sun, after beholding one who has neglected his domestic ceremonies for a month, how much greater need must there be of expiation after encountering one who has wholly abandoned the Vedas? One who is supported by infidels or who disputes the doctrines of holy writ? Let not a person treat with even the civility of speech, heretics, those who do forbidden acts, pretended saints, scoundrels, sceptics¹¹ and hypocrites. Intercourse with such iniquitous wretches, even at a distance, all association with schismatic, defiles; let a man therefore carefully avoid them.

येषां सम्भाषणात् पुंसां दिनपुण्यं प्रणश्यति॥१०२॥

These, Maitreya, are the persons called naked, the meaning of which term you desired to have explained. Their very looks vitiate the performance of an ancestral oblation; speaking to them destroys religious merit for a whole day.

इति श्रीविष्णुपुराणे रूतीसंशे अष्टादशोऽध्यायः समाप्तः॥

These are the unrighteous heretics to whom a man must not give shelter and speaking to whom effaces whatever merit he may that day have obtained. Men, indeed, fall into hell as the consequence of only conversing with those who unprofitably assume the twisted hair and shaven crown; with those who feed without offering food to gods, spirits and guests; and whose who are excluded from the presentation of cakes and libations of water, to the manes.

NOTES

1. The situation chosen for the first appearance of the heresy agrees well enough with the great prevalence of the Jain faith in the west of India in the eleventh and twelfth centuries (As. Res. XVI. 318) or perhaps a century earlier and is a circumstance of same weight in investigating the date of the Viṣṇu Purāṇa.

2. A bunch of peacock's feathers is still an ordinary accompaniment of a Jain mendicant. According to the Hindi poem, the Pṛthu Rai Caritra, it was borne by the Buddhist Amara Sinha; but that work is not, perhaps, very good authority for Buddha observances, at least of an ancient date.

3. In this and the preceding contradictions it is probable that the writer refers, although not with much precision, to the sceptical tenets of the Jains, whence they are called commonly Syādvādis, assertors of probabilities or of what may be. These usually form seven categories or 1. A thing is; 2. It is not; 3. It is and it is not; 4. It is not definable; 5. It is, but is not definable; 6. It is not, neither is it definable; 7. It is and it is not and is not definable. Hence the Jains are also termed Saptavādis and Saptabhangis, assertors and oppugners of seven propositions. As. Res. XVII. 271; and Trans. Royal As. Soc. I. 555.

4. Here is further confirmation of the Jains being intended by our text, as the term Arhat is more particularly applied to them, although it is also used by the Buddhists.

5. We have there the Bauddhas noticed as a distinct sect. If the author wrote from a personal knowledge of Buddhists in India, he could not have written much later than the 10th or 11th century.

6. That is, according to the commentator, a Śrāddha may be performed for a man who is abroad by any of his kinsmen who are tarrying at home; it will be of equal benefit to him as if he offered it himself; he will equally eat of the consecrated food.

7. We have in these passages, no doubt, allusion to the Vārhospatyas or followers of Br̥haspati, who seem to have been numerous and bold at some period anterior to the 14th century. As. Res. XVI. 5.

8. We may have in this conflict of the orthodox divinities and heretical Daityas some covert allusion to political troubles, growing out of religious differences and the final predominance of Brahmanism. Such occurrences seem to have preceded the invasions of India by the Mohammedans and prepared the way for their victories.

9. There is a play upon the word Bali, which means 'tribute', or 'fragments of a meal scattered abroad to the birds'.

10. The legend is peculiar to the Viṣṇu Purāṇa, although the doctrine it inculcates is to be found elsewhere.

11. Haitukas, 'causalists'; either the followers of the Nyāya or 'logical' philosophy or Bauddhas, those who take nothing upon authority and admit nothing that cannot be proved; or it is explained, those who by argument cast a doubt upon the efficacy of acts of devotion.

Maitreya said—Venerable preceptor, you have explained to me the perpetual and occasional ceremonies which are to be performed by those righteous individuals who are diligent in their devotions; and you have also described to me the duties which devolve upon the several castes and on the different orders of the human race. I have now to request you will relate to me the dynasties of the kings who have ruled over the earth.¹

Listen therefore, Maitreya, to the entire series of the princes of this family, by which all sin shall be effaced. Before the evolution of the mundane egg, existed Brahmā, who was Hiraṇyagarbha, the form of that supreme Brahma which consist of Viśnu as identical with the Rk, Yajur and Sāma Vedas; the primeval, uncreated cause of all worlds. From the right thumb of Brahmā was born the patriarch Dakṣa;³ his daughter was Aditi, who was the mother of the sun. The Manu Vaivasvata was the son of the celestial luminary; and his sons were Ikṣvāku, Nṛga, Dhṛṣṭā, Saryāti, Nariṣyanta, Prānsu, Nābhāga, Nediṣṭa, Karūṣa and Piṣadhr̄a.⁴ Before their birth, the Manu being desirous of sons, offered a sacrifice for that purpose to Mitra and Varuṇa; but the rite being deranged, through an irregularity of the ministering priest, a daughter Ilā, was produced.⁵ Through the favour of the two divinities, however, her sex was changed and she became a man, named Sudyumna. At a subsequent period, in consequence of becoming subject to the effects of a malediction once pronounced by Śiva, Sudyumna was again transformed to a woman in the vicinity of the hermitage of Budha, the son of the deity of the moon. Budha saw and espoused her and had by her a son named Purūravas. After his birth, the illustrious Ṛṣis, desirous of restoring Sudyumna to his sex, prayed to the mighty Viṣṇu, who is the essence of the four Vedas, of mind, of everything and of nothing; and who is in the form of the sacrificial male; and through his favour Ilā once more became Sudyumna, in which character he had three sons, Utkala, Gaya and Vinata.⁶

In consequence of his having been formerly a female, Sudyumna was excluded from any share in his paternal dominions; but his father, at the suggestion of Vasiṣṭha, bestowed upon him the city Pratiṣṭhāna⁷ and he gave it to Purūravas. Of the other sons of the Manu, Pr̥ṣadhra, in consequence of the crime of killing a cow, was degraded to the condition of a Śūdra.⁸

From Karuṣa descended the mighty warriors termed Kārūṣas (the sovereigns of the north).⁹ The son of Nediṣṭha, named Nābhāga, became a Vaiśya;¹⁰ his son was Bhalandana;¹¹ whose son was the celebrated Vataspri¹²; Prānsu; whose son was Prajāni;¹³ whose son was Khanitra;¹⁴ whose son was the very valiant Cakṣupa;¹⁵ whose son was Vimśa;¹⁶ whose son was Vivimśati;¹⁷ whose son was Khaninetra; whose son was the powerful, wealthy and valiant Karandhama;¹⁸ whose son was Avikṣi (or Avikṣit)¹⁹; whose son was the mighty Marutta, of whom this well known verse is recited; "There never was beheld on earth a sacrifice equal to the sacrifice of Marutta: all the implements and utensils were made of gold. Indra was intoxicated with the libations of Soma juice and the Brāhmaṇas were enraptured with the magnificent donations they received. The winds of heaven encompassed the rite as guards and the assembled gods attended to behold it."²⁰ Marutta was a Cakravartī or universal monarch : he had a son named Nariṣyanta;²¹ his son was Dama;²² his son was Rājyavardhana; his son was Sudhṛti; his son was Nara; his son was Kevala; his son was

Bandhumat; his son was Vegavat; his son was Budha;²³ his son was Tr̄ṇavindu, who had a daughter named Ilavilā.²⁴ The celestial nymph Alambuśā becoming enamoured of Tr̄ṇavindu, bore him a son named Viśāla, by whom the city Vaiśālī was founded.²⁵ The son of the first king of Vaiśālī was Hemacandra; his son was Sucandra; his son was Dhūmrāśva; his son was Srñjaya;²⁶ his son was Sahadeva;²⁷ his son was Krisāśva; his son was Somadatta, who celebrated ten times the sacrifice of a horse; his son was Janamejaya; and his son was Sumati.²⁸

Śaryāti, the fourth son of the Manu, had a daughter named Sukanyā, who was married to the holy sage Cyavana;²⁹ he had also a righteous son, Called Ānartta. The son of the latter was Revata,³⁰ who ruled over the country called after his father Ānartta and dwelt at the capital denominated Kuśasthalī.³¹ The son of this prince was Raivata or Kakudmīn, the eldest of a hundred brethren. He had a very lovely daughter and not finding any one worthy of her hand, he repaired with her to the region of Brahmā to consult the god where a fit bridegroom was to be met with. When he arrived, the quiristers Hāhā, Hūhū and others, were singing before Brahmā and Raivata, waiting till they had finished, imagined the ages that elapsed during their performance to be but as a moment.

गीतावसाने भगवन्तमव्यजयोनि प्रणम्य रैवतकः
कन्यायोग्यं वरमपृच्छत्। तज्जाह भगवान्, कथय
योऽभिमतस्ते वर इति। पुनश्च प्रणम्य भगवते

भगवतोऽभिमतः? कस्मै कन्यामिमां प्रथच्छामीति। ततः
किञ्चिद्वन्तशिराः सम्मितो भगवान् अब्योमिराह॥ २२॥

At the end of their singing, Raivata prostrated himself before Brahmā and explained his errand, "Whom should you wish for a son-in-law?" demanded Brahmā; and the king mentioned to him various persons with whom he could be well pleased. Nodding his head gently and graciously smiling, Brahmā said to him,

ये एते भगवतोऽभिमताः नैतेषां साम्प्रतमपत्यापत्य-
सन्ततिरप्यवनीतलेऽस्ति। बहूनि हि तवात्रैद गार्थ्यर्वं

भवतोऽपि मित्र-मन्त्रि-भृत्य-कलत्र-बन्धु-बल-कोषादयः
कालेनैतेनात्यन्तमतीताः॥ २४॥

"Of those whom you have named the third or fourth generation non longer survives, for many successions of ages have passed away while you were listening to our songsters; now upon earth the twenty-eighth great age of the present Manu is nearly finished and the Kali period is at hand. You must therefore, bestow this virgin gem upon some other husband, for you are now alone and your friends, your ministers servants, wife, kinsmen, armies and treasures, have long since swept away by the hand of time."

किञ्चिद्वन्तकथ्यं कृताङ्गलिभूतं सप्तलोकगुरुरुद्ययोनि-

Overcome with astonishment and alarm, the Rājā then said to Brahmā, "Since I am thus circumstanced, do you, lord, tell me unto whom the maiden shall be given:" and the creator of the world, whose throne is the lotus, thus benignantly replied to the prince, as he stood bowed and humble before him :

Through the favour of that imperishable being am I the agent of his power in creation : through his anger is Rudra the destroyer of the world; and the cause of preservation, Puruṣa, proceeds also from him.

Impersonated as Indra and the other gods he is the guardian of mankind; and as the sun and moon he disperses darkness. Taking upon himself the nature of fire he bestows warmth and maturity; and in the condition of the earth nourishes all beings.

As one with air he gives activity to existence; and as one with water he satisfies all wants; while in the state of ether, associated with universal aggregation, he furnishes space for all objects.

He is at once the creator, and that which is created; the preserver and that which is preserved; the destroyed and as one with all things, that which is destroyed; and as the indestructible, he is distinct from these three vicissitudes.

In him is the world, he is the world; and he, the primeval self-born, is again present in the world. That mighty Viṣṇu, who is paramount over all beings, is now in a portion of himself upon the earth.

That city Kuśasthalī which was formerly your capital and rivalled the city of the immortals, is now known as Dvāraka³² and there reigns a portion of that divine being in the person of Baladeva; to him, who appears as a man, present her as a wife; he is a worthy bridegroom for this excellent damsel and she is a suitable bride for him.

Being thus instructed by the lotus-born divinity, Raivata returned with his daughter to earth, where he found the race of men dwindled in stature, reduced in vigour and enfeebled in intellect.

Repairing to the city of Kuśasthalī, which he found much altered, the wise monarch bestowed his unequalled daughter on the wielder of the ploughshare, whose breast was as fair and radiant as crystal. Beholding the damsel of excessively lofty height, the chief, whose banner is a palm-tree, shortened her with the end of his ploughshare and she became his wife. Balarāma having espoused, agreeably to the ritual, Revatī, the daughter of Raivata, the king retired to the mountain Himālaya and ended his days in devout austerities.³³

NOTES

1. The complete series of the different dynasties is found elsewhere only in the Vāyu, the Brahmāṇḍa (which is the same), the Matsya and the Bhāgavata Purāṇas. The Brahma Purāṇa and the Hari Vaṁśa, the Agni, Liṅga, Kūrma and Garuḍa Purāṇas have lists of various extent, but none beyond the families of Pāṇḍu and Kṛṣṇa. The Mārkaṇḍeya contains an account of a few of the kings of the solar dynasty alone; and the Padma, of a part of the solar and lunar princes only, besides accounts of individuals. In the Rāmāyaṇa, Mahābhārata and in the other Purāṇas, occasional short genealogies and notices of individual princes occur. In general there is a tolerable conformity, but this is not invariably the case, as we shall have occasion to observe.

2. In the historical passages of all the Purāṇas in which such occur and especially in the Viśnu and Vāyu, verses, apparently the fragments of a more ancient narrative, are frequently cited. It may also be noticed, as a peculiarity of this part of the Purāṇas, that the narration is in prose.

3. Dakṣa is elsewhere said to have been one of the mind-born sons of Brahmā or to have been the son of the Pracetases : See Bk. I. Ch. XV. n. 5.

4. According to the nomenclature sometimes followed and as we shall have reason to conclude intended in this place, there are ten sons of Manu.

The commentator regards them, however, as but nine, considering Nābhāga-nediṣṭa but one name or Nediṣṭa the father of Nābhaga. The number is generally stated to be nine, although there is some variety in the names, particularly in this name, which occurs Nābhāgadiṣṭa, Nābhāgariṣṭha; and also separated, as Nābhāga, Nabhaga or Nabhāga; Nediṣṭa, Diṣṭa and Ariṣṭa : the latter, as in the Kūrma, distinctly stated, नाभागो हरिष्टः। Again, नेदिष्टः सप्तमः स्मृतः। Brahmag p. The commentator on the Hari Varmī quotes the Vedas for Nābhāgadiṣṭa : नाभागदिष्टं वै मानवमिति श्रुतिः। but the name occurs as Nābhānediṣṭha in the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa of the Ṛgveda, where a story is told of his being excluded from all share of his inheritance, on the plea of his being wholly devoted to a religious life : नाभानेदिष्टं वै मानवं ब्रह्मचर्यं वसन्तं भ्रातरो निरभजन्। See also As. Res. VIII. 384. The name as ordinarily written, Nabhāga, 'no-share', has nevertheless an obvious connection with the legend. The name of Nṛga is found only in our text, the Padma and the Bhāgavata : the Vāyu has Najava. Prānsu is also the reading of the Vāyu and Agni, but not of the rest, which have Veṇa, Vanya, Daṇḍa, Kuśanābha or Kavi, in its place. The Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, p. 113, has Veṇa, Dhṛṣṇu, Nariṣyanta, Nābhāga, Ikṣvāku, Kārūṣa, Śaryāti, Ilā, Pṛṣadhr̥a and Nābhāgariṣṭha. The Padma Purāṇa, in the Pātāla Khanḍa, says there were 'ten' and names them Ikṣvāku, Nṛga, Diṣṭa, Dhṛṣṭa, Karūṣa, Śaryāti, Nariṣyanta, Pṛṣadhr̥a, Nābhāga and Kavi.

5. तत्त्वापहृते होतुरपचारात्। 'That sacrifice being wrongly offered, through the improper invocations of the Hotri.' It is also read अपहृते 'frustrated'. This is rather a brief and obscure allusion to what appears to be an ancient legend and one that has undergone various modifications. According to the Matsya, no change of sex took place in the first instance. The eldest son of Manu was Ida or Ilā (इडः or इलाः), whom his father appointed sovereign of the seven Dvīpas. In his progress round his dominions, Ilā came to the forest of Śambhu or Śiva; entering into which, he was changed to a female, Ilā, agreeably to a promise made formerly by Śiva to Pārvatī, who had been once unseasonably broken in upon by some sages, that such a transformation should be inflicted on every male who trespassed upon the sacred grove. After a season, the brothers of Ilā sought for him and finding him thus metamorphosed, applied to Vasiṣṭha, their father's priest, to know the cause. He explained it to them and directed them to worship Śiva and his bride. They did so, accordingly; and it was announced by the deities, that, up on the performance of an Aśvamedha by Ikṣvāku, Ilā should become a Kirīpuṣa, named Sudyumna and that he should be a male one month and female another month, alternately. The Vāyu, which is followed by most of the other authorities states that upon Manu's offering their share of the sacrifice to Mitra and Varuṇa, instead of a boy, a girl was born : according to the Vedas. इडा जन्मे इति श्रुतिः। Manu desired her to follow him; तामिलेत्यथोवाच मनुर्दण्डधरः स्मृतः। अनुगाच्छामि भद्रं ते तमिला प्रत्युवाच ह॥ whence her name Ilā (from Ila or ida, 'come'). There, however, Manu propitiates Mitra and Varuṇa and the girl Ilā or Sudyumna by their favour : as the Mārkandeya; तथेति ताभ्या मुकुं तु देवाभ्यां सैवकन्यका। इला दक्षः समभवत् सुद्युम्न इति विश्रुतः॥ Sudyumna's subsequent change to a female again, is told much as in the Matsya; but his being alternately male and female is not mentioned in the Vāyu any more than it is in our text. The Bhāgavata agrees in that respect with the Matsya, but it has evidently embellished the earlier part of the legend by the introduction of another character, Śraddhā, the wife of the Manu. It is said that it was by her instigation, as she was desirous of having a girl, that the ministering Brāhmaṇas altered the purpose of the rite, in consequence of which a girl, instead of a boy, was born. The similarity of the name has induced the learned author of the Origin of Pagan Idolatry to conceive that he has found the Ilā of the Hindus in the Il or Ilus of the Phoenicians. "The Phoenician II is the masculine Ilā of the Hindus and Indo Scythae and Ilā was a title of Manu or Buddha, who was preserved in the ark at the time of the deluge:" I. 156 : and the thence concludes that Ilā must be Noah; while other circumstances in his Phoenician history identify him with Abraham. I. 159, Again; "Ilus or Il is a regular Cuthic name of Buddha, which the Phoenicians, I have no doubt, brought with them; for Buddha or Manu, in the character of Ilā, is said to have married his own daughter, who is described as the offspring of an ancient personage that was preserved in an ark at the time of the deluge." I. 223. Now whatever connection there may be between the names of Ilā, Il, Ilus, Ilūm, Ilā 'the earth' and Illos 'slime', there is no very obvious resemblance between the Paurāṇik legends of Ilā and the Mosaic record; nor do the former authorise the particulars of Ilā stated by Faber, on the authority probably of Wilford. The Manu Satyavrata, who was preserved in the ark, is never called Ilā nor is he the father of Ilā. Buddha was not so preserved nor is Ilā ever a title of Buddha. Budha (not Buddha), the husband of Ilā, never appears as her father nor is he a Manu nor is she the daughter of any ancient personage preserved in an ark. There is not therefore, as far as I am aware, any circumstance in the history of Ilā or Ilā which can identify either with Abraham or Noah.

6. The Matsya calls the name of third Haritāśva; the Vāyu, Vinatāśva; the Mārkaṇḍeya, Vinaya; and the Bhāgavata, Vimala. All but the last agree in stating that Uktala (Orissa) and Gayā in Bihar are named after the two first. The Matsya calls the third the sovereign of the east, along with the Kauravas; the Vāyu makes him king of the west. The Bhāgavata calls them all three rulers of the south.

7. The authorities agree in this location of Sudyumna. Pratiṣṭhāna was situated on the eastern side of the confluence of the Ganges and Yamunā; the country between which rivers was the territory of the direct male descendants of Vaivasvata. In the Hari Varnśa it is said that he reigned in Pratiṣṭhāna, having killed Dhṛṣṭaka, Ambarīṣa and Daṇḍa : सुहास्तः कारयामास प्रतिष्ठाने नृपकियां। धृष्टकश्चाम्बरीषश दण्डश्वेति हतत्रयः॥ M. Langlois had no doubt सुतत्रयः: in his copy, as he renders it, 'Il donna naissance à trois enfans;' though, as he observes, Hamilton and called these the sons of Ikṣvāku. The Brahma Purāṇa has not this passage nor does the commentator on the Hari Varnśa give any explanation; neither does any thing of the kind occur elsewhere. We have however, subsequently in the text, Daṇḍa named as a son of Ikṣvāku; and in the Padma Purāṇa, Sriṣṭi Khaṇḍa and in the Uttara Khaṇḍa of the Rāmāyaṇa, we have a detailed narrative of Daṇḍa, the son of Ikṣvāku, whose country was laid waste by an imprecation of Bhārgava, whose daughter that prince had violated. His kingdom became in consequence the Dāṇḍaka forest. The Mahābhārata, Dāna Dharma, alludes to the same story. If therefore the preferable reading of the Hari Varnśa be Sūta, 'son', it is at variance with all other authorities. At the same time it must be admitted, that the same work is singular in asserting any collision between Daṇḍa and his brothers and Sudyumna and the passage seems to have grown out of that careless and ignorant compilation which the Hari Varnśa so perpetually presents. It is not improbably a gratuitous perversion of this passage in the Matsya; नाभागस्याम्बतरीषस्तु धृष्ट्यच सुतत्रयः। Ambarīṣa was the son of Nābhāga; and Dhṛṣṭa had three sons.'

8. This story has been modified apparently at different periods, according to a progressive horror of the crime. Our text simply states the fact. The Vāyu says he was hungry and not only killed, but ate the cow of his spiritual preceptor, Cyavana. In the Mārkaṇḍeya he is described as being out a hunting and killing the cow of the father of Bābhravya, mistaking it for a Gavaya or Gayal. The Bhāgavata, as usual, improves upon the story and says that Prṣadhra was appointed by his Guru Vasiṭha to protect his cattle. In the night a tiger made his way into the fold and the prince in his haste and the dark, killed the cow upon which he had fastened, instead of the tiger. In all the authorities the effect is the same and the imprecation of the offended sage degraded Prṣadhra to the caste of Śūdra. According to the Bhāgavata, the prince led a life of devotion and perishing in the flame of a forest, obtained final liberation. The obvious purpose of this legend and of some that follow, is to account for the origin of the different castes from one common ancestor.

9. The Bhāgavata also places the Kārūṣas in the north; उत्तरपथगोपारः but the country of the Kārūṣas is usually placed upon the Paripātra or Vindhya mountains (See Bk. II. Ch. III. n. 13).

10. The Vāyu has Nābhāga, the son of Ariṣṭa; नाभागोरिष्टुत्रस्तुः। the Mārkaṇḍeya has, the son of Diṣṭa; दिष्टुत्रस्तनुराभागः। the Bhāgavata also calls him the son of Diṣṭa. According to that authority, he became a Vaiśya by his actions. The other Purāṇas generally agree that the descendants of this person became Vaiśyas; but the Matsya and Vāyu do not notice it. The Mārkaṇḍeya details a story of Nābhāga's carrying off and marrying the daughter of a Vaiśya; in consequence of which he was degraded, it is said, to the same caste and deprived of his share of the patrimonial sovereignty, which his son and successor recovered. The Brahma Purāṇa and Hari Varnśa assert that two sons of Nābhāgāriṣṭa again became Brāhmaṇas; but the duties of royalty imply the Kṣatriya caste of his posterity; and the commentator on our text observes that the son of Nābhāga was born before his father's degradation and consequently the race continued Kṣatriya; an assertion unsupported by any authority and it must therefore appear that a race of Vaiśya princes was recognised by early traditions.

11. Bhanandana : Bhāgavata.

12. Vatsaprīti : Bhāgavata, Vatsasrī : Mārkandeya. The latter has a story of the destruction of the Daitya Kujāmbha by Vidūratha, the father of Sunandra, the wife of Vatsasrī. The Vāyu has Sahasrāri.

13. Pramati : Bhāgavata.

14. According to the Mārkandeya, the priests of the royal family conspired against this prince and were put to death by his ministers.

15. Cakṣuṣa : Bhāgavata.

16. Vīra : Mārkandeya.

17. Rambhā precedes Vivirhāti : Bhāgavata.

18. Balāśva or Balakāśva or Subalāśva, according to the Mārkandeya, which explains his name Karandhamā to denote his creation of an army, when besieged by his revolted tributaries, by breathing on his hands (करं + थमः).

19. Both forms occur, as the commentator observes; अविक्षेरेव क्वचिदविक्षिदित्यपि। The Mārkandeya has a long story of this prince's carrying off the daughter of Viśāla, king of Vaidiśa. Being attacked and captured by his confederated rivals, he was rescued by his father, but was so much mortified by his disgrace, that he vowed never to marry nor reign. The princess, also becoming an ascetic, met with him in the woods and they were finally espoused; but Avikṣit kept his other vow and relinquished his succession in favour of his son, who succeeded to the kingdoms of both Karandhamā and Viśāla.

20. Most of our authorities quote the same words, with or without addition. The Vāyu adds, that the sacrifice was conducted by Saṁvartta, whom the Bhāgavata terms a Yogi, the son of Aṅgiras; and that Bṛhaspati was so jealous of the splendour of the rite, that a great quarrel (महान् विवादः) ensued between him and Saṁvartta. How it involved the king is not told, but apparently in consequence, Marutta, with his kindred and friends, was taken by Saṁvartta to heaven : सम्वर्त्ते दिवं नीतः ससुहृत् सहबान्धवैः। According to the Mārkandeya, Marutta was so named from the paternal benediction, 'May the winds be yours,' or 'be propitious to you' (मरुत् तव). He reigned, agreeably to that record, 85000 years.

21. Omitted in the Bhāgavata.

22. A rather chivalric and curious story is told of Dama in the Mārkandeya. His bride Sumanā, daughter of the king Daśarha, was rescued by him from his rivals. One of them, Bapuṣmat, afterwards killed Marutta, who had retired into the woods, after relinquishing his crown to his son. Dama in retaliation killed Bapuṣmat and made the Piṇḍa or obsequial offering to his father, of his flesh; with the remainder he fed the Brāhmaṇas of Rākṣasas origin : such were the kings of the solar race. बपुष्तत्र मांसेन पिण्डदानं चकार ह। ब्राह्मणान् भोजयामास रक्षःकुलसमुद्देवान्॥ एवं विधा हि राजानो बभूतुः सूर्यवेशजाः॥

23. The Bhāgavata has Bandhavat, Oghavat and Bandha.

24. The Vāyu and Bhāgavata both add that she was the wife of Viśravas and mother of Kubera. In the Linga Purāṇa, she is said to have been the wife of Pulastya and mother of Viśravas. The weight of authority is in favour of the former statement. See Bk. I. Ch. X. n. 5.

25. The Bhāgavata names three sons, Viśāla, Śūnyabandhu and Dhūmaketu. Vaiśālī is a city of considerable renown in Indian tradition, but its site is a subject of some uncertainty. Part of the difficulty arises from confounding it with Viśālā, another name of Ujjain; उज्जयिनी स्याद्विशाला। Hemacandra. Also in the Meghadūta, प्राप्याकर्त्ती पूर्वोद्दिष्टमनुसरपुरीं श्रीविशालीं। 'Having arrived at Avantī, proceed to the illustrious city before indicated, Viśāla!' विशालाभिधानमुजयिनीं पुरीं। To the city Ujjayini named Viśālā. Comment. Vaiśālī however appears to be very differently situated. According to the Buddhists, amongst whom it is celebrated as a chief seat of the labours of Śākyā and his first disciples, it is the same as Prayāga or Allahabad; but the Rāmāyaṇa (I. 45) places it much lower down, on the north bank of the Ganges, nearly opposite to the mouth of the Sone; and it was therefore in the modern district of Sāran as Hamilton (Genealogies of the Hindus) conjectured. In the fourth century it was known to the Chinese traveller Fa-hian as Phishe-li, on the right bank of the Gaṇḍaka not far from its confluence with the Ganges. Account of the Foekue-ki : Trans. R. As. Soc. no. IX, p. 128.

26. Dhumrākṣa and Samyama : Bhāgavata.
 27. The text is clear enough; सुजयात् सहदेवस्ततः कृशाशः । but, as elsewhere noticed (Hindu Theatre, II. 296), the commentator on the Bhāgavata interprets the parallel passage, संयमादासीत् कृशाशः सहदेवजः । very differently or सहदेवजः देवजेन सहितः । 'Kriśāśva with Devaja' or as some copies read, Devaka or Daivata, as if there were two sons of Samyama.

28. The Bhāgavata changes the order of these two, making Janamejaya the son of Sumati; or Pramati, Vāyu, Sumati, king of Vaiśālt, is made contemporary with Rāma : Rāmāyaṇa, I. 47. 17. The dynasty of Vaiśāla kings is found only in our text, the Vāyu and Bhāgavata. Hamilton places them from 1920 to 1940 B.C.; but the latter is incompatible with the date he assigns to Rāma, of 1700 B.C. The contemporary existence of Sumati and Rāma, however, is rather unintelligible, as, according to our lists, the former is the thirty-fourth and the latter the sixtieth, from Vaivasvata Manu.

29. The circumstances of their marriage, of Cyavana's appropriating a share of offerings to the Aśvinikumāras and of his quarrel with Indra in consequence, are told in detail in the Bhāgavata and Padma Purāṇas.

30. In most of the other Purāṇas, Reva or Raiva. The Liṅga and Matsya insert a Rocamāna before him; and the Bhāgavata adds to Ānartta, Uttānavarhiṣ and Bhūriṣeṇa.

31. The Bhāgavata ascribes the foundation of Kuśasthalī to Revata, who built it, it is said, within the sea : अन्तः समुद्रे । The subsequent legend shows that it was the same or on the same spot, as Dvārakā; and Ānartta was therefore part of Kutch or Gujarat. See Bk. II. Ch. III. n. 77.

32. So called from its many Dvāras or gateways : पुरीं द्वारवती नाम बहुद्वारां मनोरमां ।—Vāyu.

33. The object of this legend, which is told by most of the authorities, is obviously to account for the anachronism of making Balarāma contemporary with Raivata; the one early in the Tretā age and the other at the close of the Dvāpara.

Ikṣvāku was born from the nostril of the Manu, as he happened to sneeze.⁷ He had a hundred sons, of whom the three most distinguished were Vikukṣi, Nimi and Daṇḍa. Fifty of the rest, under Śakuni, were the protectors of the northern countries. Forty-eight were the princes of the south.⁸

Upon one of the days called Aṣṭvaka,⁹ Ikṣvāku being desirous of celebrating obsequies, ordered Vikukṣi to bring him flesh suitable for the offering. The prince accordingly went into the forest and killed many deer and other wild animals, for the celebration. Being weary with the chase and being hungered, he sat down and ate a hare; after which, being refreshed, he carried the rest of the game to his father. Vasiṣṭha, the family priest of the house of Ikṣvāku, was summoned to consecrate the food; but he declared that it was impure, in consequence of Vikukṣi's having eaten a hare from amongst it (making it thus, as it were, the residue of his meal). Vikukṣi was in consequence abandoned by his offended father an the epithet Śāśāda (hare eater) was affixed to him by the Guru. On the death of Ikṣvāku, the dominion of the earth descended to Śāśāda,¹⁰ who was succeeded by his son Parañjaya.

In the Tretā age a violent war¹¹ broke out between the gods and the Asuras, in which the former were vanquished. They consequently had recourse to Viṣṇu for assistance and propitiated him by their adoration. The eternal ruler of the universe, Nārāyaṇa, had compassion upon them and said, "What you desire is known unto me. Hear how your wishes shall be fulfilled.

There is an illustrious prince named Parañjaya, the son of a royal sage; into his person I will infuse a portion of myself and having descended upon earth I will in his person subdue all your enemies. Do you therefore endeavour to secure the aid of Parañjaya for the destruction of your foes." Acknowledging with reverence the kindness of the deity, the immortals quitted his presence and repaired to Parañjaya, whom they thus addressed :

"Most renowned Kṣatriya, we have come to you to solicit your alliance against our enemies : it will not become you to disappoint our hopes."

The prince replied, "Let this your Indra, the monarch of the spheres, the god of a hundred sacrifices, consent to carry me upon his shoulders and I will wage battle with your adversaries as your ally." The gods and Indra readily answered, "So be it"; and the latter assuming the shape of a bull, the prince mounted upon his shoulder. Being then filled with delight and invigorated by the power of the eternal ruler of all movable and immovable things, he destroyed in the battle that ensued all the enemies of the gods; and because he annihilated the demon host while seated upon the shoulder (or the hump, Kakud) of the bull, he then obtained the appellation Kakutstha (seated on the hump¹²).

The son of Śravasta was Brhadaśva, whose son was Kuvalayāśva. This prince, inspired with the spirit of Viśnu, destroyed the Asura Dhundhu, who had harassed the pious sage Uttanka; and he was then entitled Dhundhumāra.¹⁷ In his conflict with the demon the king was attended by his sons, to the number of twenty-one thousand; and all these, with the exception of only three, perished in the engagement, consumed by the fiery breath of Dhundhu. The three who survived were Dṛḍhāśva, Candrāśva Yuvanāśva had no son, at which he was deeply grieved. While residing in the vicinage of the holy Munis, he inspired them with pity for his childless condition and they instituted a religious rite to procure him progeny. One night during its performance the sages having placed a vessel of consecrated water upon the altar had retired to repose. It was past midnight, when the king awoke, exceedingly thirsty; and unwilling to disturb any of the holy inmates of the dwelling, he looked about for something to drink. In his search he came to the water in the jar, which had been sanctified and endowed with prolific efficacy by sacred texts and he drank it. When the Munis rose and found that the water had been drunk, they inquired who had taken it and said, "The queen that has drunk this water shall give birth to a mighty and valiant son." "It was I," exclaimed the Rājā, "who unwittingly drank the water!" and accordingly in the belly of Yuvanāśva was conceived a child and it grew and in due time it ripped open the right side of the Rājā and was born and the Rājā did not die. Upon the birth of the child, "who will be its nurse?" said the Munis; when Indra, the king of the gods, appeared and said, "He shall have me for his nurse" (mām dhāsyati); and hence the boy was named Māndhātri. Indra put his forefinger into the mouth of the infant, who sucked it and drew from it heavenly nectar; and he grew up and became a mighty monarch and reduced the seven continental zones under his dominion. And here a verse is recited; "From the rising to the going down of the sun, all that is irradiated by his light, is the land of Māndhātri, the son of Yuvanāśva."¹⁹

The devout sage Saubhari, learned in the Vedas, had spent twelve years immersed in a piece of water; the sovereign of the fish in which, named Sammada, of large bulk, had a very numerous progeny. His children and his grandchildren were wont to frolic around him in all directions and he lived amongst them happily, playing with them night and day. Saubhari the sage, being disturbed in devotions by their sports, contemplated the patriarchal felicity of the monarch of the lake and reflected, "How enviable is this creature, who, although born in a degraded state of being, is ever thus sporting cheerfully amongst his offspring and their young. Of a truth he awakens in my mind the wish to taste such pleasure and I also will make merry amidst my children."

As soon as he was informed of the arrival of the sage, the king rose up from his throne, offered him the customary libation and treated him with the most profound respect. Having taken a seat, Saubhari said to the Rājā, "I have determined to marry : do you, king, give me one of your daughters as a wife : disappoint not my affection. It is not the practice of the princes of the race of Kakutstha to turn away from compliance with the wishes of those who come to them for succour. There are, O monarch, other kings of the earth to whom daughters have been born, but your family is above all renowned for observance of liberality in your donations to those who ask your bounty. You have, O prince, fifty daughters; give one of them to me, so that I may be relieved from the anxiety I suffer through fear that my suit may be denied."

When Māndhātā heard this request and looked upon the person of the sage, emaciated by austerity and old age, he felt disposed to refuse his consent; but dreading to incur the anger and imprecation of the holy man, he was much perplexed and declining his head, was lost awhile in thought.

To this, the king, apprehensive of his displeasure, answered and said, "Grave sir, it is the established usage of our house to wed our daughters to such persons only as they shall themselves select from suitors of fitting rank; and since this your request is not yet made known to my maidens, it is impossible to say whether it may be equally agreeable to them as it is to me. This is the occasion of my perplexity and I am at a loss what to do." This answer of the king was fully understood by the Ṛṣi, who said to himself, "This is merely a device of the Rājā to evade compliance with my suit : he has reflected that I am an old man, having no attractions for women and not likely to be accepted by any of his daughters : even be it so; I will be a match for him;" and he then spoke aloud and said, "Since such is the custom, mighty prince, give orders that I be admitted into the interior of the place.

Māndhātā, unwilling to provoke the indignation of the Muni, was accordingly obliged to command the eunuch to lead the sage into the inner chambers; who, as he entered the apartments, put on a form and features of beauty far exceeding the personal charms of mortals or even of heavenly spirits. His conductor, addressing the princesses, said to them, "Your father, young ladies, sends you this pious sage, who has demanded of him a bride; and the Rājā has promised him, that he will not refuse him any one of you who shall choose him for her husband." When the damsels heard this and looked upon the person of the Ṛṣi, they were equally inspired with passion and desire and like a troop of female elephants disputing the favours of the master of the herd, they all contended for the choice.

"Away, away, sister!" said each to the other; "this is my election, he is my choice; he is not a meet bridegroom for you; he has been created by Brahmā on purpose for me, as I have been created in order to become his wife : he has been chosen by me before you; you have no right to prevent his becoming my husband." In this way arose a violent quarrel amongst the daughters of the king, each insisting upon the exclusive election of the Ṛṣi; and as the blameless sage was thus contended for by the rival princess, the superintendent of the inner apartments, with a downcast look, reported to the king what had occurred.

Perplexed more than ever by this information, the Rājā exclaimed, "What is all this! and what am I to do now! What is it that I have said!" and at last, although with extreme reluctance, he was obliged to agree that the Ṛṣi should marry all his daughters. Having then wedded, agreeably to law, all the princesses, the sage took them home to his habitation, where he employed the chief of architects, Viśvakarman, equal in taste and skill to Brahmā himself, to construct separate palaces for each of his wives; he ordered him to provide each building with elegant couches and seats and furniture and to attach to them gardens and groves, with reservoirs of water, where the wild-duck and the swan should sport amidst beds of lotus flowers. The divine artist obeyed his injunctions and constructed splendid apartments for the wives of the Ṛṣi; in which by command of Saubhari, the inexhaustible and divine treasure called Nanda²¹ took up his permanent abode and the princesses entertained all their guests and dependants with abundant viands of every description and the choicest quality.

After some period had elapsed, the heart of king Māndhātri yearned for his daughters and he left solicitous to know whether they were happily circumstanced. Setting off therefore on a visit to the hermitage of Saubhari, he beheld upon his arrival a row of beautiful crystal palaces, shining as brilliantly as the rays of the sun and situated amidst lovely gardens and reservoirs of pellucid water. Entering into one of these magnificent palaces, he found and embraced a daughter and said to her, as the tears of affection and delight trembled in his eyes, "Dear child, tell me how it is with you. Are you happy here? Or not?

Does the great sage treat you with tenderness? or do you revert with regret to your early home?" The princess replied, "You behold, my father, how delightful a mansion I inhabit, surrounded by lovely gardens and lakes, where the lotus blooms and the wild swans murmur. Here I have delicious viands, fragrant unguents, costly ornaments, splendid raiment, soft beds and every enjoyment that affluence can procure. Why then should I call to memory the place of birth? I have only one cause of anxiety, which is this; my husband is never absent from my dwelling : solely attached to me, he is always at my side; he never goes near my sisters; and I am concerned to think that they must feel mortified by his neglect; the only circumstance that gives me uneasiness."

Proceeding to visit another of his daughters, the king, after embracing her and sitting down, made the same inquiry and received the same account of the complaint, that the Ṛṣi was wholly devoted to her and paid no attention to her sisters. In every place Māndhātri heard the same story from each of his daughters in reply to his questions; and with a heart overflowing with wonder and delight he repaired to the wise Saubhari, whom he found alone and after paying homage to him, thus addressed him :

दृष्टसे भगवन् सूमहानेष सिद्धिप्रभावो नैवंविद्यमन्यस्य

"Holy sage, I have witnessed this your marvellous power; you like miraculous faculties I have never known any other to possess. How great is the reward of your devout austerities! Having thus saluted the sage and been received by him with respect, the Rājā resided with him for some time, partaking of the pleasures of the place and then returned to his capital.

In the course of time the daughters of Māndhātri bore to Saubhari a hundred and fifty sons and day by day his affection for his children became more intense and his heart was wholly occupied with the sentiment of self.²² "These my sons," he loved to think, "will charm me with their infant prattle; then they will learn to walk; they will then grow up to youth and to manhood : I shall see them married and they will have children; and I may behold the children of those children." By these and similar reflections, however, he perceived that his anticipation's every day outstripped the course of time and at last he exclaimed, "What exceeding folly is mine!

There is no end to my desires. Though all I hope should come to pass for ten thousand or a hundred thousand years, still new wishes would spring up.

The sources of affliction will be repeatedly renewed by their children and by their espousals and by their progeny and will be infinitely increased : a married life is a mine of individual anxiety.

My devotions, first disturbed by the fish of the pool, have since been obstructed by temporal indulgence and I have been beguiled by that desire for progeny which was communicated to me by association with Sanimada. Separation from the world is the only path of the sage to final liberation : from commerce with mankind innumerable errors proceed.

My intellect has been a pray to the desire of married happiness; but I will now so exert myself for the salvation of my soul, that, exempt from human imperfections, I may be exonerated from human sufferings. To that end I will propitiate, by arduous penance, Viṣṇu, the creator of the universe, whose form is inscrutable, who is smaller than the smallest, large than the largest, the source of darkness and of light, the sovereign god of gods.

To him I fly for refuge; to that Viṣṇu, who is the teacher of teachers, who is one will all beings, the pure eternal lord of all, without beginning, middle or end and besides whom is nothing."

NOTES

- According to the Vāyu, the brothers of Raiyata founded a celebrated race called Śāryāta, from Śaryāti. The Brahma Purāṇa says they took refuge in secret places (gahana); for which the Hari Varmśa substitutes (parvata gaṇa) mountains. The Vāyu has neither and says merely that they were renowned in all regions : विख्याता दिक्षु सर्वासु।

2. So the Vāyu, Liṅga, Agni, Brahmā and Hari Varmśa. The Matsya names three sons of Dhṛṣṭa, Dhṛṣṭaketu, Citranātha and Raṇadhṛṣṭa. The Bhāgavata adds, that the sons of Dhṛṣṭa obtained Brahmanhood upon earth, though born Kṣatriyas : धृष्टाद्वार्षमधूत क्षत्रं त्रैभूयं गते क्षिते।

3. But who is Nabhāga ? for, as above observed, e. i. n. 2, the son of the Manu is Nabhāga-nediṣṭa and there is in that case no such person as Nabhāga : on the other hand, if Nabhāga and Nediṣṭa be distinct names, we have ten sons of Vaivasvata, as in the Bhāgavata. The descendants of Nediṣṭa, through his son Nabhāga, have been already specified; and after all, therefore, we must consider the text as intending a distinct person by the name Nabhāga; and such a name does occur in the lists of the Agni, Kūrma, Matsya and Bhāgavata, unquestionably distinct from that with which it is also sometimes compounded. The Bhāgavata repeats the legend of the Aitareya Brāhmaṇa with some additions and says that Nabhāga having protracted his period of study beyond the usual age, his brothers appropriated his share of the patrimony. On his applying for his portion, they consigned their father to him, by whose advice he assisted the descendants of Āngiras in a sacrifice and they presented him with all the wealth that was left at its termination. Rudra claimed it as his; and Nabhāga acquiescing, the god confirmed the gift, by which he became possessed of an equivalent for the loss of territory. Most of the authorities recognise but one name here, variously read either Nabhāga or Nābhāga, the father of Ambarīṣa. The Vāyu, as well as the Bhāgavata, concurs with the text.

4. The Bhāgavata considers Ambarīṣa as a king, who reigned apparently on the banks of the Yamunā. He is more celebrated as a devout worshipper of Viṣṇu, whose discus protected him from the wrath of Durvāsas and humbled that choleric saint, who was a portion of Śiva : a legend which possibly records a struggle between two sects, in which the votaries of Viṣṇu, headed by Ambarīṣa, triumphed.

5. The Agni, Brahma and Matsya stop with Ambarīṣa. The Vāyu and Bhāgavata proceed as in the text, only the latter adds to Virūpa, Ketumat and Śambhu.

6. The same verse is cited in the Vāyu and affords an instance of a mixture of character, of which several similar cases occur subsequently. Kṣatriyas by birth, become Brāhmaṇas by profession; and such persons are usually considered as Āngirāsas, followers of descendants of Āngiras, who may have founded a school of warrior-priests. This is the obvious purpose of the legend of Nabhāga's assisting the sons of Āngiras to complete their sacrifice, referred to in a former note, although the same authority has devised a different explanation. Rathīnara (or Rathītara, as read in some copies, as well as by the Bhāgavata and Vāyu) being childless, Āngiras begot on his wife sons radiant with divine glory, who as the sons of the monarch by his wife were Kṣatriyas, but were Brāhmaṇas through their actual father. This however is an after thought, not warranted by the memorial verse cited in our text.

7. So the Bhāgavata : क्षुवतस्तु मनोर्जसे इक्ष्वाकुप्राणितः सुतः।

8. The Matsya says that Indra (Devarāṭ) was born as Vikukṣi and that Ikṣvāku had one hundred and fourteen others sons, who were kings of the countries south of Meru; and as many who reigned north of that mountain. The Vāyu and most of the other authorities agree in the number of one hundred, of whom fifty, with Śakuni at their head, are placed in the north; and forty-eight in the south, according to the Vāyu, of whom Vimati was the chief. The same authority specifies also Nimi and Daṇḍa as sons of Ikṣvāku, as does the Bhāgavata, with the addition of their reigning in the central regions. The distribution of the rest in that work is twenty-five in the west, as many in the east and the rest elsewhere; that is, the commentator adds, north and south. It seems very probably that by these sons of Ikṣvāku we are to understand colonies or settlers in various parts of India.

9. See Bk. III. Ch. XIV.

10. The Vāyu states that he was king of Ayodhyā, after the death of Ikṣvāku. The story occurs in all the authorities, more or less in detail.

11. The Vāyu says it was in the war of the starting and the stork; आडीचके युद्धे। a conflict between Vasiṣṭha and Viśvāmitra, metamorphosed into birds, according to the Bhāgavata; but that work assigns it to a different period or the reign of Hariścandra. If the tradition have any import, it may refer to the ensigns of the contending parties; for banners, with armorial devices, were, as we learn from the Mahābhārata, invariably borne by princes and leaders.

12. The Bhāgavata adds, that he captured the city of the Asuras, situated in the west; when his name Parañjaya, 'victor of the city:' he is also termed Paranjaya, 'vanquisher of foes;' he is also called Indravāha, 'borne by Indra'.

13. Suyodhana : Matsya, Agni, Kūrma.

14. Viśvaka : Liṅga, Viśvagandhi; Bhāgavata Viṣṭarāśva; Brahma Purāṇa and Hari Varṇśa.

15. Āndhra; Vāyu, Āyu; Agni, Candra; Bhāgavata.

16. Śāvasta and Śāvasti : Bhāgavata, Śravastī; Matsya, Liṅga and Kūrma, which also say that Śravastī was in the country of Gaura, which is Eastern Bengal; but it is more usually placed in Kośala by which a part of Avadha is commonly understood. In my Dictionary I have inserted Śrāvantī, upon the authority of the Trikāṇḍa Śeṣa, but it is no doubt an error for Śrāvasti; it is there also called Dharmapattana, being a city of some sanctity in the estimation of the Buddhists. It is termed by Fa-Hian, She-wei; by Hwan Tsang, She-lo-va-si-ti; and placed by both nearly in the site of Faizabad in Avadha. Account of the Foe-kue-ki.

17. This legend is told in much more detail in the Vāyu and Brahma Purāṇas. Dhundhu hid himself beneath a sea of sand, which Kuvalyāśva and his sons dug up, undeterred by the flames which checked their progress and finally destroyed most of them. The legend originates probably in the occurrence of some physical phenomenon, as an earthquake or volcano.

18. The series of names agrees very well to Sanhatāśva, called Varhnāśva in the Bhāgavata. We have there some variations and some details not noticed in our text. The Vāyu, Brahma, Agni, Liṅga, Matsya and Kūrma, ascribe two sons to Sanhatāśva, whom the two first name Krisāśva and Akriśāśva and the rest Krisāśva and Raṇāśva. Senajit or Prasenjit is generally, though not always, termed the son of the younger brother; but the commentator on the Hari Varṇśa calls him the son of Sanhatāśva, while the Matsya, Agni, Liṅga and Kūrma omit him and make Māndhātri the son of Ranāśva. The mother of Prasenjit and the wife of Akrśāśva or Sanhatāśva, according to the different interpretations, was the daughter of Himavat, known as Drṣadvatī, the river so termed (Bk. II. Ch. III. n. 7). The wife of Yuvanāśva, according to the Vāpu or of Prasenajit, according to the Brahma, was Gaurī, the daughter of Rantinara, who incurring the imprecation of her husband, became the Bāhudā river (Bk. II. Ch. III. n. 6). The Brahma and Hari Varṇśa call Yuvanāśva her son; but in another place the Hari Varṇśa contradicts itself, calling Gaurī the daughter of Matīmara, of the race of Puru, the mother of Māndhātri; here following apparently the Matsya, in which it is so stated. The Brahma Purāṇa is not guilty of the inconsistency. The Vāyu of course gives the title to Māndhātri, with the addition that he was called Gaurika, after his mother : तस्यास्तु गौरिकः पुत्रश्चकर्त्ता बभूव ह। मान्धाता यौवनाशो वै त्रैलोक्यविजयी नृपः॥ Māndhātri's birth from Gaurī is the more remarkable, as it is incompatible with the usual legend given in our text and in the Bhāgavata, which seems therefore to have been of subsequent origin, suggested by the etymology of the name. In the Bhāgavata, Māndhātri is also named Trasadasyu or the terrifier or thieves.

19. The Vāyu cites this same verse and another, with the remark, that they were uttered by those acquainted with the Purāṇas and with genealogies : अत्रायुदाहरन्तीमौ इलोकै पौराणिका द्विजाः। यावत्सूर्यस्य उदये यावदस्तमनं भवेत्। सर्वं-तद्यौवनाशस्य मान्धातुः क्षेत्रमुच्यते॥ अत्रायुदाहरन्तीमं इलोकं वंशविदो जनाः॥ यौवनाशं महात्मानं राजानमस्मितैजसं। मान्धातारं तनुं विष्णोः पुराणज्ञाः प्रचक्षते॥

20. The Brahma and Agni omit Ambarīṣa, for whom the Matsya substitutes Dharmasena. The following legend of Saubhari occurs elsewhere only in the Bhāgavata and there less in detail.

21. The great Nidhi : a Nidhi is a treasure, of which there are several belonging to Kubera; each has its guardian spirit or is personified.

22. Of Mamatā, 'mineness' (ममता); the notion that wives, children, wealth, belong to an individual and are essential to his happiness.

Having thus communed with himself, Saubhari abandoned his children, his home and all his splendour and accompanied by his wives, entered the forest, where he daily practised the observances followed by the ascetics termed Vaikhānasas (or anchorites having families), until he had cleansed himself from all sin. When his intellect had attained maturity, he concentrated in his spirit the sacramental fires¹ and became a religious mendicant. Then having consigned all his acts to the supreme, he obtained the condition of Acyuta, which knows no change and is not subject to the vicissitudes of birth, transmigration or death. Whoever reads or hears or remembers or understands, this legend of Saubhari and his espousal of the daughters of Māndhātri, shall never, for eight successive births, be addicted to evil thoughts nor shall he act unrighteously, nor shall his mind dwell upon improper objects, nor shall he be influenced by selfish attachments. The line of Māndhātā is now resumed.

The son of Ambarīṣa, the son of Māndhātā, was Yuvanāśva; his son was Harita,² from whom the Aṅgiras Hāritas were descended.³

In the regions below the earth the Gandharvas called Mauneyas (or sons of the Muni Kaśyapa), who were sixty millions in number, had defeated the tribes of the Nāgas or snake-gods and seized upon their most precious jewels and usurped their dominion. Deprived of their power by the Gandharvas, the serpent chiefs addressed the god of the gods, as he awoke from his slumbers; and the blossoms of his lotus eyes opened while listening to their hymns. They said, "Lord, how shall we be delivered from this great fear?" Then replied the first of males, who is without beginning, I will enter into the person of Purukutsa, the son of Māndhātri, the son of Yuvanāśva and in him will I quiet these iniquitous Gandharvas."

On hearing these words, the snake-gods bowed and withdrew and returning to their country dispatched Narmadā to solicit the aid of Purukutsa.⁴

Narmadā accordingly went to Purukutsa and conducted him to the regions below the earth, where, being filled with the might of the deity, he destroyed the Gandharvas. He then returned to his own palace; and the snake-gods, in acknowledgement of Narmadā's serviees, conferred upon her as a blessing, that whosoever should think of her and invoke her name, should never have any dread of the venom of snakes. This is the invocation; "Salutation be to Narmadā in the morning; salutation be to Narmadā at night; salutation be to you, O Narmadā! Defend me from the serpent's poison." Whoever repeats this day and night, shall never be bitten by a snake in the dark nor in entering a chamber; nor shall be who calls it to mind when he eats suffer my injury from poison, though it be mixed with his food. To Purukutsa also the snake-gods announced that the series of his descendants should never be cut off.

Purukutsa had a son by Narmadā named Trasadasyu, whose son was Sambhūta,⁵ whose son was Aranya, who was slain by Rāvaṇa in his triumphant progress through the nations. The son of Aranya was Prṣadaśva; his son was Haryyaśva; his son was Sumanas;⁶ his son was Tridhanvan; his son was Trayyāruṇa; and his son was Satyavrata, who obtained the appellation of Triśaṅku and was degraded to the condition of a Cāñḍāla or outcast.⁷ During a twelve years' famine Triśaṅku provided the flesh of deer for the nourishment of the wife and children of Viśvāmitra, suspending it upon a spreading fig-tree on the borders of the Ganges, that the might not subject them to the indignity of receiving presents from an outcast. On this account Viśvāmitra, being highly pleased with him, elevated him in his living body to heaven.⁸

The son of Triśaṅku was Hariścandra;⁹ his son was Rohitāśva;¹⁰ his son was Harita;¹¹ his son was Cuīcu,¹² who had two sons named Vijaya and Sudeva. Ruruka¹³ was the son of Vijaya and his own son was Vṛka, whose son was Bāhu (or Bāhuka). This prince was vanquished by the tribe of Haihayas and Tālajaṅghas¹⁴ and his country was overrun by them; in consequence of which he fled into the forests with his wives. One of these was pregnant and being an object of jealousy to a rival queen, the latter gave her poison to prevent her delivery. The poison had the effect of confining the child in the womb for seven years. Bāhu, having waxed old, died in the neighbourhood of the residence of the Muni Aurva. His queen having constructed his pile, ascended it with the determination of accompanying him in death; but the sage Aurva, who knew all things, past, present and to come, issued forth from his hermitage and forbade her, saying, "Hold! hold! This is unrighteous; a valiant prince, the monarch of many realms, the offerer of many sacrifices, the destroyer of his foes, a universal emperor, is in your womb; think not of committing so desperate an act!" Accordingly, in obedience to his injunctions she relinquished her intention.

The sage then conducted her to his abode and after some time a very splendid boy was there born. Along with him the poison that had been given to his mother was expelled; and Aurva, after performing the ceremonies required at birth, gave him on that account the name of Sagara (from Sa, 'with' and Gara, 'poison'). The same holy sage celebrated his investiture with the cord of his class, instructed him fully in the Vedas and taught him the use of arms, especially those of fire, called after Bhārgava.

When the boy had grown up and was capable of reflection, he said to his mother one day, "Why are we dwelling in this hermitage? Where is my father? and who is he?" His mother, in reply, related to him all that had happened. Upon hearing which he was highly incensed and vowed to recover his patrimonial kingdom and exterminate the Haihayas and Tālajaṅghas, by whom it had been over-run. Accordingly when he became a man he put nearly the whole of the Haihayas to death and would have also destroyed the Śakas, the Yavanas, Kambojas, Pāradas and Pahnavas¹⁵, but that they applied to Vasiṣṭha, the family priest of Sagara, (or protection Vasiṣṭha regarding them as annihilated (or deprived of power), though living, thus spoke to Sagara: "Enough, enough, my son, pursue no further these objects of your wrath, whom you may look upon as no more.

In order to fulfil your vow I have separated them from affinity to the regenerate tribes and from the duties of their castes.¹⁶ Sagara, in compliance with the injunctions of his spiritual guide, contented himself therefore with imposing upon the vanquished nations peculiar distinguishing marks. He made the Yavanas shave (the upper) half of their heads; the Pāradas wore their hair long; and the Pahnavas let their beards grow. In obedience to his commands.¹⁷ Then also and other Ks atriya races, he deprived of the established usages of oblations to fire and the study of the Vedas; and thus separated from religious rites and abandoned by the Brāhmaṇas, these different tribes became Mlecchhas. Sagara, after the recovery of his kingdom, reigned over the seven-zoned earth with undisputed dominion¹⁸.

NOTES

1. So Manu; "Having reposed, as the law directs, the holy fires in his breast," VI.25.

2. The Vāyu, Liṅga, Kūrma and Bhāgavata agree in this series; the others omit it.

3. The words of the text are, तस्माद्विरितो यतोऽद्विरसो हरिता: I and the commentator explains the phrase, 'the Āṅgiras Brāhmaṇas, of whom the Hārita family was the chief.' The Linga reads, हरितो युवनाशस्य हरिता यत आत्मजा: I एते ह्यद्विरसपक्षे क्षत्रोपेता द्विजातयः: II 'Harita was the son of Yuvanāśva, whose sons were the Hāritas; they were on the part (or followers) of Āṅgiras and were Brāhmaṇas with the properties of Kṣatriyas.' The Vāyu has, हरितो युवनाशस्य हरितो भूर्यःस्मृतः: I एते ह्यद्विरसः पुत्राः क्षत्रोपेता द्विजातयः: II 'Harita was the son of Yuvanāśva, from whom were many called Hāritas; they were sons of Āṅgiras and Brāhmaṇas with the properties of Kṣatriyas.' The Bhāgavata has only, मान्धातृप्रवरा इमे। These (Ambarīṣa, Purukutsa and Harita) were, according to Śridhara Svāmī's comments, the chiefs of Māndhātri's descendants, being founders of three several branches; or it may mean, he says, merely that they had Māndhātri for their progenitor, Māndhātri being by some also named Āṅgiras, according to Aśvalāyana. It may be questioned if the compilers of the Purāṇas or their annotators, knew exactly what to make of this and similar phrases, although they were probably intended to intimate that some persons of Kṣatriya origin became the disciples of certain Brāhmaṇas, particularly of Āṅgiras and afterwards founders of schools of religious instruction themselves. Māndhātri himself is the author of a hymn in the R̥gveda. As. Res. VIII.385. Hārita is the name of an individual sage, considered as the son of Cyavana and to whom a work on law is attributed. It is probably rather that of a school, however, than of an individual.

4. Narmadā, the personified Narmadā river, was according to the Bhāgavata, the sister of the Nāgas.

5. We have some varieties here. Instead of Trasadasyu the Matsya has Dussaha, whom it makes the husband of Narmadā and father of Sambhūti, the father of Tridhanvan. The Bhāgavata omits Sambhūti; the Liṅga makes him the brother of Trasadasyu; and the Agni has in his place Sudhanvan.

6. Viṣadaśva : Vāyu. The Matsya, Agni and Brahma omit all between Sambhūta and Tridhanvan. The Bhāgavata has a rather different series or Aranya, Haryyaśva, Aruṇa, Tribandhana, Triśāṅku. As Anaranya is famous in Hindu story and Trayyāruṇa is a contributor to the R̥gveda, their omission shows careless compilation.

7. The Vāyu states he was banished by his father for his wickedness (Adharama). The Brahma Purāṇa and Hari Vaṁśa details his iniquity at length; and it is told more concisely in the Liṅga. He carried off the betrothed wife of another man, one of the citizens according to the two former of Vidarbha according to the latter : for this, his father, by the advice of Vasiṣṭha, banished him and he took refuge with Śvapakas. The Rāmāyaṇa has a different story and ascribes Triśāṅku's degradation to the curse of the sons of Vasiṣṭha, to whom the king had applied to conduct his sacrifice, after their father had refused to do so. Before that, he is described as a pious prince (सत्यवादी जितेन्द्रियः) and the object of his sacrifice was to ascend to heaven.

8. The occurrence of the famine and Satyavrata's care of the wife and family of Viśvāmitra, are told, with some variations, in the Vāyu, which has been followed by the Brahma and Hari Vaṁśa. During the famine, when game fails he kills the cow of Vasiṣṭha; and for the three crimes of displeasing his father, killing a cow and eating flesh not previously consecrated, he acquires the name of Triśāṅku (tri, 'three', śāṅku, 'sin'). Vasiṣṭha refusing to perform his regal inauguration, Viśvāmitra celebrates the rites and on his death elevates the king in his mortal body to heaven. The Rāmāyaṇa relates the same circumstance, but assigns to it a different motive. Viśvāmitra's resentment of the gods to attend Triśāṅku sacrifice. That work also describes the attempt of the gods to cast the king down upon earth and the compromise between them and Viśvāmitra, by which Triśāṅku was left suspended, head downwards, in mid-air, forming a constellation in the southern hemisphere, along with other new planets and stars formed by Viśvāmitra. The Bhāgavata has an allusion to this legend, saying that Triśaṅku is still visible in heaven : अद्यापि दिवि दृश्यते। The Vāyu furnishes some further information from an older source : अत्राप्युदाहरन्तीमौ श्लोकौ पौराणिकाः जना। विश्वामित्रप्रसादेन त्रिशङ्कुर्दिवि राजते। देवैः सार्द्धं महातेजाऽनुग्रहात्स्य धीमतः। शनैयोर्ति....रस्या हेमते चन्द्रमण्डिता। अलंकृता त्रिभिर्यमैस्त्रिशङ्कुग्रहभूषिता॥ Both my copies leave a blank where it is marked and similar passage does not elsewhere occur; but the word should probably be निशा and the whole may be thus rendered : 'Men aquatinted with the Purāṇas recite these two stanzas; "By the favour of Viśvāmitra the illustrious Triśaṅku shines in heaven along with the gods, through the kindness of that sage. Slowly passes the lovely night in winter, embellished by the moon, decorated with three watches and ornaments with the constellation Triśaṅku." This legend is therefore clearly astronomical and alludes possibly to some reformation of the sphere by Viśvāmitra, under the patronage of Triśaṅku and in opposition to a more ancient system advocated by the school of Vasiṣṭha. It might be no very rash conjecture perhaps, to identify Triśaṅku with Orion, the three bright stars of whose belt may have suggested the three Śaṅkus (stakes or pins) which form his name.

9. The Paurāṇik lists generally dismiss Hariścandra very summarily, but he makes a conspicuous figure in legends of an apparently later date. In the Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parva, it is stated that he resides in the court of Indra, to which he was elevated for his performance of the Rājasūya sacrifice and for his unbounded liberality. This seems to have served as the ground work of the tale told in the Mārkanḍeya and Padma Purāṇas, of his having given his whole country, his wife and son and finally himself, to Viśvāmitra, in satisfaction of his demands for Dakṣinā. In consequence he was elevated with his subjects to heaven, from when, having been insidiously led by Nārada to boast of his merits, he was again precipitated. His repentance of his pride, however, arrested his downward descent and he and his train paused in mid-air. The city of Hariścandra is popularly believed to be at times still visible in the skies. The indignation of Vasiṣṭha at Viśvāmitra's insatiableness produced a quarrel, in which their mutual imprecations changed them to two birds, the Śarāli, a sort of Turdus and the Vaka or Crane. In these forms they fought for a considerable term, until Brahmā interposed and reconciled them. The Bhāgavata alludes to this story, in its notice of Hariścandra; but the Vāyu refers the conflict to the reign of a different prince : see c. 2.n.11. According to the Śiva Purāṇa, Hariścandra was an especial worshipper of that deity; and his wife Satyavatī was form of Jayā, one of Durga's handmaids.

10. Also read Rohita. Traces of his name appear in the strongholds of Rohtas, in Bihar and in the Punjab. The Bhāgavata has a legend of his having been devoted to Varuṇa, before his birth, by his father, who having on various pleas deferred offering his son as promised, was afflicted by a dropsy. Rohita at last purchased Śunahśepas, who was offered as a victim in his stead : see hereafter, note on Śunaśepas.

11. Omitted : Agni, Liṅga and Matsya.

12. Omitted : Agni, Dhundhu : Linga and Kūrma. Campā, founder of Campāmālinī : Bhāgavata. But all other authorities make Campā a different person, a descendant of Aṅga : see family of Anu, of the lunar race.

13. Kuruka : Liṅga and Kūrma. Bharuk : Bhāgavata.

14. Descendants of Yadu. The first springs from a prince who is the twelfth and the second from one who is the eighteenth, in the lunar line and both are thus contemporary with a prince who is the thirty-fifth of the solar dynasty. The Vāyu adds, that they were assisted by Śakas, Yavanas, Kambojas, Pāravas and Pahlavas.

15. The Haihayas we shall have further occasion to notice. The Śakas are, no doubt, the Sacae or Sakai of the classical geographers, Scythians and Indo-Scythians, Turk of Tartar tribes, who established themselves, about a century and half before our era, along the western districts of India and who are not improbably connected with our Saxon forefathers. The Yavanas are the Ionians or Greeks. The Kambojas were a people on the northwest of India, of whom it is said that they were remarkable for a capital breed of horses. There is an apparent trace of their name in the Caumogeess of Kaferistan, who may have retreated to the mountains before the advance of the Turk tribes.

(Elphinstone's Caubul, 619 : see also before Bk.II.Ch.III.n.146). The Pāradas and Pahlavas or Pahnavas may designate other bordering tribes in the same that follows, the Bhāgavata enumerates Barbars. The Vāyu adds Māhiśikas, Caulas, Dārvas and Khasas : the two former of which are people on the Malabar and Coromandal coasts; the two latter are usually placed amongst the mountaineers of the Hindukuśa. The Brahma Purāṇa lengthens the list with the Kolas, the forest races of eastern Gonḍvānā; the Sarpas and the Keralas, who are the people of Mālābāra. The Hari Varṣa still further extends the enumeration with the Tuṣāras or Tokharas, the Turks of Tokharestan; the Chinas, Chinese; the between the Rāmāyaṇa particularly and the works of the era of Vikramāditya. It would seem more likely that the latter appellations were interpolated. It must have been a period of some antiquity, when all the nations from Bengal to the Coromandal coast were considered as Mlecchhas and outcasts.

great earnestness and the Muni pronounced this boon, that one wife should bear one son, the upholder of his race and the other should give birth to sixty thousand sons; and he left it to them to make their election. Keśinī chose to have the single son; Sumati the multitude : and it came to pass in a short time the former bore Asamañjas,² a prince through whom the dynasty continued and the daughter of Vinarā (Sumati) had sixty thousand sons. The son of Asamañjas was Añśumat.

Sumati the daughter of Kaśyapa and Keśinī the daughter of Rājā Vidarbha, were the two wives of Sagara.¹ Being without progeny, the king solicited the aid of the sage Aurva with Asamañjas was from his boyhood of very irregular conduct. His father hoped that as he grew up to manhood he would reform; but finding that he continued guilty of the same immorality, Sagara abandoned him. The sixty thousand sons of Sagara followed the example of their brother Asamañjas. The path of virtue and piety being obstructed in the world by the sons of Sagara, the gods repaired to the Muni Kalpa, who was a portion of Viṣṇu, free from fault and endowed with all true wisdom. Having approached him with respect, they said, "O lord, what will become of the world, if these sons of Sagara are permitted to go on in the evil ways which they have learned from Asamañjas! Do you, then, assume a visible form, for the protection of the afflicted universe." "Be satisfied," replied the sage, "in a brief time the sons of Sagara shall be all destroyed."

The youth, proceeding by the deep path which

Añśumat requested as a boon that his uncles,

At that period Sagara commenced the performance of the solemn sacrifice of a horse, who was guarded by his own sons : nevertheless some one stole the animal and carried it off into a chasm in the earth. Sagara commanded his sons to search for the steed; and they, tracing him by the impressions of his hoofs, followed his course with perseverance, until coming to the chasm where he had entered, they proceeded to enlarge it and dug downwards each for a league. Coming to Pātāla, they beheld the horse wandering freely about and at no great distance from him they saw the Rṣi Kapila sitting, with his head declined in meditation and illuminating the surrounding space with radiance as bright as the splendours of the autumnal sun, shining in an unclouded sky. Exclaiming, "This is the villain who has maliciously interrupted our sacrifice and stolen the horse! Kill him! Kill him!" They ran towards him with uplifted weapons. The Muni slowly raised his eyes and for an instant looked upon them and they were reduced to ashes by the sacred flame that darted from his person.³

"I have told you," replied Kapila, "that your grandson shall bring down upon earth the Ganges of the gods; and when her waters shall wash the bones and ashes of your grandfather's sons, they shall be raised to Svarga. Such is the efficacy of the stream that flows from the toe of Viṣṇu, that it confers heaven upon all who bathe in it designedly or who even become accidentally immersed in it; those even shall obtain Svarga, whose bones, skin, fibres, hair or any other part, shall be left after death upon the earth which is contiguous to the Ganges." Having acknowledged reverentially the kindness of the sage, Anśumat returned to his grandfather and delivered to him the horse. Sagara, on recovering the steed, completed his sacrifice; and in affectionate memory of his sons, denominated Sagara the chasm which they had dug.⁴

After some interval Saūdāsa celebrated a sacrifice, which was conducted by Vasiṣṭha. At the close of the rite Vasiṣṭha went out; when the Rākṣasa, the fellow of the one that had been killed in the figure of a tiger, assumed the semblance of Vasiṣṭha and came and said to the king, "Now that the sacrifice is ended, you must give me flesh to eat; let it be cooked and I will presently return." Having said this, he withdrew and transforming himself into the shape of the cook, dressed some human flesh, which he brought to the king, who, receiving it on a plate of gold, awaited the reappearance of Vasiṣṭha. As soon as the Muni returned, the king offered to him the dish. Vasiṣṭha surprised at such want of prosperity in the king, as his offering him meat to eat, considered what it should be that was so presented and by the efficacy of his meditation discovered that it was human flesh. His mind being agitated with wrath, he denounced a curse upon the Rājā, saying, "Inasmuch as you have insulted all such holy men as we are, by giving me what is not to be eaten, your appetite shall henceforth be excited by similar food."

"It was yourself," replied the Rājā to the indignant sage, "who commanded this food to be prepared." "By me!" Exclaimed Vasiṣṭha; "how could that have been?" and again having recourse to meditation, he detected the whole truth. Foregoing then all displeasure towards the king, he said, "The food to which I have sentenced you shall not be your sustenance forever; it shall only be so for twelve years."

The king, who had taken up water in the palms of his hands and was prepared to curse the Muni, now considered that Vasiṣṭha was his spiritual guide and being reminded by Madayantī his queen that it ill became him to denounce an imprecation upon a holy teacher, who was the guardian divinity of his race, abandoned his intention. Unwilling to cast the water upon the earth, lest it should wither up the grain, for it was impregnated with his malediction and equally reluctant to throw it up into the air, lest it should blast the clouds and dry up their contents, he threw it upon his own feet. Scalded by the heat which the water had derived from his angry imprecation, the feet of the Rājā became spotted black and white and he then obtained the name of Kalmāśapāda or he with the spotted (kalmāśa) feet (pāda). In consequence of the curse of Vasiṣṭha, the Rājā became a cannibal every sixth watch of the day for twelve years and in that state wandered through the forests and devoured multitudes of men.

On one occasion he beheld a holy person engaged in dalliance with his wife. As soon as they saw his terrific form, they were frightened and endeavoured to escape; but the regal Rākṣasa overtook and seized the husband. The wife of the Brāhmaṇa then also desisted from flight and earnestly entreated the savage to spare her lord, exclaiming, "You, Mitrasaha, are the pride of the royal house of Ikṣvāku, not a malignant fiend! It is not in your nature, who know the characters of women, to carry off and devour my husband." But all was in vain and regardless of her reiterated supplications, he ate the Brāhmaṇa, as a tiger devours a deer. The Brāhmaṇa's wife, furious with wrath, then addressed the Rājā and said, "Since you have barbarously disturbed the joys of a wedded pair and killed my husband, your death shall be the consequence of your associating with your queen." So saying, she entered the flames.

At the expiration of the period of his curse Saudāsa returned home. Being reminded of the imprecation of the Brāhmaṇī by his wife Madayantī, he abstained from conjugal intercourse and was in consequence childless; but having solicited the interposition of Vasiṣṭha, Madayantī became pregnant. The child, however, was not born for seven years, when the queen, becoming impatient, divided the womb with a sharp stone and was thereby delivered. The child was then called Aśmaka (from Aśmana, 'a stonc'). The son of Aśmaka was Mūlaka, who, when the warrior tribe was extirpated upon earth, was surrounded and concealed by a number of females; whence he was denominated Nārīkavaca (having women for armour)¹². The son of Mūlaka was Daśaratha; his son was Ilavila; his son was Viśvasha; his son was Khāṭvāṅga, called also Dilīpa¹³, who in a battle between the gods and the Asuras, being called by the former to their succour, killed a number of the latter. Having thus acquired the friendship of the deities in heaven, they desired him to demand a boon. He said to them, "If a boon is to be accepted by me, then tell me, as a favour, what is the duration of my life?" "The length of your life is but an hour," the gods replied. On which, Khāṭvāṅga, who was swift of motion, descended in his easy-gliding chariot to the world of mortals. Arrived there, he prayed, and said, "If my own soul has never been dearer to me than the sacred Brāhmaṇas, if I have never deviated from the discharge of my duty; if I have never regarded gods, men, animals, vegetables, all created things, as different from the imperishable; then may I, with unswerving step, attain to that divine being on whom holy sages meditate!" Having thus spoken, he was united with that supreme being, who is Vāsudeva; with that elder of all the gods, who is abstract existence and whose form cannot be described. Thus he obtained absorption, according to this stanza, which was repeated formerly by the seven Ṛṣis:

"Like unto Khāṭvāṅga will be no one upon earth, who having come from heaven and dwelt an hour amongst men, became united with the three worlds by his liberality and knowledge of truth"¹⁴.

The son of Khātvāṅga was Dīrgabhbā; his son was Raghu; his son was Aja; his son was Daśaratha¹⁵. The god from whose navel the lotus springs became fourfold, as the four sons of Daśaratha, Rāma, Lakṣmaṇa, Bharata and Śatruघna, for the protection of the world. Rāma, while yet a boy, accompanied Viśvāmitra, to protect his sacrifice and slew Tādakā. He afterwards killed Mārīca with his resistless shafts; and Subāhu and others fell by his arms. He removed the guilt of Ahalyā by merely looking upon her. In the palace of Janaka he broke with ease the mighty bow of Maheśvara and received the hand of Sītā, the daughter of the king, self-born from the earth, as the prize of his prowess. He humbled the pride of Paraśurāma, who vaunted his triumphs over the race of Haihaya and his repeated slayings of the Kṣatriya tribe. Obedient to the commands of his father and cherishing no regret for the loss of sovereignty, he entered the forest, accompanied by his brother Lakṣmaṇa and by his wife where he killed in conflict Virādha, Kharadūṣaṇa and other Rākṣasas, the headless giant Kabandha and Bāli the monkey monarch. Having built a bridge across the ocean and destroyed the whole Rākṣasas nation, he recovered his bride Sītā, whom their ten-headed king Rāvaṇa had carried off and returned to Ayodhyā with her, after she had been purified by the fiery ordeal from the soil contracted by her captivity and had been honoured by the assembled gods, who bore witness to her virtue.¹⁶

Bharata made himself master of the country of the Gandharvas, after destroying vast numbers of them; and Śatruघna having killed the Rākṣasas chief Lavaṇa, the son of Madhu, took possession of his capital Mathurā.

Having thus, by their unequalled valour and might, rescued the whole world from the dominion of malignant fiends, Rāma, Lakṣmaṇa, Bharata and Śatruघna reascended to heaven and were followed by those of the people of Kośala who were fervently devoted to these incarnate portions of the supreme Viṣṇu.

The son of Kuśa was Atithi; his son was Niṣadha; his son was Nala,¹⁸ his son was Nabhas; his son was Puṇḍarīka; his son was Kṣemadhanvan; his son was Devānīka; his son was Ahīnagu;¹⁹ his son was Pāripātra; his son was Dala;²⁰ his son was Chala;²¹ his son was Ukttha;²² his son was Vajranābha; his son was Śankhanābha;²³ his son was Abhyutthitāśva;²⁴ his son was Viśvasaha;²⁵ his son was Hiranyañābha, who was a pupil of the mighty Yogi Jaiminī and communicated the knowledge of spiritual exercise to Yājñavalkya.²⁶ The son of this saintly king was Puṣya; his son was Dhruvasandhi,²⁷ his son was Sudarśana; his son was Agnivarna; his son was Śighra; his son was Maru,²⁸ who through the power of devotion (Yoga) is still living in the village called Kalāpa and in a future age will be the restorer of the Kṣatriya race in the solar dynasty. Maru had a son named Praśūruta; his son was Susandhi; his son was Amarṣa; his son was Mahasvat,²⁹ his son was Viśrutavat;³⁰ and his son was Vrihadbala, who was killed in the great war by Abhimanyu, the son of Arjuna. These are the most distinguished princes in the family of Ikṣvāku : whoevr listens to the account of them will be purified from all his sins.³¹

1. So the Rāmāyaṇa, Sumati is called the daughter of Ariṣṭanemi : the Mahābhārata calls her Saivyā. The story of Sagara and his descendants is told at length in the Rāmāyaṇa, first book and in the Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, III. 106, et seq., as well as in most of the Purāṇas.

2. O Pañcajana : Brahma.

3. The Bhāgavata has, for a Purāṇa, some curious remarks on this part of the story, flatly denying its truth. न साधुर्वादो मुनिकोपभज्जिता नृपेन्द्रपुत्रा इति सत्त्वधामनि। कथं तमोरोषमयं विभाव्यते जगत्पवित्रात्मनि खे रजोभुवः। यस्येरिता सांख्यमयी दृढेहनौर्यते मुमुक्षुस्तरते दुरत्यवं। भवार्णवं मृत्युपथं विपश्चितः परात्मभूतस्य कथं पृथग्निः॥ "The report is not true, that the sons of the king were scorched by the wrath of the sage; for how can the quality of darkness, made up of anger, exist in a world-purifying nature, consisting of the quality of goodness; the dust of earth, as it were, in the sky? How should mental perturbation distract that sage, who was on with the supreme and who has promulgated that Saṅkhyā philosophy, which is a strong vessel, by which he who is desirous of liberation passes over the dangerous ocean of the world by the path of death?"

4. Sāgara is still the name of the ocean and especially of the Bay of Bengal, at the mouth of the Ganges. On the shore of the island called by the same name, tradition places a Kapilāśrama or hermitage of Kapila, which is still the scene of an annual pilgrimage. Other legends assign a very different situation for the abode of the ascetic or the foot of the Himālaya, where the Ganges descends to the plains. There would be no incompatibility, however, in the two sites, could we imagine the tradition referred to a period when the ocean washed, as it appears once to have done, the base of the Himālaya and Saugor (Sāgara) was at Haridvār.

5. Or Khātvāṅga : Brahma and Hari Varṇa : but this is apparent an error. See note 14.

6. Omitted : Matsya and Agni. Viśruta : Liṅga.

7. Nābhin : Bhāgavata.

8. Ayutāyus : Vāyu, Liṅga and Kūrma, Śrautāyū : Agni, Ayutajit : Brahma.

9. अक्षहृदयज्ञः 'knowing the heart of the dice'. The same epithet, as well as that of 'friend of Nala' is given him in the Vāyu, Bhāgavata and Brahma Purāṇas and in the Hari Varṇa and leaves no doubt of their referring to the hero of the story told in the Mahābhārata. Nala however, as we shall hereafter see, is some twenty generations later than Rituparṇa in the same family; and the Vāyu therefore thinks it necessary to observe that two Nalas are noticed in the Purāṇas and the one here adverted to is the son of Virasena; नलौ द्विविति विख्यातौ पुराणेषु दृढत्रौ। वीरसेनात्मजश्च यश्चक्षवाकुकुलोद्घः॥ while the other belongs to the family of Ikṣvāku. The same passage occurs in the Brahma Purāṇa and Hari Varṇa; and the commentator on the latter observes, निष्ठात्मजो नलो

वीरसेनसुतान्त्रलादन्योऽ। 'Nala the son of Niṣadha is different from Nala the son of Viśasena.' It is also to be observed, that the Nala of the tale is king of Niṣadha and his friend Rituparṇa is king of Ayodhyā. The Nala of the race of Ikṣvāku is king of Ayodhyā : he is the son of Niṣadha, however and there is evidently some confusion between the two. We do not find Viśasena or his son in any of the lists. See n. 19.

10. There is considerable variety in this part of the lists, but the Vāyu and Bhāgavata agree with our text. The Matsya and others make Kalmāśapāda the son or grandson of Rituparṇa and place Sarvakāma or Sarvakarman after him. See further on.

11. The Vāyu, Agni, Brahma and Hari Varnśa read Amitrasaha, 'foe-enduring'; but the commentator on our text explains it Mitra, a name of Vasiṣṭha, Saha, 'able to bear' the imprecation of; as in the following legend, which is similarly related in the Bhāgavata. It is not detailed in the Vāyu. A full account occurs in the Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, s.176, but with many and important variations. Kalmāśapāda, while hunting, encountered Śaktri, the son of Vasiṣṭha, in the woods; and on his refusing to make way, struck the sage with his whip. Śaktri cursed the king to become a cannibal; and Viśvāmitra, who had a quarrel with Vasiṣṭha, seized the opportunity to direct a Rākṣas to take possession of the king, that he might become the instrument of destroying the family of the rival saint. While thus influenced, Mitrasaha, a Brāhmaṇa, applied to Kalmāśapāda for food and the king commanded his cook to dress human flesh and give it to the Brāhmaṇa, who, knowing what it was, repeated the course of Śaktri, that the king should become a cannibal; which taking effect with double force. Kalmāśapāda began to eat men. One of his first victims was Śaktri, whom he slew and ate; and then killed and devoured, under the secret impulse of Viśvāmitra's demon, all the other sons of Vasiṣṭha. Vasiṣṭha however liberated him from the Rākṣasas who possessed him and restored him to his natural character. The imprecation of the Brāhmaṇa's wife and its consequences, are told in the Mahābhārata as in the text; but the story of the water falling on his feet appears to have grown out of the etymology of his name, which might have referred to some disease of the lower extremities the prince's designation being at length, Mitrasaha Saudāsa Kalmāśapāda or Mitrasaha, son of Sudāsa, with the swelled feet.

12. His name Mūlaka or 'the root', refers also to his being the stem whence the Kṣatriya races again proceeded. It may be doubted if the purpose of his title Nārikavaca is accurately explained by the text.

13. This prince is confounded with an earlier Dilīpa by the Brahma Purāṇa and Hari Varnśa.

14. The term for his obtaining final liberation is rather unusual; त्रयोऽभिसंहिता लोकाः 'By whom the three worlds were affected or beloved : विषयी कृताः' the three worlds being identified with their source or the supreme. The text says of this stanza, श्रूयते and the Vāyu, citing it, says इति श्रुतिः the legend is therefore from the Vedas.

15. The lists here differ very materially, as the following comparison will best show :

Viṣṇu	Matsya	Rāmāyaṇa
Kalmāśapāda	Kalmāśapāda	Kalmāśapāda
Aśmaka	Sarvakarman	Śankana
Mūlaka	Anaraṇya	Sudarśana
Daśaratha	Nighna	Agnivarṇa
Ilavila	Anamitra	Śīghraga
Viśvasaha	Raghu	Maru
Dilīpa	Dilīpa	Prasusruka
Dirghabāhu	Aja	Ambarīṣa
Raghu	Dirghabāhu	Nahuṣa
Aja	Ajapāla	Yayāti
Daśaratha	Daśaratha	Nābhāga
		Aja
		Daśaratha

The Vāyu, Bhāgavata, Kūrma and Linga agree with our text, except in the reading or a few names; as Śataratha for Daśaratha the first; Vairivīra for Ilavila; and Kritasarman, Vṛddhasarman or Vṛddhakarman, for Viśvasaha. The Agni and Brahma and Hari Varnśa agree with the second series, with similar occasional exceptions; showing that the Purāṇas admit two series, differing in name, but agreeing in number. The Rāmāyaṇa, however, differs from both in a very extraordinary manner and the variation is not limited to the cases specified, as it begins with Bhagīratha, as follows :

Purāṇas	Rāmāyaṇa
Bhagīratha	Bhagīratha
Śruta	Kakutstha
Nābhāga	Raghu

Ambarīṣa	Kalmāśapāda
Sindhudvīpa
Ayutāśva
Rituparṇa
Sarvakāma
Sudāsa
Kalmāśapāda

The entire Paurāṇik series comprises twenty descents and that of the Rāmāyaṇa sixteen. Some of the last names of the poem occur amongst the first of those of the Purāṇas, but there is an irreconcilable difference in much of the nomenclature. The Agni, under the particular account of the descent of Rāma, has for his immediate predecessors Raghu, Aja, Daśaratha, as in our text; and the author of the Raghu Varṇśa agrees with the Purāṇas from Dilipa downwards.

16. This is an epitome of the Rāmāyaṇa, the heroic poem of Vālmiki, on the subject of Rāma's exploits. A part of the Rāmāyaṇa was published, with a translation by Carey and Marshman, several years since; but much more correct edition of the text of the two first books, with a Latin translation of the first and part of the second, have been more recently published by Professor Schlegel; a work worthy of his illustrious name. A summary of the story may be found in Jones' Works, Maurice's Hindustan, Moor's Pantheon. It is also the subject of the Uttara Rāma Carita in the Hindu Theatre, in the introduction to which an outline of the whole is given. The story is therefore, no doubt, sufficiently familiar even to English readers. It seems to be founded on historical fact; and the traditions of the south of India uniformly ascribe its civilisation, the subjugation or dispersion of its forest tribes of barbarians and the settlement of civilised Hindus, to the conquest of Laṅkā by Rāma.

17. The Vāyu specifies the countries or cities over which they reigned Āṅgada and Citraketu, as the Vāyu terms the latter, governed countries near the Himālayas, the capitals of which were Āṅgadi and Candravaktrā. Takṣa and Puṣkara were sovereigns of Gandhāra, residing at Takṣaśilā and Puṣkaravatī. Subāhu and Śurasena reigned at Mathurā; and in the latter we might be satisfied to find the Śurasenas of Arrian, but that there is a subsequent origin, of perhaps greater authenticity, in the family of Yadu, as we shall hereafter see. Kuśa built Kuśasthalī on the brow of the Vindhya, the capital of Kośalā; and Lava reigned at Śrāvasti (see Bk. IV. Chs. I and II) in Uttara (northern) Kośalā:¹ कुशस्य कोशला राज्यं पुरीता कुशस्थली रम्या निवेशित्वतेन विश्वपर्वतसानुषे। उत्तरकोशले राज्यं लवस्य च महात्मनः। श्रावस्ती लोकविभ्याता। The Raghu Varṇśa describes Kuśa at returning from Kuśavatī to Ayodhyā, after his father's death; but it seems not unlikely that the extending power of the princes of the Doab, of the lunar family, compelled Rāma's posterity to retire more to the west and south.

18. The Bhāgavata is the only Purāṇa that omits this name, as if the author had been induced to correct the reading in order to avoid the necessity of recognising two Nalas. See above, n.9.

19. Here again we have two distinct series of princes, independently of variations of individual names. Instead of the list of the text, with which the Vāyu and Bhāgavata nearly and the Brahma and Hari Varṇśa indifferently conform, we have in the Matsya, Liṅga, Kūrma and Agni the following : Ahinagu, Sahasrāśva, Sahasrāya or Sahasrabala, Candrāvaloka, Tārapīḍa or Tārādhīśa, Candragagiri, Bhānūratha or Bhānumitra and Śrūtāyus, with whom the list ends, except in the Liṅga, which adds Bāhula, killed by Abhimanyu : enumerating therefore from Devānīka but seven or eight princes to the great war, instead of twenty-three, as in the other series. The Raghu Varṇśa gives much the same list as our text, ending with Agnivarṇa.

20. Bala : Bhāgavata Nala : Hari Varṇśa.

21. Sthala : Bhāgavata, Śala : Vāyu and Brahma. Śila : Raghu Varṇśa.

22. Omitted : Bhāgavata.

23. Śaṅkha : Brahma. Khagana : Bhāg.

24. Dūṣitāśva : Vāyu. Adhyūṣitāśva : Brahma. Vidhriti : Bhāgavata.

25. Omitted : Brahma and Bhāgavata.

26. Omitted : Brahma and Hari Varṇśa : but included with similar particulars by the Vāyu, Bhāgavata and Raghu Varṇśa : see also Bk. III. Ch. VI, where Kauśalya is likewise given as the synonym of Hiranyagarbha, being, as the commentator observes, his Viśeṣaṇam, his epithet or attribute, born in or king of Kośalā. The Vāyu accordingly terms him, हिरण्यनाभः कौशल्यः; but in the Bhāgavata the epithet Kauśalya is referred by the commentator to Yājñavalkya, the pupil of Hiranyanābha : यतः सकाशात् कौशल्यो याज्ञवाल्क्यो योगमध्यगात्। The author of the Raghu Varṇśa, not understanding the meaning of the term, has coveted Kauśalya into the son of Hiranyanābha. Raghu Varṇa 18.27. The Bhāgavata, like our text, calls the prince the pupil of Jaiminī. The Vāyu, more correctly, जैमिनेः पौत्रस्यः शिष्यः | 'the pupil of the sage's grandson.' There seems to be, however, something unusual in the account given of the relation borne by the individuals named to each other. As a pupil of Jaiminī, Hiranyanābha is the teacher of the Sāmaveda (Bk. III. Ch. VI), but Yājñavalkya is the teacher of the Vājasaneyi branch of the Yajuṣ (Bk. III. Ch. V). Neither of them is specified by Colebrooke amongst the authorities of the Pātañjala or Yoga philosophy; nor does either appear as a disciple of Jaiminī in his character of founder of the Mīmāṁsā school. Trans. R. As. Soc. Vol.I.

27. Arthasiddhi : Brahma Purāṇa and Hari Varṇa.

28. Maruta : Brahma Purāṇa and Hari Varṇa.
These authorities omit the succeeding four names.

29. Sahasavat : Vāyu.

30. Viśvasaha : Bhāgavata.

31. The list closes here, as the author of the Purāṇas, Vyāsa, is contemporary with the great war. The line of Ikṣvāku is resumed prophetically in the twenty-second chapter.

अथ स्वपते तस्मै राजे मामप्रत्याख्यायैतदनेन गौतमाय

The son of Ikṣvāku, who was named Nimi,¹ instituted a sacrifice that was to endure for a thousand years and applied to Vasiṣṭha to offer the oblations. Vasiṣṭha in answer said, that he had been pre-engaged by Indra for five hundred years, but that if the Rājā would wait for some time, he would come and officiate as superintending priest. The king made no answer and Vasiṣṭha went away, supposing that he had assented. When the sage had completed the performance of the ceremonies he had conducted for Indra, he returned with all speed to Nimi, purposing to render him the like office. When he arrived, however and found that Nimi had retained Gautama and other priests to minister at his sacrifice, he was much displeased and pronounced upon the king, who was then asleep, a curse to this effect, that since he had not intimated his intention, but transferred to Gautama the duty he had first entrusted to himself, Vasiṣṭha, Nimi should thenceforth cease to exist in a corporeal form. When Nimi woke and knew what had happened, he in return denounced as an imprecation upon his unjust preceptor, that he also should lose his bodily existence, as the punishment of uttering a curse upon him without previously communicating with him. Nimi then abandoned his bodily condition.

The spirit of Vasiṣṭha also leaving his body, was united with the spirits of Mitra and Varuṇa for a season, until, through their passion for the nymph Urvaśī, the sage was born again in a different shape. The corpse of Nimi was preserved from decay by being embalmed with fragrant oils and resins and it remained as entire as if it were immortal.²

When the sacrifice was concluded, the priests applied to the gods, who had come to receive their portions, that they would confer a blessing upon the author of the sacrifice. The gods were willing to restore him to bodily life, but Nimi declined its acceptance, saying, "O deities, who are the alleviators of all worldly suffering, there is not in the world a deeper cause of distress than the separation of soul and body; it is therefore my wish to dwell in the eyes of all beings, but never more to resume a corporeal shape!" To this desire the gods assented and Nimi was placed by them in the eyes of all living creatures; in consequence of which their eyelids are ever opening and shutting.

As Nimi left no successor, the Munis, apprehensive of the consequences of the earth being without a ruler, agitated the body of the prince and produced from it a prince who was called Janaka, from being born without a progenitor.

In consequence of his father being without a body (videha), he was termed also Vaideha, 'the son of the bodiless;' and he further received the name of Mithi, from having been produced by agitation (mathana)³. These are the kings of Mithilā, who for the most part will be¹⁹ proficient in spiritual knowledge²⁰.

NOTES

1. None of the authorities, except the Vāyu and Bhāgavata, contain the series of kings noticed in this chapter.

2. This shows that the Hindus were not unacquainted with the Egyptian art of embalming dead bodies. In the Kāśi Khanḍa, s. 30, an account is given of a Brāhmaṇa who carries his mother's bones or rather her corpse, from Setubandha or Rāmeśwara to Kāśi. For this purpose he first washed it with the five excretions of a cow and the five pure fluids or milk, curds, ghee, honey and sugar. He then embalms it with Yakṣakarddama, a composition of Agallochum, camphor, musk, saffron, sandal and a resin called Kakkola; and envelopes it severally with Netravastra, flowered muslin; Paṭṭamvara, silk; Surasavastra, coarse cotton; Māniṣṭha, cloth dyed with madder; and Nepala Kambala, Nepal blanketing. He then covers it with pure clay and puts the whole into a coffin of copper. Tāmra sampuṭa. These practices are not only unknown, but would be thought impure in the present day.

3. These legends are intended to explain and were probably suggested by, the terms Vaideha and Mithilā, applied to the country upon the Gaṇḍaka and Kosī rivers, the modern Tirhut. The Rāmāyaṇa places a prince named Mithi between Nimi and Janaka, when comes the name Mithilā. In other respects the list of kings of Mithilā agrees, except in a few names. Janaka the successor of Nimi is different from Janaka who is celebrated as the father of Sītā. One of them, which, does not appear, is also renowned as a philosopher and patron of philosophical teachers. Mahābhārata, Mokṣa dharma. According to the Vāyu Purāṇa, Nimi founded a city called Jayantapur, near the Āśrama of Gautama. The remains of a city called Janakpur, on the northern skirts of the district, are supposed to indicate the site of a city founded by one of the princes so named.

4. This identifies Sīradhvaja with the second Janaka, the father-in-law of Rāma. The story of Sītā birth or rather discovery, is narrated in the Āranya Khanda of the Rāmāyaṇa, the Vana Parva of the Mahābhārata and in the Vāyu, Brahma Vaivartta, Kālika and other Purāṇas.

5. The Rāmāyaṇa says, 'of Sankasya', which is no doubt the correct reading. Fa Hian found the kingdom of Sang-kiashi in the Doab, about Mainpuri. Account of the Foe-Kue-ki. The Bhāgavata makes Kuśadhvaja the son of Sīradhvaja.

6. The Bhāgavata differs from our authority here considerably, by inserting several princes between Kuśadhvaja and Bhānumat; or Dharmadhvaja, who has two sons, Kṛtadhvaja and Khāṇḍikya; the former is the father of Keśidhvaja, the latter of Bhānumat. See the last book of the Viṣṇu.

7. Śakuni and the last of the series, according to the Vāyu.

8. Between this prince and Śuci the series of the Bhāgavata is Sanadhvaja, Urdhvaketu, Aja, Purujit. The following variations are from the same authority.

9. Citraratha.

10. Kṣemadhi.

11. Omitted.

12. Samaratha.

13. Omitted.

14. Upaguru.

15. Upagupta.

16. Vasvananta.
 17. Yuyudhāna, Subhāṣaṇa, Śruta.
 18. Śunaka.
 19. आत्मविद्याश्रयिणो भविष्यन्ति is the reading of all the copies; but why the future verb, 'will be', is used does not appear.
 20. Descendants of two of the other sons of the Manu are noticed in the Bhāgavata; from Nr̥ga, it is said, proceeded Sumati, Bhūtajyotiṣ, Vasu, Pratiṅka, Oghavat and his sister Oghavatī, married to Sudarśana. The Liṅga gives three sons to Nr̥ga, Vṛṣa, Dhṛṣṭaka and Raṇadhṛṣṭa and alludes to a legend of his having been changed to a lizard by the curse of a Brāhmaṇa. Nariṣyanta's descendants were Citrasena, Dakṣa, Madhvat, Pūrva, Indrasena, Vītihotra, Satyaśrava, Uruśravas, Devadatta, Agniveśya, also called Jātukarṇa, a form of Agni and progenitor of the Āgniveśya Brāhmaṇas. In the Brahma Purāṇa and Hari Varnśa Purāṇa the sons of Nariṣyat, whom the commentator on the latter considers as the same with Nariṣyanta, are termed Sakas, Sacae or Scythians; while, again, it is said that the son of Nariṣyanta was Dama or as differently read, Yama. As this latter affiliation is stated in the authorities, it would appear as if this Nariṣyanta was one of the sons of the Manu; but this is only a proof of the carelessness of the compilation, for in the Viśnu, Vāyu and Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇas, Nariṣyanta, the father of Dama, is the son of Marutta, the fourteenth of the posterity of Diṣṭa or Nediṣṭa.

Parāśara said—You shall hear from me, Maitreya, an account of the illustrious family of the moon, which has produced many celebrated rulers of the earth; a race adorned by the regal qualities of strength, valour, magnificence, prudence and activity; and enumerating amongst its monarchs Nahuṣa, Yayāti, Kārtavīryārjuna and others equally renowned. That race will I describe to you; do you attend.

Atri was the son of Brahmā, the creator of the universe, who sprang from the lotus that grew from the navel of Nārāyaṇa. The son of Atri was Soma¹ (the moon), whom Brahmā installed as the sovereign of plants, of Brāhmaṇas and of the stars. Soma celebrated the Rājasūya sacrifice and from the glory then acquired and the extensive dominion with which he had been invested, he became arrogant and licentious and carried off Tārā, Maitreya said— You have given me, reverend preceptor, an account of the kings of the dynasty of the sun : I am now desirous to the wife of Br̥haspati, the preceptor of the gods. In vain Br̥haspati sought to recover his bride; in vain Brahmā commanded and the holy sages remonstrated; Soma refused to relinquish her. Uśaṇas, out of enmity to Br̥haspati, took part with Soma.

Rudra, who had studied under Aṅgiras, the father of Br̥haspati, befriended his fellow-student. In consequence of Uśaṇas, their preceptor, joining Soma, Jambha, Kujambha and all the Daityas, Danavas and other foes of the gods, came also to his assistance; while Indra and all the gods were the allies of Br̥haspati.

Then there ensued a fierce contest, which, being on account of Tārakā (or Tārā), was termed the Tārakāmaya or Tārakā war. In this the gods, led by Rudra, hurled their missiles on the enemy; and the Daityas with equal determination assailed the gods. Earth, shaken to her centre by the struggle between such foes, had recourse to Brahmā for protection; on which he interposed and commanding Uśaṇas with the demons and Rudra with the deities to desist from strife, compelled Soma to restore Tāra to her husband. Finding that she was pregnant, Br̥haspati desired her no longer to retain her burden; and in obedience to his orders she was delivered of a son, whom she deposited in a clump of long Muñja grass. The child, from the moment of its birth, was endued with a splendour that dimmed the radiance of every other divinity and both Br̥haspati and Soma, fascinated by his beauty, claimed him as their child. The gods, in order to settle the dispute, appealed to Tārā; but she was ashamed and would make no answer. As she still continued mute to their repeated applications, the child became incensed and was about to curse her, saying, "Unless, vile woman, you immediately declare who is my father, I will sentence you to such a fate as shall deter every female in future from hesitating to speak the truth." On this, Brahmā again interfered and pacified the child; and then, addressing Tārā and said, "Tell me, daughter, is this the child of Br̥haspati or of Soma?" "Of Soma," said Tārā, blushing; As soon as she had spoken, the lord of the constellations, his countenance bright and expanding with rapture, embraced his son and said, "Well done, my boy; verily you are wise:" and hence his name was Budha.²

It has already been related how Budha begot Purūravas by Ilā. Purūravas³ was a prince renowned for liberality, devotion, magnificence and love of truth and for personal beauty. Urvaśī having incurred the imprecation of Mitra and Varuṇa, determined to take up her abode in the world of mortals; and descending accordingly, beheld Purūravas. As soon as she saw him she forgot all reserve and disregarding the delights of Svarga, became deeply enamoured of the prince.

Beholding her infinitely superior to all other females in grace, elegance symmetry, delicacy and beauty, Purūravas was equally fascinated by Urvaśī; both were inspired by similar sentiments and mutually feeling that each was everything to the other, thought no more of any other object. Confiding in his merits, Purūravas addressed the nymph and said, "Fair creature, I love you; have compassion on me and return my affection." Urvaśī, half averting her face through modesty, replied, "I will do so if you will observe the conditions I have to propose." "What are they?" inquired the prince; "declare them;" "I have two rams," said the nymph, "which I love as children; they must be kept near my bedside and never suffered to be carried away; you must also take care never to be seen by me undressed; and clarified butter alone must be my food." To these terms the king readily gave assent.

After this, Purūravas and Urvaśī dwelt together in Alakā, sporting amidst the groves and lotus-crowned lakes of Caitraratha and the other forests there situated, for sixty-one thousand years.⁴ The love of Purūravas for his bride increased every day of its duration; and the affection of Urvaśī augmenting equally in fervour, she never called to recollection residence amongst the immortals. Not so with the attendant spirits at the court of Indra; and nymphs, genii and quipsters, found heaven itself but dull while Urvaśī was away. Knowing the agreement that Urvaśī had made with the king, Viśavasu was appointed by the Gandharvas to effect its violation; and he, coming by night to the chamber where they slept, carried off one of the rams. Urvaśī was awakened by its cries and exclaimed. "Ah me! Who has stolen one of my children? Had I a husband, this would not have happened! To whom shall I apply for aid?" The Rājā overheard her lamentation, but recollecting that he was undressed and that Urvaśī might see him in that state, did not move from the couch. Then the Gandharvas came and stole the other ram; and Urvaśī hearing it bleat, cried out that a woman had no protector who was the bride of a prince so dastardly as to submit to this outrage. This incensed Purūravas highly and trusting that the nymph would not see his person, as it was dark, he rose and took his sword and pursued the robbers, calling upon them to stop and receive their punishment. At that moment the Gandharvas caused a flash of brilliant lightning to play upon the chamber and Urvaśī beheld the king undressed : the compact was violated and the nymph immediately disappeared.

The Gandharvas, abandoning the rams, departed to the region of the gods. Having recovered the animals, the king returned delighted to his couch, but there he beheld no Urvaśī; and not finding her anywhere, he wandered naked over the world, like on insane. At length coming to Kuruksetra, he saw Urvaśī sporting with four other nymphs of heaven in a lake beautified with lotuses and he ran to her and called her his wife and wildly implored her to return. "Mighty monarch," said the nymph, "refrain from this extravagance. I am now pregnant : depart at present and come hither again at the end of a year, when I will deliver to you a son and remain with you for one night." Purūravas, thus comforted, returned to his capital. Urvaśī said to her companions, "This prince is a most excellent mortal : I lived with him long and affectionately united." "It was well done of you," they replied; "he is indeed of comely appearance and one with whom we could live happily forever."

When the year had expired, Urvaśī and the monarch met at Kurukṣetra and she consigned to him his first-born Āyus; and these annual interviews were repeated, until she had borne to him five sons. She then said to Purūravas, "Through regard for me, all the Gandharvas have expressed their joint purpose to bestow upon my lord their benediction : let him therefore demand a boon." The Rājā replied, "My enemies are all destroyed, my faculties are all entire; I have friends and kindred, armies and treasures : there is nothing which I may not obtain except living in the same region with my Urvaśī. My only desire therefore is, to pass my life with her." When he had thus spoken, the Gandharvas brought to Purūravas a vessel with fire and said to him, "Take this fire and according to the precepts of the Vedas, divide it into three fires; then fixing your mind upon the idea of living with Urvaśī, offer oblations and you shall assuredly obtain your wishes." The Rājā took the brasier and departed and came to a forest. Then he began to reflect that he had committed a great folly in bringing away the vessel of fire instead of his bride; and leaving the vessel in the wood, he went disconsolate to his palace. In the middle of the night he awoke and considered that the Gandharvas had given him the brasier to enable him to obtain the felicity of living with Urvaśī and that it was absurd in him to have left it by the way. Resolving therefore to recover it, he rose and went to the place where तत्यज he had deposited the vessel; but it was gone. In its stead he saw a young Aśvattha tree growing out of a Šami plant and he reasoned with himself and said, "I left in this spot a vessel of fire and now behold a young Aśvattha tree growing out of a Šami plant. Verily I will take these types of fire to my capital and there, having engendered fire by their attrition, I will worship it."

Having thus determined, he took the plants to his city and prepared their wood for attrition, with pieces of as many inches long as there are syllables in the Gāyatrī : he recited that holy verse and rubbed together sticks of as many inches as he recited syllables in the Gāyatrī.⁵ Having thence elicited fire, he made it threefold, according to the injunctions of the Vedas and offered oblations with it, proposing as the end of the ceremony reunion with Urvaśī. In this way, celebrating many sacrifices agreeably to the form in which offerings are presented with fire, Purūravas obtained a seat in the sphere of the Gandharvas and was no more separated from his beloved. Thus fire, that was at first but one, was made threefold in the present Manvantara by the son of Ilā.⁶

1. The Vāyu says the essence of Soma (Somatva) issued from the eyes of Atri and impregnated the ten quarters. The Bhāgavata says merely that Soma was born from the eyes of Atri. The Brahma Purāṇa and Hari Vaṁśa give a grosser name to the effusion.

2. 'He who knows'. Much erroneous speculation has originated in confounding this Budha, the son of Soma and regent of the planet Mercury, 'he who knows,' the intelligent, with Buddha, any deified mortal, or 'he by whom truth is known;' or, as individually applicable, Gautama or Sakya, son of Rājā Śuddhodana, by whom the Buddhists themselves aver their doctrines were first promulgated. The two characters have nothing in common and the names are identical only when one or other is misspelt.

3. The story of Purūravas is told much in the same strain as follows, though with some variations and in greater or less detail, in the Vāyu, Matsya, Vāmana, Padma and Bhāgavata Purāṇas. It is also referred to in the Mahābhārata, vol. I. p. 113. It is likewise, the subject of the Vikrama and Urvaśi of Kālidāsa, in which drama the incidents offensive to good taste are not noticed. See Hindu Theatre, vol. I. p. 187. The Matsya Purāṇa, besides this story, which is translated in the introduction to the drama, has in another part, c. 94, an account of a Purūravas, who, in the Cāksuṣa Manvantara, was king of Mādرا and who by the worship of Viṣṇu obtained a residence with the Gandharvas.

4. One copy has sixty-one years; the Brahma Purāṇa and Hari Vaṁśa have fifty-nine : one period is as likely as the other.

5. It does not appear why this passage is repeated. The length of the sticks, conformably to the number of syllables in the usual form of the Gāyatrī, would be twenty-four inches. The Bhāgavata attaches to the operation a piece of mysticism of a Tāntrika origin : Purūravas, while performing the attrition, mentally identifies himself and Urvaśi with the two sticks and repeats the mantra, उर्वश्या मुरसि पुरुरवाः।

6. The division of one fire into three is ascribed to Purūravas by the Mahābhārata and the rest. The commentator on the former specifies them as the Gārhapatya, Dakṣiṇa and Āhavanīya, which Jones, Manu. II. 231, renders nuptial, ceremonial and sacrificial fires; or rather, 1. Household, that which is perpetually maintained by a house-holder; 2. A fire for sacrifices, placed to the south of the rest; and 3. A consecrated fire for oblations; forming the Tretāgni or triad of sacred fires, in opposition to the Laukika or merely temporal ones. To Purūravas it would appear the triple arrangement was owing;

but there are some other curious traditions regarding him, which indicate his being the author of some important innovations in the Hindu ritual. The Bhāgavata says, that before his time there was but one Veda, one caste, one fire and one god, Nārāyaṇa; and that, in the beginning of the Tretā age, Purūravas made them all 'three:' पुरुरव एवासीत्रयी वत्ता मुखे। that is, according to the commentator, the ritual was then instituted : कर्ममार्गः प्रकटो बभूव। The Matsya Purāṇa has an account of this prince's going to the orbit of the sun and moon at every conjunction, when oblations to progenitors are to be offered, as if obsequial rites had originated with Purūravas. The Mahābhārata states some still more remarkable particulars. 'The glorious Purūravas, endowed, although a mortal, with the properties of a deity, governing the thirteen islands of the ocean, engaged in hostilities with the Brāhmaṇas in the pride of his strength and seized their jewels, as they exclaimed against his oppression. Sanatkumāra came from the sphere of Brahmā to teach him the rules of duty, but Purūravas did not accept his instructions and the king, deprived of understanding by the pride of his power and actuated by avarice, was therefore ever accursed by the offended great sages and was destroyed.' विप्रैः स विग्रहं चक्रवीर्योन्मत्तः पुरुरवाः। जहर च विप्राणां रत्नान्युल्लोधतामपि॥ सनत्कुमारस्तं राजन् ब्रह्मलोकादुपेत्य च। अनुदर्श ततञ्जके प्रत्यगृह्णात्रप्यायसौ। ततो महर्षिभि क्रुद्धैः सह्यः शनौ व्यनश्यत। लोभान्वितो वलमदान्रष्टसज्जो नराधिपः॥

Purūravas had six sons, Āyus, Dhīmat, Amāvasu, Viśvavāsu, Śatāyus and Śrutāyus.¹ The son of Amāvasu was Bhīma;² his son was Kāncana;³ his son was Suhotra;⁴ whose son was Jahnu. This prince, while performing a sacrifice, saw the whole of the place overflowed by the waters of the Ganges. Highly offended at this intrusion, his eyes red with anger, he united the spirit of sacrifice with himself, by the power of his devotion and drank up the river. The gods and sages upon this came to him and appeased his indignation and re-obtained Gaṅgā from him, in the capacity of his daughter (when she is called Jāhnavi).⁵

Observing the intensity of his devotion, Indra was alarmed lest a prince of power like his own should be engendered and determined therefore to take upon himself the character of Kuśāmba's son.¹⁰

He was accordingly born as Gādhi, of the race of Kuśa (Kausika). Gādhi had a daughter named Satyavatī. Rēka, of the descendants of Bhṛgu, demanded her in marriage. The king was very unwilling to give his daughter to a peevish old Brāhmaṇa and demanded of him, as the nuptial present, a thousand fleet horses, whose colour should be white, with one black ear. Rēka having propitiated Varuṇa, the god of ocean, obtained from him, at the only placed called Asvatīrtha, a thousand such steeds; and giving them to the king, espoused his daughter.¹¹

In order to effect the birth of a son, Ricīka¹² prepared a dish of rice, barley and pulse, with butter and milk, for his wife to eat; and at her request he consecrated a similar mixture for her mother, by partaking of which she should give birth to a prince of martial prowess.

Leaving both dishes with his wife, after describing particularly which was intended for her and which for her mother, the sage went forth to the forests. When the time arrived for the food to be eaten, the queen said to Satyavatī, "Daughter, all persons wish their children to be possessed of excellent qualities and would be mortified to see them surpassed by the merits of their mother's brother. It will be desirable for you, therefore, to give me the mess your husband has set apart for you and to eat of that intended for me; for the son which it is to procure me is destined to be the monarch of the whole world, while that which your dish would give you must be a Brāhmaṇa, alike devoid of affluence, valour and power." Satyavatī agreed to her mother's proposal and they exchanged messes.

When Rēcīka returned home and beheld Satyavatī, he said to her, "sinful woman, what have you done! I view your body of a fearful appearance. Of a surety you have eaten the consecrated food which was prepared for your mother : you have done wrong. In that I had infused the properties of power and strength and strength and heroism; in your, the qualities suited to a Brāhmaṇa, gentleness, knowledge and resignation. In consequence of having reversed my plants, your son shall follow a warrior's propensities and use weapons and fight and slay. Your mother's son shall be born with the inclinations of a Brāhmaṇa and be addicted to peace and piety." Satyavatī, hearing this fell at her husband's feet and said, "My lord, I have done this thing through ignorance; have compassion on me; let me not have a son such as you have foretold : if such there must be, let it be my grandson, not my son." The Muni, relenting at her distress, replied, "So let it be."

Accordingly in due season she gave birth to Jamadagni; and her mother brought forth Viśvāmitra. Satyavatī afterwards became the Kauśikī river.¹³ Jamadagni married Renukā, the daughter of Renu, of the family of Ikṣvāku and had by her the destroyer of the Kṣatriya race, Paraśurāma, who was a portion of Nārāyaṇa, the spiritual guide of the universe.¹⁴

LEGEND OF PARAŚURĀMA (FROM THE MAHĀBHĀRATA)

"Jamadagni (the son of Rēcīka¹⁵) was a pious sage, who by the fervour of his devotions, while engaged in holy study, obtained entire possession of the Vedas. Having gone to king Prasenajit, he demanded in marriage his daughter Renukā and the king gave her unto him. The descendant of Bhrgu conducted the princess to his hermitage and dwelt with her there and she was contented to partake in his ascetic life. They had four sons and then a fifth, who was Jāmadagnya, the last but not the least of the brethren. Once when her sons were all absent, to gather the fruits on which they fed, Renukā who was exact in the discharge of all her duties, went forth to bathe. On her way to the stream she beheld Citraratha, the prince of Mrīttikāvatī, with a garland of lotuses on his neck, sporting with his queen in the water and she felt envious of their felicity. Defiled by unworthy thoughts, wetted but not purified by the stream, she returned disquieted to the hermitage and her husband perceived her agitation. Beholding her fallen from perfection and shorn of the lustre of her sanctity, Jamadagni reproved her and was exceedingly wroth. Upon this there came her sons from the wood, first the eldest, Rumanvat, then Suṣeṇa, then Vasu and then Viśvāvasu; and each, as he entered, was successively commanded by his father to put his mother to death; but amazed and influenced by natural affection, neither of them made any reply : therefore Jamadagni was angry and cursed them and they became as idiots and lost all understanding and were like unto beasts or birds. Lastly, Rāma returned to the hermitage, when the mighty and holy Jamadagni said unto him, "Kill your mother, who has sinned; and do it, son, without repining." Rāma accordingly took up his axe and struck off his mother's head; whereupon the wrath of the illustrious and mighty Jamadagni was assuaged and he was pleased with his son and said, "Since you have obeyed my commands and done what was hard to be performed, demand from me whatever blessings your will and your desires shall be all fulfilled." Then Rāma begged of his father these boons; the restoration of his mother to life, with forgetfulness of her having been slain and purification from all defilement; the return of his brothers to their natural condition and for himself, invincibility in single combat and length of days; and all these did his father bestow.

"It happened on one occasion, that, during the absence of the Ṛṣi's sons, the mighty monarch Kārttavīrya, the sovereign of the Haihaya tribe, endowed by the favour of Dattātreya with a thousand arms and a golden chariot that went wheresoever he willed it to go, came to the hermitage¹⁶ of Jamadagni, where the wife of the sage received him with all proper respect. The king, inflated with the pride of valour, made no return to her hospitality, but carried off with him by violence the calf of the milch cow of the sacred oblation¹⁷ and cast down the tall trees surrounding the hermitage. When Rāma returned, his father told him what had chanced and he saw the cow in affliction and he was filled with wrath. Taking up his splendid bow,¹⁸ Bhārgava, the slayer of hostile heroes, assailed Kārttavīrya, who had now become subject to the power of death and overthrew him in battle. With sharp arrows Rāma cut off his thousand arms and the king perished. The sons of Kārttavīrya, to revenge his death, attacked the hermitage of Jamadagni, when Rāma was away and slew the pious and unresisting sage, who called repeatedly, but fruitlessly, upon his valiant son. They then departed; and when Rāma returned, bearing fuel from the thickets, he found his father lifeless and thus bewailed his unmerited fate : 'Father, in resentment of my actions have you been murdered by wretches as foolish as they are base! By the sons of Kārttavīrya are you struck down, as a deer in the forest by the huntsman's shafts! Ill have deserved such a death; you who have ever trodden the path of virtue and never offered wrong to any created thing! How great is the crime that they have committed, in slaying with their deadly shafts an old man like you, wholly occupied with pious cares and engaging not in strife! Much have they to boast of to their fellows and the friends, they have shamelessly slain a solitary hermit, incapable of contending in arms?" Thus lamenting, bitterly and repeatedly, Rāma performed his father's last obsequies and lighted his funeral pile. He then made a vow that he would extirpate the whole Kṣatriya race. In fulfilment of this purpose he took up his arms and with remorseless and fatal rage singly destroyed in fight the sons of Kārttavīrya; and after them, whatever Kṣatriyas he encountered, Rāma, the first of warriors, likewise slew. Thrice seven times did he clear the earth of the Kṣatriya caste;¹⁹ and he filled with their blood the five large lakes of Samanta-pañcaka, from which he offered libations to the race of Bhṛgu. There did he behold his sire again and the son of Ruci beheld his son and told him what to do. Offering a solemn sacrifice to the king of the gods, Jāmadagnya presented the earth to the ministering priests. To Kaśyapa he gave the altar made of gold, ten fathoms in length and nine, in height.²⁰ With the permission of Kaśyapa, the Brāhmaṇas divided it in picces amongst them and they were then called Khaṇḍavāyana Brāhmaṇas. Having given the earth to Kaśyapa, the hero of immeasurable prowess retired to the Mahendra mountain, where he still resides : and in this manner was there enmity between him and the race of Kṣitryas and thus was the whole earth conquered by Rāma."²¹

The son of Viśvāmitra was Śunahśepas, the descendant of Bhṛgu, given by the gods and then named Devarāta.²² Viśvāmitra had other sons also, amongst whom the most celebrated were Madhuchandas, Kṛtajaya, Devadeva, Aṣṭaka, Kacchapa and Hārita; these founded many families, all of whom were known by the name of Kauśikas and intermarried with the families of various Ṛṣis.²³

1. Considerable variety prevails in these names and the Matsya, Padma, Brahma and Agni enumerate eight. The lists are as follows :

Mahābhārata	Matsya	Agni	Kūrm	Bhāgavata
Āyus	Āyus	Āyus	Āyus	Āyus
Dhīmat	Dhītimat	Dhīmat	Māyus	Śrutāyus
Amāvasu	Vasu	Vasu	Amāyus	Satyāyus
Drīdhāyus	Drīdhāyus	Uśrāyus	Viśvāyus	Rāya
Vanāyus	Dhanāyus	Antāyus	Satāyus	Vijaya
Śatāyus	Śatāyus	Śatāyus	Śrūtāyus	Jaya
	Aśvāyus	Ritāyus
	Divijāta	Divijāta

The list of the Brahma is that of the Mahābhārata, with the addition of Śatāyus and Viśvāyus; and the Padma agrees with the Matsya.

2. Son of Vijayu : Bhāgavata. This line of princes is followed only in our text, the Vāyu, Brahma and Hari Varnśa and the Bhāgavata.

3. Kāncanaprabha : Brahma.

4. Hotraka : Bhāgavata.

5. The Brahma Purāṇa and Hari Varnśa add of this prince, that he was the husband of Kāverī, the daughter of Yuvanāśva, who by the imprecation of her husband became the Kāverī river : another indication of the Dakṣiṇa origin of these works. The Hari Varnśa has another Jahnu, to whom it gives the same spouse, as we shall hereafter see.

6. Sunuta : Brahma. Purū : Bhāgavata.

7. Valaka : Brahma. Ajaka : Bhāgavata.

8. The Brahma Purāṇa and Hari Varnśa add that Kūsa was in alliance with the Pahlavas and foresters.

9. Our authorities differ as to these names :

Vāyu	Brahma	Hari Varnśa	Bhāgavata
Kuśāśva or
Kuśasthamba	Kuśāśva	Kuśāmba
Kuśanābha	Kuśanābha	Kuśanābha
Amurttarayasa	Amurttimat	Amurttaraya
Vasu	Kuśika	Vasu

The Rāmāyaṇa has Kuśāmba, Kuśanābha, Amurttarajasa and Vasu; and makes them severally the founders of Kauśāmbi, of Mahodaya (which afterwards appears the same as Kanouj), Dharmāraṇya and Girivraja; the latter being in the mountainous part of Magadha. I. s. 29.

10. The Brahma and Hari Varnśa make Gādhi the son of Kuśika; the Vāyu and Bhāgavata, of Kuśāmba : the Rāmāyaṇa, of Kuśanābha.

11. The Rāmāyaṇa notices the marriage, but has no legend. The Mahābhārata, Vana Parva, has a rather more detailed narration, but much the same as in the text. According to the commentator, Aśvatīrtha is in the district of Kanouj; perhaps at the confluence of the Kālanadī with the Ganges. The agency of the god of Ocean in procuring horses, is a rather curious additional coincidence between Varuṇa and Neptune.

12. In the Mahābhārata, Bhṛgu, the father of Ricika, prepares the Cārū.

13. So the Rāmāyaṇa, after stating that Satyavatī followed her husband in death, adds, that she became the Kauśikī river; the Kosi, which, rising in Nepal, flows through Pūrṇī into Ganges, opposite nearly to Rājamahal.

14. The text omits the story of Paraśurāma, but as the legend makes a great figure in the Vaiśnava works in general. I have inserted it from the Mahābhārata, where it is twice related once in the Vana Parva and once in the Rājadharma section of the Śānti Parva. It is told also at length in the ninth book of the Bhāgavata, in the Padma and Agni Purāṇas.

15. The circumstances of Ricika's marriage and the birth of Jamadagni and Viśvāmitra, are told much in the same manner as in our text both in the Mahābhārata and Bhāgavata.

16. In the beginning of the legend occurs the account of Kārttavīryārjuna, with the addition that he oppressed both men and gods. The latter applying to Viśṇu for succour, he descended to earth and was born as Paraśurāma, for the especial purpose of putting the Haihaya king to death.

17. In the Rājadharma the sons of the king carry off the calf. The Bhāgavata makes the king seize upon the cow, by whose aid Jamadagni had previously entertained Arjuna and all his train : borrowing, no doubt, these embellishments from the similar legend of Vasiṣṭha and Viśvāmitra, related in the Rāmāyaṇa.

18. The characteristic weapon of Rāma, is however an axe (Paraśu), when his name Rāma, 'with the axe.' It was given to him by Śiva, whom the hero propitiated on mount Gandhamādana. He at the same time received instruction in the use of weapons generally and the art of war. Rājadharma.

19. This more than 'thrice slaying of the slain' is explained in the Rājadharma to mean, that he killed the men of so many generations, as fast as they grew up to adolescence.

20. It is sometimes read Narotsedha, 'as high as a man'.

21. The story, as told in the Rājadharma section adds, that when Rāma had given the earth to Kaśyapa, the latter desired him to depart, as there was no dwelling for him in it and to repair to the sea-shore of the south, where Ocean made for him (or relinquished to him) the maritime district named Śūrpāraka. The traditions of the Peninsula ascribe the formation of the coast of Malabar to this origin and relate that Paraśurāma compelled the ocean to retire and introduced Brahmanas and colonists from the north into Kerala or Malabar. According to some accounts he stood on the promontory of Delhi and shot his arrows to the south, over the site of Kerala. It seems likely that we have proof of the local legend being at least as old as the beginning of the Christian era, as the mons Pyrrhus of Ptolemy is probably the mountain of Paraśu or Paraśurāma. See Catalogue of Mackenzie Collection, Introd. P. xcv. And vol. II. P. 74. The Rājadharma also gives an account of the Kṣatriyas who escaped even the thrice seven times repeated destruction of their race. Some of the Haihayas were concealed by the earth as women; the son of Viduratha, of the race of Purū, was preserved in the Rkṣa mountain, where he was nourished by the bears; Sarvakarman, son of Saudāsa, was saved by Parāśara, performing the offices of a Śūdra; Gopti, son of Sivi, was nourished by cows in the forests; Vatsa, the son of Pratarddana, was concealed amongst the calves in a cow-pen; the son of Deviratha was secreted by Gautama on the banks of the Ganges; Vṛhadratha was preserved in Gridhrakūṭa; and descendants of Marutta were saved by the ocean. From these the lines of kings were continued; but it does not appear from the ordinary lists that they were ever interrupted. This legend however, as well as that of the Rāmāyaṇa, b. I. c. 52, no doubt intimates a violent and protracted struggle between the Brāhmaṇas and Kṣatriyas for supreme domination in India, as indeed the text of the Mahābhārata more plainly denotes, as Earth is made to say to Kaśyapa. 'The fathers add grandfathers of these Kṣatriyas have been killed by the remorseless of Rāma in warfare on my account' : एतेषां पितरश्चैव तथैवच पितामहः। मदर्थं निहता युद्धे रामेणाक्षिलष्टकर्मणा॥

22. The story of Śunahsephas is told by different authorities, with several variations. As the author of various Sūktas in the Rk, he is called the son of Ajigartta. The Rāmāyaṇa makes him the middle son of the sage Ṛcīka, sold to Ambarīṣa, king of Ayodhyā, by his parents, to be a victim in a human sacrifice offered by that prince. He is set at liberty by Viśvāmitra, but it is not added that he was adopted. The Bhāgavata concurs in the adoption, but makes Śunahsephas the son of Viśvāmitra's sister, by Ajigartta or the sacrifice of Hariścandra (see n. 9. Bk. IV. Ch. III). The Vāyu makes him a son of Ṛcīka, but a!ludes to his being the victim at Hariścandra's sacrifice. According to the Rāmāyaṇa, Viśvāmitra called upon his sons to take the place of Śunahsephas and on their refusing, degraded them to the condition of Cāṇḍālas. The Bhāgavata says, that fifty only of the hundred sons of Viśvāmitra were expelled from their tribe, for refusing to acknowledge Śunahsephas or Devarāta as their elder brother. The others consented; and the Bhāgavata expresses this; ज्येष्ठं मन्त्रदृशं चक्रुमत्वामन्त्रं च वर्यं स्म हि। They said to the elder, profoundly versed in the mantras. We are your followers: as the commentator; अनुगत्तारः कनिष्ठा स्म इत्पर्थः। The Rāmāyaṇa also observes, that Śunahsephas, when bound, praised Indra with Ṛcās or hymns of the Rgveda. The origin of the story therefore, whatever may be its correct version, must be referred to the Vedas; and it evidently alludes to some innovation in the ritual, adopted by a part only of the Kauśika families of Brāhmaṇas.

23. The Bhāgavata says one hundred sons, besides Devarāta and others, as Aṣṭaka, Hārita. Much longer lists of names are given in the Vāyu, Bhāgavata, Brahma and Hari Vāṁśa. The two latter specify the mothers. Thus Devaśravas, Kati (the founder of the Kātyāyanas) and Hiranyākṣa were sons of Śilavatī; Reṇuka, Gālava, Sankriti, Mudgala, Madhucchandas and Devala were sons of Reṇu; and Aṣṭaka, Kacchapa and Hārita were the sons of Drśadvatī. The same works enumerate the Gotras, the families or tribes of the Kauśika Brāhmaṇas : these are Pārthivas, Devarātas, Yajñavalkyas, Sāmarśanas, Uḍumbaras, Dumlānas, Tarakāyanas, Muncātas, Lohitas, Reṇus, Kariṣus, Babhrus, Pāninas, Dhyānajyāpýas, Śyālantas, Hiranyākṣas, Śāṅkus, Gālavas, Yamadūtas, Devalas, Śālankāyanas, Bāskalas, Dadativādaras, Śauśratas, Saindhavāyanas, Niṣṇātas, Cunculas, Śālankkrityas, Sankrityas, Vādaranyas and an infinity of others, multiplied by intermarriages with other tribes and who, according to the Vāyu, were originally of the regal caste, like Viśvāmitra; but, like him, obtained Brahmanhood through devotion.

Now these gotras or some of them at least, no doubt existed, partaking more of the character of schools of doctrine, but in which teachers and scholars were very likely to have become of one family by intermarrying; and the whole, as well as their original founder, imply the interference of the Kṣatriya caste with the Brahmanical monopoly of religious instruction and composition.

Āyus, the eldest son of Purūravas, married the daughter of Rāhu (or Ārāhu), by whom he had five sons, Nāhuṣa, Kṣatravṛddha,¹ Rambhā,² Raji and Anena.³ The son of Kṣatravṛddha was Suhotra,⁴ who had three sons, Kāśa,⁵ Lesā⁶ and Ghṛtasamada. The son of that last was Śaunaka,⁷ who first established the distinctions of the four castes.⁸ The son of Kāśa was Kaśirājā;⁹ his son was Dirghatamas;¹⁰ his son was Dhanvantari, whose nature was exempt from human infirmities and who in every existence had been master of universal knowledge. In his past life (or when he was produced by the agitation of the milky sea), Nārāyaṇa had conferred upon him the boon, that he should subsequently be born in the family of Kaśirājā, should compose the eight-fold system of medical science¹¹ and should be thereafter entitled to a share of offerings made to the gods. The son of Dhanvantari was Ketumat; his son was Bhīmaratha; his son was Divodāsa;¹² his son was Pratarddana, so named from destroying the race of Bhadraśreṇya. He had various other appellations, as Śatrujit, 'the victor over his foes,' from having vanquished all his enemies; Vatsa, or 'child', from his father's frequently calling him by that name; Ritadhvaja, 'he whose emblem was truth,' being a great observer of veracity; and Kuvalayāśva, because he had a horse (aśva) called Kuvalaya.¹³ The son of this prince was Alarka, of whom this verse is sung in the present day; "For sixty thousand and sixty hundred years no other youthful monarch except Alarka, reigned over the earth."¹⁴

The son of Alarka was Santati;¹⁵ his son was Sunītha; his son was Suketu; his son was Dharmaketu; his son was Satyaketu; his son was Vibhu; his son was Su vibhu; his son was Sukumāra; his son was Dhṛṣṭketu; his son was Vaiṇahotra; his son was Bhārga; his son was Bhargabhūmi; from whom also rules for the four castes were promulgated.¹⁶ These are the Kāśya princes or descendants of Kāśa.¹⁷ We will now enumerate the descendants of Raji.

NOTES

1. Dharmavṛddha : Vāyu. Vṛddhaśarman : Matsya. Yajñaśarman : Padma.

2. Darbha : Agni. Dambha : Padma.

3. Viपāpmān : Agni and Matsya, Vidāmān : Padma. The two last authorities proceed no further with this line.

4. Sunahotra : Vāyu, Brahma.

5. Kāśya : Bhāgavata.

6. Sāla : Vāyu, Brahma, Hari Varmā : whose son was Ārṣisena, father of Caranta; Vāyu : of Kaśyapa; Brahma and Hari Varmā.

7. Here is probably an error, for the Vāyu, Bhāgavata and Brahma agree in making Śunaka the son of Ghṛtsamada and father of Śaunaka.

8. The expression is चातुर्वर्णं प्रवर्तयिता। 'The originator or causer of the distinctions (or duties) of the four castes.' The commentator, however, understands the expression to signify, that his descendants were of the four castes. So also the Vāyu : पुत्रो षुत्समदस्य च शुनको यस्य शैनकः। ब्राह्मणा क्षत्रियाश्चैव वैश्या शूद्रास्तथैवच। एतस्य वंशेसमुद्गृहाः विचित्रैः कर्मभिर्द्विजाः॥ 'The son of Ghṛtsamda was Śunaka, whose son was Śaunaka, Brāhmaṇas, Kṣatriya, Vaiśyas and Śūdras were born in his race; Brāhmaṇas by distinguished deeds.' The existence of but one caste in the age of purity, however incompatible with the legend which ascribes the origin of the four tribes to Brahmā, is everywhere admitted. Their separation is assigned to different individuals, whether accurately to any one may be doubted; but the notion indicates that the distinction was of a social or political character.

9. Kāśiya : Brahma.

10. Dirghatapas : Vāyu. Ghṛtsatamas : Agni. The Bhāgavata inserts a Rāṣṭra before this prince and the Vāyu a Dharma after him.

11. The eight branches of medical science are, 1. Śalya, extraction of extraneous bodies; 2. Śalākā, treatment of external organic affections : these two constitute surgery; 3. Cikitsā, administration of medicines or medical treatment in general; 4. Bhūtavidyā, treatment of maladies referred to demoniac possession; 5. Kaumārabhṛtya, midwifery and management of children; 6. Agada, alexipharmacology; 7. Rasāyana, al-chemical therapeutics; 8. Bajikaraṇa, use of aphrodisiacs. Dhanvantari, according to the Brahma Vaivartta Purāṇa, was preceded in medical science by Ātreya, Bharadvāja and Caraka : his pupil Śūrūpa is the reputed author of a celebrated work still extant. It seems probable that Kāśi or Banārasa was at an early period a celebrated school of medicine.

12. Some rather curious legends are connected with this prince in the Vāyu and Brahma Purāṇas and Hari Varmā and especially in the Kāśi Khaṇḍa of the Skanda Purāṇa. According to these authorities, Śiva and Pārvatī, desirous of occupying Kāśi, which Divodāsa possessed, sent Nikumbha, one of the Gaṇas of the former, to lead the prince to the adoption of Buddhist doctrines; in consequence of which he was expelled from the sacred city and according to the Vāyu, founded another on the banks of the Gomati. We have, however, also some singular, though obscure intimations of some of the political events of this and the succeeding reign. The passage of the Vāyu is, भद्रश्रेष्ठस्य पुत्राणां शतमुत्तमधन्विनां। हत्वा निवेशयामास दिवोदासो नराधिपः॥ भद्रश्रेष्ठस्य राज्यं तु हतं तेन वलीयसा। भद्रश्रेष्ठस्य पुत्रस्तु दुर्हमो नाम नामतः। दिवोदासेन वालेति घृण्या स विवर्जितः॥ दिवोदासाददृष्टदृत्यां वीरो यज्ञे प्रतर्हनः। तेन पुत्रेण वालेन प्रहर्त तस्य वै पुः। वैरस्थानं महा राजा तदा तेन विधित्सता॥ 'The king of Divodāsa, having slain the hundred sons of Bhadraśrenya, took possession of his kingdom, which was conquered by that hero. The son of Bhadraśrenya, celebrated by the name of Durddama, was spared by Divodāsa, as being an infant. Protarddana was the son of Divodāsa by Dr̄ṣadvatī; and by that great prince, desirous of destroying all enmity, (was recovered) that (territory) which had been seized by that young boy (Durddama).' This is not very explicit and something is wanted to complete the sense. The Brahma Purāṇa and Hari Varmā tell the story twice over, chiefly in the words of the Vāyu, but with some additions. In chapter 29 we have, first, the first three lines of the above extract; then comes the story of Banārasa being deserted; we then have the two next lines; then follow, हैरयस्य तु दायाहूं हतवान् स महीपतिः । आजहे पितृदयाहूं दिवोदास हृतं बलात् । भद्रश्रेण्यस्य पुत्रेण दुर्दमेन महात्मना । वैरस्यान्तं महाराज क्षत्रियेण विधित्सता॥ 'The prince (Durddama) invading his patrimonial possessions, the territory which Divodāsa had seized by force was recovered by the gallant son of Bhadraśrenya, Durddama, a warrior desirous, mighty king, to effect the destruction of his foes.' Here the victory is ascribed to Durddama, in opposition to what appears to be the sense of the Vāyu and what is undoubtedly that of our text, which says that he was called Pratarddana from destroying the race of Bhadraśrenya and Śatrujīt from vanquishing all his foes : ततः प्रतर्हनो भद्रश्रेण्यवंशविनाशदरेषशत्रवोऽनेन जिता इति शत्रु जिदभवत् । By Variasya anta, 'the end of hostility or enmity', is obviously not to be understood here, as M. Langlois has intimated, a friendly pacification, but the end or destruction of all enemies. In the 32nd chapter of the Hari Varṇśa we have precisely the same lines, slightly varied as to their order; but they are preceded by this verse; भद्रश्रेण्यस्य पूर्वतुं पुरीं वाराणसी भवात् यदुवंशं प्रमूर्तस्य तपस्यभिरतस्य च॥ 'The city (that on the Gomati), before the existence of Banārasa, of Bhadraśrenya, a pious of the Yadu race.' This verse is not in the Brahma Purāṇa. After giving the rest of the above quotation, except the last line, the passage proceeds, अष्टारथो नाम नृपः सुतो भीमरथस्य वै । तेन पुत्रेषु बालेषु प्रहृतं तस्य भारत । वैरस्यान्तं महाराज क्षत्रियेण विधित्सता । 'The king called Aṣṭaratha was the son of Bhīmaratha; and by him, great king, a warrior desirous of destroying his foes was (the country) recovered, the children (of Durddama) being infants.' तस्य दुर्दमस्य पुत्रेष्वसमर्थेषु । Com. According to the same authority, we are here to understand Bhīmaratha and Aṣṭaratha as epithets of Divodāsa and Pratarddana. From these scanty and ill-digested notices it appears, that Divodāsa, on being expelled from Banārasa, took some city and district on the Gomati from the family of Bhadraśrenya; that Durddama recovered the country and that Pratarddana again conquered it from his descendants. The alternation concerned apparently only bordering districts, for the princes of Māhiṣamati and of Kāśī continue, in both an earlier and a later series, in undisturbed possession of their capitals and their power.

13. The Vāyu, Agni, Brahma Purāṇa and Hari Varṇśa interpose two sons of Pratarddana, Garga or Bharga and Vatsa; and they make Vatsa the father of Alarka, except the Brahma, which has Śatrujīt and Rādhvaja as two princes following Vatsa.

14. The Vāyu, Brahma and Hari Varṇśa repeat this stanza and add that Alarka enjoyed such protracted existence through the favour of Lopamudrā and that having lived till the period at which the curse upon Kāśī terminated, he killed the Rākṣasas Kṣemaka, by whom it had been occupied after it was abandoned by Divodāsa and caused the city to be re inhabited, शापस्यान्ते महावाहुर्हत्वा क्षेमकराक्षसं रथ्यौ वासयामास पुरीं वाराणसीं पुनः । The Hari Varṇśa agrees as usual with the Brahma, except in the reading of one or two names. It is to be observed, however, that the Agni makes the Kāśī princes the descendants of Vitatha, the successor of Bharata. The Brahma Purāṇa and Hari Varṇśa, determined apparently to be right, give the list twice over, deriving it in one place from Kṣatravṛddha, as in our text, the Vāyu and the Bhāgavata; and in another, with the Agni, from Vitatha. The series of the Brahma, however, stops with Lauhi, the son of Alarka and does not warrant the repetition which the carelessness of the compiler of the Hari Varṇśa has superfluously inserted.

15. Several varieties occur, in the series that follows, as the comparative lists will best show :

Bhāgavata	Brahma	Vāyu	Agni
Alarka	Alarka	Alarka	Alarka
Santati	Sannati	Sannati	Dharmaketu
Sunītha	Sunītha	Sunītha	Vibhu
Suketana	Kṣema	Suketu	Sukumāra
Dharmaketu	Ketumat	Dhṛṣṭaketu	Satyaketu
Satyaketu	Suketu	Venuhotra
Dhṛṣṭaketu	Dharmaketu	Gārgya
Sukumāra	Satyaketu	Gargabhbūmi
Vīthotra	Vibhu	Vatsabhūmi
Bhārga	Anartta
Bhargabhbūmi	Sukumāra
	Dhṛṣṭaketu
	Venuhotri
	Bharga
	Vatsabhūmi

16. Our text is clear enough and so is the Bhāgavata, but the Vāyu, Brahma and Hari Varṇśa contain additions of rather doubtful import. The former has, वेणुहोत्र मुतश्चापि गार्यो वै नामविश्रुतः गार्यस्य

र्गभूमिस्तु वत्सोवत्सस्य धीमतः ब्राह्मणः क्षत्रियाश्चैव तयोः पुत्रा मुधार्मिकाः । 'The son of Venuhotra was the celebrated Gārgya; Gargabhūmi was the son of Gārgya; and Vatsa, of the wise Vatsa; virtuous Brāhmaṇas and Kṣatriyas were the sons of these two.' By the second Vatsa is perhaps meant Vatsabhūmi; and the purpose of the passage is, that Gārgya (or possibly rather Bharga, one of the sons of Pratarddana) and Vatsa were the founders of two races (Bhūmi, 'earth,' implying 'source' or 'founder'), who were Kṣatriyas by birth and Brāhmaṇas by profession. The Brahma and Hari Varīśa apparently misunderstanding this text, have increased the perplexity. According to them, the son of Venuhotra was Bharga; Vatsabhūmi was the son of Vatsa; and Bhārgabhbūmi (Bhṛgubhbūmi, Brahma) was from Bhārgava. 'These sons of Aṅgiras were born in the family of Bhṛgu, thousands of great might, Brāhmaṇas, Kṣatriyas and Vaiśyas.' वेणुहोत्रसु तश्चिपि भर्गो नाम प्रजेश्वरः । वत्सस्य वत्सभूमिस्तु भर्गभूमिस्तुभार्गवात् (भृगुभूमिस्तुभार्गवात्) । एतेहाङ्गिरसः पुत्राः जाता वशेऽथभार्गवे । ब्राह्मणः क्षत्रियावैश्या स्तेजोयुक्ता सहस्रशः ॥ The commentator has, नत्सस्यालक्षियतु पुत्रान्तरमाह वत्सभूमिरिति । भार्गवात् वत्सभ्रातुः । अङ्गिरसो गालवस्याङ्गिरसत्वात् भार्गवे विश्वामित्रस्य भार्गवत्वात् ॥ 'Another son of Vatsa, the father of Alarka, is described, Vatsabhūmi. From Bhārgava, the brother of Vatsa. (They were) Aṅgirasas from Gālava belonging to that family (and were born) in the family of Bhṛgu from the descent of Viśvāmitra.' The interpretation is not very clear, but it authorises the notion above expressed, that Vatsa and Bharga, the sons of Pratarddana, are the founders of two races of Kṣatriya-Brāhmaṇas.

17. On the subject of note 12 some further illustration is derivable from the Mahābhārata, Śānti Parva, Dāna-dharma. Haryāśva, the king of the Kāśīs, reigning between the Ganges and the Yamunā or in the Doab, was invaded and slain by the Haihayas, a race descended, according to this authority; from Śaryāti, the son of Manu (see Bk. IV. Ch. III). Sudeva, the son of Haryāśva, was also attacked and defeated by the same enemies. Divodāsa, his son, built and fortified Banārasa as a defence against the Haihayas, but in vain, for they took it and compelled him to fly. He sought refuge with Bharadvāja, by whose favour he had a son born to him, Pratarddana, who destroyed the Haihayas under their king Vīthavya and re-established the kingdom of Kāśī. Vīthavya, through the protection of Bhṛgu, became a Brāhmaṇa. The Mahābhārata gives a list of his descendants, which contains several of the names of the Kaśya dynasty of the text; thus, Gṛtsamada is said to be his son and the two last of the line are Śunaka and Śaunaka. See supra, n. 7.

Raji had five hundred sons, all of unequalled daring and vigour. Upon the occurrence of a war between the demons and the gods, both parties inquired of Brahmā which would be victorious. The deity replied, "That for which Raji shall take up arms." Accordingly the Daityas immediately repaired to Raji, to secure his alliance; which he promised them, if they would make him their Indra after defeating the gods. To this they answered and said, "We cannot profess one thing and mean another; our Indra is Prahļāda and it is for him that we wage war." Having thus spoken, they departed; and the gods then came to him on the like errand. He proposed to them the said conditions and they agreed that he should be their Indra.

Raji therefore joined the heavenly host and by his numerous and formidable weapons destroyed the army of their enemies. When the demons were discomfited, Indra placed the feet of Raji upon his head and said, "You have preserved me from a great danger and I acknowledge you as my father; you are the sovereign chief over all the regions and I, the Indra of the three spheres, am your son."

The Rājā smiled and said, "Even be it so. The regard that is conciliated by many agreeable speeches is not to be resisted even when such language proceeds from a foe (much less should the kind words of a friend fail to win our affection)." He accordingly returned to his own city and Indra remained as his deputy in the government of heaven.

When Raji ascended to the skies, his sons, at the instigation of Nārada, demanded the rank of Indra as their hereditary right; and as the deity refused to acknowledge their supremacy, they reduced him to submission by force and usurped his station. After some considerable time had elapsed, the god of a hundred sacrifices, Indra, deprived of his share of offerings to the immortals, met Br̄haspati in a retired place and said to him, "Cannot you give me a little of the sacrificial butter, even if it were no bigger than a jujube, for I am in want of sustenance?" "If," replied Br̄haspati, "I had been applied to by you before, I could have done anything for you that you wished; as it is, I will endeavour and restore you in a few days to your sovereignty." So saying, he commenced a sacrifice for the purpose of increasing the might of Indra and of leading the sons of Raji into error and so effecting their downfall.¹

Misled by their mental fascination, the princes became enemies of the Br̄ahmaṇas, regardless of their duties and contemners of the precepts of the Vedas; and thus devoid of morality and religion, they were slain by Indra, who by the assistance of the priest of the gods resumed his place in heaven. Whoever hears this story shall retain forever his proper place and never be guilty of wicked acts.

Rambha, the third son of Āyus, had no progeny.² Kṣatravṛddha had a son named Pratikṣatra³; his son was Sañjaya; his son was Vijaya,⁴ his son was Yajñakrit,⁵ his son was Harṣavarddhana;⁶ his son was Sahadeva; his son was Adina;⁷ his son was Jayasena; his son was Sankṛti; his son was Kṣatrādharman.⁸

These were the descendants of Kṣatravṛddha. I will now mention those of Nahuṣa.

NOTES

1. The Matsya says he taught the sons of Raji the Jinadharma or Jain religion : जिनधर्मं समास्थाय वेदवाहं स वेदवित्।

2. The Bhāgavata enumerates however, as his descendants, Rabhasa, Gambhīra and Akiṛiya, whose posterity became Brāhmaṇas. The same authority gives as the descendants of Anenaś the fourth son of Āyus, Śuddha, Śuci, Trikakud and Śāntākhya.

3. The Vāyu agrees with our text in making Pratipakṣa (Pratikṣatra) the son of Kṣatravṛddha; but the Brahma Purāṇa and Hari Varmśa consider Anenaś to be the head of this branch of the posterity of Āyus. The Bhāgavata substitutes Kuśa, the Leśa of our text, the grandson of Kṣatravṛddha, for the first name; and this seems most likely to be correct. Although the different MSS, agree in reading क्षत्रवृद्धसुतः: it should be perhaps क्षात्रवृद्धः the patronymic Kṣātravṛddha; making then, as the Bhāgavata does, Pratikṣatra the son of Kṣatravṛddha.

4. Jaya : Bhāgavata, Vāyu.

5. Vijaya : Vāyu, Kṛta : Bhāgavata.

6. Haryavaśa : Brahma, Hari Varmśa Haryavana : Bhāgavata.

7. The last of the list : Vāyu, Ahīna : Bhāgavata.

8. Kṣatravṛddha : Brahma, Hari Varmśa.

Yati, Yayāti, Sanyāti, Ayāti, Viyati and Kṛti were the six valiant sons of Nahusa.¹ Yati declined the sovereignty² and Yayāti therefore succeeded to the throne. He had two wives, Devayānī, the daughter of Uśanas and Śarmiṣṭhā, the daughter of Vṛṣaparvan; of whom this genealogical verse is recited : "Devayānī bore two sons, Yadu and Turvasu. Śarmiṣṭhā, the daughter of Vṛṣaparvan, had three sons, Druhyu, Anu and Puru."³ Through the curse of Uśanas, Yayāti became old and infirm before his time; but having appeased his father-in-law, he obtained permission to transfer his decrepitude to any one who would consent to take it. He first applied to his eldest son Yadu, and said, "Your maternal grandfather has brought this premature decay upon me; by his permission, however, I may transfer it to you for a thousand years. I am not yet satiate with worldly enjoyments and wish to partake of them through the means of your youth. Do not refuse compliance with my request." Yadu, however, was not willing to take upon him his father's decay; on which his father denounced an imprecation upon him and said, "Your posterity shall not possess dominion."

He then applied successively to Druhyu, Turvasu and Anu and demanded of them their juvenile vigour. They all refused and were in consequence cursed by the king. Lastly he made the same request of Śarmiṣṭhā's youngest son, Puru, who bowed to his father and readily consented to give him his youth and receive in exchange Yayāti's infirmities, saying that his father had conferred upon him a great favour.

The king Yayāti being thus endowed with renovated youth, conducted the affairs of state for the good of his people, enjoying such pleasures as were suited to his age and strength and were not incompatible with virtue. He formed a connection with the celestial nymph Viśvācī and was wholly attached to her and concivcd no end to his desires.

The more they were gratified, the more ardent they became; as it is said in this verse, "Desire is not appeased by enjoyment; fire fed with sacrificial oil becomes but the more intense. No one has ever more than enough of rice or barley or gold or cattle, or women; abandon therefore inordinate desire. When a mind finds neither good nor ill in all objects, but looks on all with an equal eye, then everything yields it pleasure. The wise man is filled with happiness, who escapes from desire, which the feeble-minded can with difficulty relinquish an which grows not old with the aged. The hair becomes grey, the teeth fall out, as man advances in years; but the love of wealth, the love of life, are not impaired by age."

"A thousand years have passed," reflected Yayāti, "and my mind is still devoted to pleasure; every day my desires are awakened by new objects. I will therefore now renounce all sensual enjoyment and fix my mind upon spiritual truth. Unaffected by the alternatives of pleasure and pain and having nothing I may call my own, I will henceforth roam the forests with the deer."

Having made this determination, Yayāti restored his youth to Puru, resumed his own decrepitude, installed his youngest son in the sovercignty and departed to the wood of penance (Tapovana).⁴ To Turvasu he consigned he south-east districts of his kingdom; the west to Druhyu; the south to Yadu; and the north to Anu; to govern as viceroys under their younger brother Puru, whom he appointed supreme monarch of the earth.⁵

1. The Bhāgavata refers briefly to the story of Nahuṣa which is told in the Mahābhārata more than once, in the Vana Parva, Udyoga Parva, Dāna Dharma Parva and others; also in the Padma and other Purāṇas. He had obtained the rank of Indra; but in his pride or at the suggestion of Śaci, compelling the Ṛṣis to bear his litter, he was cursed by them to fall from his state and reappear upon earth as a serpent. From this form he was set free by philosophical discussions with Yudhiṣṭhīra and received final liberation. Much speculation, wholly unfounded, has been started by Wilford's conjecture that the name of this prince, with Deva, 'divine', prefixed, a combination which never occurs, was the same as Dionysius or Bacchus. Authorities generally agree as to the names of the first three of his sons : in those of the others there is much variety and the Matsya, Agni and Padma have seven names, as follows omitting the three first of the text :

Matsya	Agni	Padma	Liṅga
Udbhava	Udbhava	Udbhava	Śaryāti
Panści	Pañcaka	Pava	Campaka
Sunyāti	Pālaka	Viyāti	Andhaka
Meghayāti	Megha	Meghayāti

2. Or, as his name implies (याति), he became a devotee, a Yati : Bhāgavata.

3. The story is told in great detail in the Ādi Parvan of the Mahābhārata, also in the Bhāgavata, with some additions evidently of a recent taste. Śarmiṣṭhā, the daughter of Vṛṣaparvan, king of the Daityas, preceptor of the same race), had her thrown into a well. Yayāti, hunting in the forest, found her and taking her to her father, with his consent espoused her. Devayānī, in resentment of Śarmiṣṭhā's treatment, demanded that she should become her handmaid; and Vṛṣaparvan, afraid of Śukra's displeasure, was compelled to comply. In the service of his queen, however, Yayāti beheld Śarmiṣṭhā and secretly wedded her. Devayānī complaining to her father of Yayāti's infidelity, Śukra inflicted on him premature decay, with permission to transfer it to any one willing to give him youth and strength in exchange, as is related in the text. The passage specifying the sons of Yayāti is precisely the same in the Mahābhārata as in our text and is introduced in the same way :

अत्रानुवंशस्त्रियोऽपि भवति। यदुं चतुर्वर्षं चैव देवयानी व्याजायत। दुह्यं
चानुं पुरुं च शम्भिष्ठा वार्षपत्र्यणी॥

4. Bhrgutunga, according to the Brahma.

5. The elder brothers were made Maṇḍala-nṛpas, kings of circles or districts : Bhāgavata. The situation of their governments is not exactly agreed upon.

	Vāyu and Padma	Brahma and Hari Vaṁśa	Bhāgavata
Turvasu	South-east	South-east	West
Druhyu	West	West	South-east
Yadu	South-west	South	South
Anu	North	North	North

The Liṅga describes the ministers and people as expostulating with Yayāti, for illegally giving the supremacy to the youngest son; but he satisfies them by showing that he was justified in setting the seniors aside, for want of filial duty. The Mahābhārata, Udyoga Parva Gālava Caritra, has a legend of Yayāti's giving a daughter to the saint Gālava, who through her means obtains from different princes eight hundred horses, white with one black ear, as a fee for his preceptor Viśvāmitra. Yayāti, after his death and residence in Indra's heaven, is again descending to earth, when his daughter's sons give him the benefit of their devotions and replace him in the celestial sphere. It has the air of an old story. A legend in some respects similar has been related in our text, Bk. IV, Ch. VII.

I will first relate to you the family of Yadu, the eldest son of Yayāti, in which the eternal immutable Viṣṇu descended upon earth in a portion of his essence;¹ of which the glory cannot be described, though forever hymned in order to confer the fruit of all their wishes—whether they desired virtue, wealth, pleasure or liberation—upon all created beings, upon men, saints, heavenly quiristers, spirits of evil, nymphs, centaurs, serpents, birds, demons, gods, sages, Brāhmaṇas and ascetics. Whoever hears the account of the race of Yadu shall be released from all sin; for the supreme spirit, that is without form and which is called Viṣṇu, was manifested in this family.

Yadu had four sons, Sahasrajit, Kroṣṭi, Nala and Raghu.² Śatajit was the son of the elder of these and he had three sons, Haihaya, Vēṇu³ and Haya. The son of Haihaya was Dharmanetra⁴; his son was Kunṭi⁵; his son was Sāhanji⁶; his son was Mahiṣmat⁷; his son was Bhadrasesna⁸; his son was Durddama; his son was Dhanaka⁹, who had four sons, Kṛtavīrya, Kṛtāgni, Kṛtavarman and Kṛtaujas. Kṛtavīrya's son was Arjuna, the sovereign of the seven Dvīpas, the lord of a thousand arms. This prince propitiated the sage Dattātreya, the descendant of Atri, who was a portion of Viṣṇu and solicited and obtained from him these boons—a thousand arms; never acting unjustly; subjugation of the world by justice and protecting it equitably; victory over his enemies; and death by the hands of a person renowned in the three regions of the universe. With these means he ruled over the whole earth with might and justice and offered ten thousand sacrifices. Of him this verse is still recited : "The kings of the earth will assuredly never pursue his steps in sacrifice, in munificence, in devotion, in courtesy and in self-control." In his reign nothing was lost or injured; and so he governed the whole earth with undiminished health, prosperity, power and might, for eighty-five thousand years. While sporting in the waters of the Narmadā and elevated with wine, Rāvaṇa came on his tour of triumph to the city Māhiṣmatī and there he who boasted of overthrowing the gods, the Daityas, the Gandharvas and their king, was taken prisoner by Kṛtavīrya and confined like a tame beast in a corner of his capital.¹⁰

इति श्रीविष्णुपुराणे चतुर्थशो एकादशः अध्यायः॥

At the expiration of his long reign Kārttavīrya was killed by Parasūrāma, who was an embodied portion of the mighty Nārāyaṇa.¹¹ Of the hundred sons of this king, the five principal were Śūra¹², Śūrasena, Vṛṣaṇa¹³, Madhu¹⁴ and Jayadhvaja.¹⁵ The son of the last was Tālajaṅgha, who had a hundred sons, called after him Tālajaṅghas : the eldest of these was Vitihotra; another was Bharata¹⁶, who had two sons, Vṛṣa and Sujāti¹⁷. The son of Vṛṣa was Madhu¹⁸; he had a hundred sons, the chief of whom was Vṛṣṇi and from him the family obtained the name of Vṛṣṇi¹⁹. From the name of their father, Madhu, they were also called Mādhavas; while from the denomination of their common ancestor Yadu, the whole were termed Yādavas.²⁰

NOTES

1. Or, 'in which Kṛṣṇa was born.' It might have been expected, from the importance of this genealogy, that it would have been so carefully preserved, that the authorities would have closely concurred in its details. Although, however, the leading specifications coincide, yet, as we shall have occasion to notice, great and irreconcilable variations occur.

2. The two first generally agree. There are differences in the rest; as

Vāyu	Brahma	Bhāgavata	Kūrma
Nīla	Nala	Nala	Nīla
Ajita	Anjika	Aripu	Jina
Raghu	Payoda		Raghu

The Brahma and Hari Vāriśa read Sahasrāda for the first name; and the Liṅga has Balasani in place of Nala. The Agni makes Śatajit also a son of Yadu.

3. Veṇuhaya : Bhāgavata. Uttānahaya : Padma. Veṭṭahaya : Matsya. They were the sons of Sahasrāda : Brahma and Hari Vāriśa.

4. Dharmatantra : Vāyu, Dharma : Kūrma.

5. Kīrtti : Vāyu.

6. Sanjneya : Vāyu. Saṅkana : Agni. Sahañja of Sahanjani pura : Brahma. Sanjnita : Liṅga. Sanhāna : Matsya. Sohañji : Bhāgavata.

7. By whom the city of Māhiśmatī on the Narbadda was founded : Brahma and Hari Vāriśa.

8. So the Bhāgavata; but the Vāyu, more correctly, has Bhadraśreṇya. See Bk. IV. Ch. VIII. n. 12.

9. Kanaka : Vāyu. Varaka : Liṅga. Andhaka : Kūrma.

10. According to the Vāyu, Kārttavīrya was the aggressor, invading Laikā and there taking Rāvaṇa prisoner. The circumstances are more usually narrated as in our text.

11. See Bk. IV. Ch. VII. Kārttavīrya's fate was the consequence of an imprecation denounced by Āpava or' Vasiṣṭha, the son of Varuṇa, whose hermitage had been burnt, according to the Mahābhārata, Rājadharma, by Citrabhānu or Fire, to whom the king had in his bounty presented the world. The Vāyu makes the king himself the incendiary, with arrows given him by Sūrya to dry up the ocean.

12. Urjita : Bhāgavata.

13. Vṛṣabha : Bhāgavata. Dhṛṣṭa : Matsya, Dhṛṣṇa : Kūrma. Pṛṣṭoka : Padma, Vṛṣṇi : Liṅga. Kṛṣṇākṣa : Brahma.

14. Kṛṣṇa, in all except the Bhāgavata.

15. King of Avanti : Brahma and Hari Vāriśa.

16. Ananta : Vāyu and Agni; elsewhere omitted.

17. Durjaya only : Vāyu, Matsya.

18. This Madhu, according to the Bhāgavata, was the son of Kārttavīrya. The Brahma and Hari Vāriśa make him the son of Vṛṣa, but do not say whose son Vṛṣa was. The commentator on the latter asserts that the name is a synonym of Payoda, the son of Yadu, according to his authority and to that alone.

19. The Bhāgavata agrees with our text, but the Brahma, Hari Vāriśa, Liṅga and Kūrma make Vṛṣaṇa the son of Madhu and derive the family name of Vṛṣṇis or Vārṣneyas from him.

20. The text takes no notice of some collateral tribes, which appear to merit remark. Most of the other authorities, in mentioning the sons of Jayadhvaja, observe that from them came the five great divisions of the Haihaya tribe. These, according to the Vāyu, were the Tālajaṅghas, Vitihotras, Āvantyas, Tuṇḍikeras and Jātas. The Matsya and Agni omit the first and substitute Bhojas; and the latter are included in the list in the Brahma, Padma, Liṅga and Hari Vāriśa. For Jātas the reading is Sañjātas or Sujātas. The Brahma Purāṇa has also Bhāratas, who, as well as the Sujātas, are not commonly specified, it is said, 'from their great number.' They are in all probability invented by the compiler out of the names of the text, Bharata and Sujāti. The situation of these tribes is central India, for the capital of the Tālajaṅgas was Māhiśmatī or Culī-Maheśvara, still called, according to Tod, Shasra-bāhukibasti, 'the village of the thousand-armed;' that is, of Kārttavīrya. Annals of Rajasthan, I. 39. n. The Tuṇḍikeras and Vīthotras are placed in the geographical lists behind the Vindhyan mountains and the termination-kaira is common in the valley of the Narmadā, as Bairkaira or we may have Tuṇḍikera abbreviated, as Tuṇḍari on the Tapti. The Āvanyas were in Ujjayin and the Bhojas were in the neighbourhood probably of Dhār in Malva. These tribes must have preceded, then, the Rajput tribes, by whom these countries are now occupied or Rathores, Chauhans, Pawars, Ghelotes and the rest. There are still some vestiges of them and a tribe of Haihayas still exists, at the top of the valley of Sohagpur in Bhagel-khaṇḍa, aware of their ancient lineage and though few in number, celebrated for their valour. Tod's Rajasthan, I. 39. The scope of the traditions regarding them, especially of their overrunning the country, along with Śakas and other foreign tribes, in the reign preceding that of Sagara (see Bk. IV, Ch. III), indicates their foreign origin also; and if we might trust to verbal resemblances, we might suspect that the Hayas and Haihayas of the Hindus had some connection with the Hia, Hoiei-ke, Hoiei-hu and similarly denominated Hun or Turk tribes, who make a figure in Chinese history. Des Guignes, Histoire des Huns, I.7, 55, 231, II. 253. At the same time it is to be observed that these tribes do not make their appearance until some centuries after the Christian era and the scene of their first exploits is far from the frontiers of India : the coincidence of appellation may be therefore merely accidental. In the word Haya, which properly means 'a horse,' it is not impossible, however, that we have a confirmatory evidence of the Scythian origin of the Haihayas, as Tod supposed; although we cannot with him imagine the word 'horse' itself is derived from haya. Rajasthan, I. 76.

Kroṣṭri, the son of Yadu,¹ had a son named Vrijinivat²; his son was Svāhi³; his son was Ruṣardru⁴; his son was Citraratha; his son was Śaśavindu, who was lord of the fourteen great gems⁵; he had a hundred thousand wives and a million of sons.⁶ The most renowned of them were Pṛthuyaśas, Pṛthukarman, Pṛthujaya, Pṛthukīrtti, Pṛthudāna and Pṛduṣravas. The son of the last of these six⁷ was Tamas⁸; his son was Uṣaṇas⁹, who celebrated a hundred sacrifices of the horse; his son was Śiteyus¹⁰; his son was Rukmakavaca¹¹; his son was Parāvṛt, who had five sons, Rukmeṣu, Pṛthurukman, Jyāmagha, Pālita and Harita.¹² To this day the following verse relating to Jyāmagha is repeated :

"Of all the husbands submissive to their wives, who have been or who will be, the most eminent is the king Jyāmagha¹³, who was the husband of Śaivyā." Śaivyā was barren; but Jyāmagha was so much afraid of her, that he did not take any other wife.

On one occasion the king, after a desperate conflict with elephants and horses, defeated a powerful foe, who abandoning wife, children, kin, army, treasure and dominion fled. When the enemy was put to flight, Jyāmagha beheld a lovely princess left alone and exclaiming, "Save me, father! Save me, brother!" as her large eyes rolled widely with affright.

The king was struck by her beauty and penetrated with affection for her and said to himself, "This is fortunate; I have no children and am the husband of a sterile bride; this maiden has fallen into my hands to rear up to me posterity : I will espouse her; but first I will take her in my car and convey her to my palace, where I must request the concurrence of the queen in these nuptials." Accordingly he took the princess into his chariot and returned to his own capital.

When Jyāmagha's approach was announced, Śaivyā came to the palace gate, attended by the ministers, the courtiers and the citizens, to welcome the victorious monarch; but when she beheld the maiden standing on the left hand of the king, her lips swelled and slightly quivered with resentment and she said to Jyāmagha, "Who is this light-hearted damsel that is with you in the chariot?" The king unprepared with a reply, made answer precipitately, through fear of his queen; "This is my daughter-in-law."

"I have never had a son, rejoined Śaivyā, "and you have no other children. Of what son of yours then is this girl the wife?" The king disconcerted by the jealousy and anger which the words of Śaivyā displayed, made this reply to her in order to prevent further contention; "She is the young bride of the future son whom you shall bring forth." Hearing this, Śaivyā smiled gently and said, "So be it;" and the king entered into his great palace.

They had three sons, Kratha, Kaiśika¹⁴ and Romapāda¹⁵. The son of Romapāda was Babhru¹⁶ and his son was Dhṛti¹⁷. The son of Kaiśika was Cedi, whose descendants were called the Caidya kings¹⁸. The son of Kratha was Kunti¹⁹; his son was Vṛṣṇi²⁰; his son was Nirvṛti²¹; his son was Daśārha; his son was Vyoman; his son was Jimūta; his son was Vikṛti²²; his son was Bhimaratha; his son was Navaratha²³; his son was Daśaratha²⁴; his son was Śakuni; his son was Karambhi; his son was Devarāta; his son was Devakṣatra²⁵; his son was Madhu²⁶; his son was Anavaratha; his son was Kuruvatsa; his son was Anuratha; his son was Puruhotra; his son was Añśu; his son was Satvata, from whom the princes of this house were termed Sātvatas. This was the progeny of Jyāmagha; by listening to the account of whom, a man is purified from his sons.

NOTES

1. In the Brahma Purāṇa and Hari Varmśa we have two families from Kroṣṭri; one which is much the same as that of the text; the other makes short work of a long story, as we shall again notice.

2. Vajravat : Kürma.

3. Śānti : Kürma. Svāhā : Matsya. Triśaṅku : Liṅga.

4. Viṣaṇsu : Agni. Ṛṣabha : Liṅga. Kuśika : Kürma. Ruṣeku : Bhāgavata.

5. Or articles the best of their kind; seven animate and seven inanimate; a wife, a priest, a general, a charioteer, a horse, an elephant and a body of foot soldiers; or instead of the last three, an executioner, an economist, a reader of the Vedas; and a chariot, an umbrella, a jewel, a sword, a shield, a banner and a treasure.

6. The text states this in plain prose, but the Vāyu quotes a verse which makes out but a hundred hundred or 10,000 sons : श्लोकोयं गीतः पुराविदैः। शशविष्वोस्तुपुत्राणां शतानामभवच्छत्। धीमतामनुरूपानां भूरिद्विष्णितेजसां॥

7. The Matsya has the first, third and fifth of our text and Pr̥thudharma, Pr̥thukṛtti and Pr̥thumat. The Kürma has also six names, but makes as many successions.

8. Suyajña : Agni, Brahma, Matsya. Dharma : Bhāgavata.

9. Uṣat : Brahma, Hari Varmśa.

10. Śitikṣu : Agni. Śineyus : Brahma. Purujit : Bhāgavata. The Vāyu has Maruta and Kambalavarhiṣ, brothers, instead.

11. Considerable variety prevails here. The Brahma and Hari Varmśa have Marutta the Rājarṣi (a gross blunder, see Bk. Ch. IV. Ch. I), Kambalavarhiṣ, Śataprasūti, Rukmakavaca : the Agni-Marutta, Kambalavarhiṣ, Rukmeṣu : while the Bhāgavata makes Rucaka son of Uśanas and father to the five princes who in the text are the grandsons of Rukmakavaca.

12. The Bhāgavata has Rukmeṣu, Rukman, Jyāmagha, Pṛthu and Purujit. The Vāyu reads the two last names Parigha and Hari. The Brahma and Hari Varmśa insert Parajit as the father of the five named as in the text.

13. Most of the other authorities mention that the elder of the five brothers, Rukmeṣu, succeeded his father in the sovereignty; and that the second, Pṛthurukman, remained in his brother's service. Pālita and Harita were set over Videha (विदेषु पितान्यस्त्। Liṅga) or Tīrth and Jyāmagha went forth to settle where he might : according to the Vāyu he conquered Madhyadeśa (the country along the Narmadā), Mekalā and the Śuktimat mountains. So the Brahma Purāṇa states that he established himself along the Rikṣavat mountain and dwelt in Śuktimat. He names his son, as we shall, see Vidarbha : the country so called is Berar and amongst his descendants we have the Caidyas or princes of Boghelkhanḍa and Chandail and Dasārha, more correctly perhaps Dasarṇa, Chhattisghar; so that this story of Jyāmagha's adventures appears to allude to the first settlement of the Yādava tribes along the Narmadā more to the south and west than before.

14. The Bhāgavata has Kuśa; the Matsya, Kauśika : all the authorities agree in specifying three sons.

15. Lomapāda : Agni.

16. Vastu : Vāyu. Kr̥ti : Agni.

17. Āhuti : Vāyu. Iti : Padma. Dyuti : Matsya. Bhṛti : Kūrma. This latter is singular in carrying on the line of Romapāda for twelve generations further.

18. The Bhāgavata, however, makes the princes of Cedi continuous from Romapāda; as, Babhru, Dhṛti, Uṣīka, Cedi - the Caidyas, amongst whom were Damaghoṣa and Śiśupāla.

19. Kumbhī : Padma.

20. Dhṛṣṭa : Vāyu. Dhṛṣṭi : Matsya.

21. Nivṛtti : Vāyu. Niḍhṛti : Agni. The Brahma makes three sons, Avanta, Daśārha and Balivṛṣa. In the Liṅga it is said of Daśārha that he was ताप्रारिण सूदसः। 'destroyer of the host of copper (faced; European?) foes.'

22. Vikala : Matsya.

23. Nararatha : Brahma and Hari Varīṣa.

24. Dṛḍharatha : Agni. Devarāta : Liṅga.

25. Soma : Liṅga. Devanaksatra : Padma.

26. There is great variety in the succeeding appellations :

Bhāgavata Vāyu Brahma Matsya Padma Kūrma

Madhu Madhu Madhu Madhu Madhu Madhu

Kuruvaśa Manu Manavaśas Uruvas Puru Kuru

Anu Puruvatsa Purudvat Purudvat Punarvasu Anu

Puruhotra Purudvat Madhu Jantu Jantu Añśa

Āyu Satva and Satva

Satvata Satvata Satvata Satvata Satvata Andhaka

Satvata

The Liṅga has Puruṣaprabhu, Manvat,

Pratarddana, Satvata; and the Agni, Dravavasu,

Puruhotra, Jantu and Sātvata. Some of these originate, no doubt, in the blunders of copyists, but they cannot all be referred to that source.

The sons of Satvata were Bhajina, Bhajamāna, Divya, Andhaka, Devāvṛddha, Mahābhoja and Vṛṣṇi¹. Bhajamāna had three sons Nimi², Krikaṇa³ and Vṛṣṇi⁴, by one wife and as many by another, Satrājīt, Shasrajīt and Ayutajīt⁵. The son of Devāvṛddha was Babhru of whom this verse is recited : "We hear when afar and we behold when nigh, that Babhru is the first of men and Devāvṛddha is equal to the gods; sixty-six persons following the precepts of one and six thousand and eight who were disciples of the other, obtained immortality." Mahābhoja was a pious prince; his descendants were the Bhojas, the princes of Mrittikāvati⁶, then called Mārttikāvatas⁷. Vṛṣṇi had two sons, Sumitra and Yudhājīt⁸; from the former Anamitra and Śini were born⁹. The son of Anamitra was Nighna, who had two sons, Prasena and Satrājit. The divine Āditya, the sun, was the friend of the latter.

On one occasion Satrājit, while walking along the sea shore, addressed his mind to Sūrya and hymned his praises; on which the divinity appeared and stood before him. Beholding him in an indistinct shape, Satrājit said to the sun, "I have beheld you, lord, in the heavens as a globe of fire : now do you show favour unto me, that I may see you in your proper form." On this the sun taking the jewel called Syamantaka from off his neck, placed it apart and Satrājit beheld him of a dwarfish stature, with a body like burnished copper and with slightly reddish eyes. Having offered his adorations, the sun desired him to demand a boon and he requested that the jewel might become his. The sun presented it to him and then resumed his place in the sky. Having obtained the spotless gem of gems, Satrājit wore it on his neck and becoming as brilliant thereby as the sun himself, irradiating all the region with his splendour, he returned to Dvārakā. The inhabitants of that city, beholding him approach, repaired to the eternal male, Puruṣottama, who, to sustain the burden of the earth, had assumed a mortal form (as Kṛṣṇa) and said to him, "Lord, assuredly the divine sun is coming to visit you." But Kṛṣṇa smiled and said, "It is not the divine sun, but Satrājit, to whom Āditya has presented the Syamantaka gem and he now wears it; go and behold him without apprehension." Accordingly they departed. Satrājit having gone to his house, there deposited the jewel, which yielded daily eight loads of gold and through its marvellous virtue dispelled all fear of portents, wild beasts, fire, robbers and famine.

Acyuta was of opinion that this wonderful gem should be in the possession of Ugrasena; but although he had the power of taking it from Satrājit, he did not deprive him of it, that he might not occasion any disagreement amongst the family. Satrājīt, on the other hand, fearing that Kṛṣṇa would ask him for the jewel, transferred it to his brother Prasena. Now it was the peculiar property of this jewel, that although it was an inexhaustible source of good to a virtuous person, yet when worn by a man of bad character it was the cause of his death. Prasena having taken the gem and hung it round his neck, mounted his horse and went to the woods to hunt. In the chase he was killed by lion. The lion, taking the jewel in his mouth, was about to depart, when he was observed and killed by Jāmbavant, the king of the bears, who carrying off the gem retired into his cave and gave it to his son Sukumāra to play with.

When some time had elapsed and Prasena did not appear, the Yādavas began to whisper one to another and to say, "This is Kṛṣṇa's doing; desirous of the jewel and not obtaining it, he has perpetrated the murder of Prasena in order to get it into his possession."

When these calumnious rumours came to the knowledge of Kṛṣṇa, he collected a number of the Yādavas and accompanied by them pursued the course of Prasena by the impressions of his horse's hoofs. Ascertaining by this means that he and his horse had been killed by a lion, he was acquitted by all the people of any share in his death. Desirous of recovering the gem he then followed the steps of the lion and at no great distance came to the place where the lion had been killed by the bear. Following the foot-marks of the latter, he arrived at the foot of a mountain, where he desired the Yādavas to await him, while he continued the track. Still guided by the marks of the feet, he discovered a cavern and had scarcely entered it, when he heard the nurse of Sukumāra saying to him,

"The lion killed Prasena; the lion has been killed by Jāmbavant : weep not, Sukumāra, the Syamantaka is your own." Thus assured of his object, Kṛṣṇa advanced into the cavern and saw the brilliant jewel in the hands of the nurse, who was giving it as a play thing to Sukumāra. The nurse soon descried his approach and marking his eyes fixed upon the gem with eager desire, called loudly for help. Hearing her cries, Jāmbavant, full of anger, came to the cave and a conflict ensued between him and Acyuta, which lasted twenty-one days. The Yādavas who had accompanied the latter waited seven or eight days in expectation of his return, but as the foe of Madhu still came out forth, they concluded that he must have met his death in the cavern. "It could not have required so many days," they thought "to overcome an enemy;" and accordingly they departed and returned to Dvārakā and announced that Kṛṣṇa had been killed.

When the relations of Acyuta heard this intelligence, they performed all the obsequial rites suited to the occasion. The food and water thus offered to Kṛṣṇa in the celebration of his Śraddha served to support his life and invigorate his strength in the combat in which he was engaged; while his adversary, wearied by daily conflict with a powerful foe, bruised and battered in every limb by heavy blows and enfeebled by want of food, became unable longer to resist him. Overcome by his mighty antagonist, Jāmbavant cast himself before him and said, "You, mighty being, are surely invincible by all the demons and by the spirits of heaven, earth or hell; much less are you to be vanquished by mean and powers creatures in a human shape; and still less by such as we are, who are born of brute origin. Undoubtedly you are a portion of my sovereign lord Nārāyaṇa, the defender of the universe." Thus addressed by Jāmbavant, Kṛṣṇa explained to him fully that he had descended to take upon himself the burden of the earth and kindly alleviated the bodily pain which the bear suffered from the fight, by touching him with his hand, Jāmbavant again prostrated himself before Kṛṣṇa and presented to him his daughter Jāmbavantī, as an offering suitable to a guest. He also delivered to his visitor the Syamantaka jewel. Although a gift from such an individual was not fit for his acceptance, yet Kṛṣṇa took the gem for the purpose of clearing his reputation.

He then returned along with his bride Jāmbavantī to Dvārakā. When the people of Dvārakā beheld Kṛṣṇa alive and returned, they were filled with delight, so that those who were bowed down with years recovered youthful vigour; and all the Yādavas, men and women, assembled round Ānakadundubhi, the father of the hero and congratulated him. Kṛṣṇa related to the whole assembly of the Yādavas all that had happened, exactly as it had befallen and restoring the Syamantaka jewel to Satrājit was exonerated from the crime of which he had been falsely accused. He then led Jāmbavantī into the inner apartments.

When Satrājit reflected that he had been the cause of the aspersions upon Kṛṣṇa's character, he felt alarmed and to conciliate the prince he gave him to wife his daughter Satyabhāmā.

The maiden had been previously sought in marriage by several of the most distinguished Yādavas, as Akrūra, Kṛtavarman and Śatadhanvan, who were highly incensed at her being wedded to another and leagued in enmity against Satrājit. The chief amongst them, with Akrūra and Kṛtavarman, said to Śatadhanvan, "This caitiff Satrājit has offered a gross insult to you, as well as to us who solicited his daughter, by giving her to Kṛṣṇa : let him not live : why do you not kill him and take the jewel? Should Acyuta therefore enter into feud with you, we will take your part."

Upon this promise Śatadhanvan undertook to slay Satrājit. When news arrived that the sons of Pāṇḍu had been burned in the house of wax¹⁰, Kṛṣṇa who knew the real truth, set off for Vāraṇāvata to allay the animosity of Duryodhana and to perform the duties his relationship required. Śatadhanvan taking advantage of his absence, killed Satrājit in his sleep and took possession of the gem. Upon this coming to the knowledge of Satyabhāmā, she immediately mounted her chariot and filled with fury at her father's murder, repaired to Bāraṇāvata and told her husband how Satrājit had been killed by Śatadhanvan in resentment of her having been married to another and how he had carried off the jewel; and she implored him to take prompt measures to avenge such heinous wrong. Kṛṣṇa, who is ever internally placid, being informed of these transactions, said to Satyabhāmā, as his eyes flashed with indignation. "These are indeed audacious injuries, but I will not submit to them from so vile a wretch. They must assail the tree, who would kill the birds that there have built their nests. Dismiss excessive sorrow; it needs not your lamentations to excite any wrath." Returning forthwith to Dvārakā, Kṛṣṇa took Baladeva apart and said to him, "A lion slew Prasena, hunting in the forests; and now Satrājit has been murdered by Śatadhanvan. As both these are removed, the jewel which belonged to them is our common right. Up then, ascend your car and put Śatadhanvan to death."

Being thus excited by his brother, Balarāma engaged resolutely in the enterprise; but Śatadhanvan, being aware of their hostile designs, repaired to Kṛtavarman and required his assistance. Kṛtavarman, however, declined to assist him, pleading his inability to engage in a conflict with both Baladeva and Kṛṣṇa, Śatadhanvan thus disappointed, applied to Akrūra; but he said, "You must have recourse to some other protector. How should I be able to defend you? There is no one even amongst the immortals, whose praises are celebrated throughout the universe, who is capable of contending with the wielder of the discus, at the stamp of whose foot the three worlds tremble; whose hand makes the wives of the Asuras widows, whose weapons no host, however mighty, can resist: no one is capable of encountering the wielder of the ploughshare, who annihilates the prowess of his enemies by the glances of his eyes, that roll with the joys of wine; and whose vast ploughshare manifests his might, by seizing and exterminating the most formidable foes." "Since this is the case," replied Śatadhanvan, "and you are unable to assist me, at least accept and take care of this jewel." "I will do so," answered Akrūra, "if you promise that even in the last extremity you will not divulge its being in my possession." To this Śatadhanwan agreed and Akrūra took the jewel; and other former mounting a very swift mare, one that could travel a hundred leagues a day, fled from Dvārakā. When Kṛṣṇa heard of Śatadhanvan's flight, he harnessed his four horses, Saiva, Sugrīva, Meghupuspa and Balāhaka, to his car and accompanied by Balarāma, set off in pursuit.

The mare held her speed and accomplished her hundred leagues; but when she reached the country of Mithilā, her strength was exhausted and she dropped down and died. Śatadhanwan¹¹ dismounting, continued his flight on foot. When his pursuers came to the place where the mare had perished, Kṛṣṇa said to Balarāma, "Do you remain in the car, while I follow the villain on foot and put him to death; the ground here is bad; and the horses will not be able to drag the chariot across it." Balarāma accordingly stayed with the car and Kṛṣṇa followed Śatadhanvan on foot; when he had chased him for two kosa, he discharged his discus and although Śatadhanwan was at a considerable distance, the weapon struck off his head. Kṛṣṇa then coming up, searched his body and his dress for the Syamantaka jewel, but found it not. He then returned to Balabhadra and told him that they had effected the death of Śatadhanvan to no purpose, for the precious gem, the quintessence of all worlds, was not upon his person. When Balabhadra heard this, he flew into a violent rage and said to Vāsudeva, "Shame light upon you, to be thus greedy of wealth! I acknowledge no brotherhood with you. Here lies my path. Go whither you please; I have done with Dvārakā, with you, with all our house. It is of no use to seek to impose upon me with your perjuries." Thus reviling his brother, who fruitlessly endeavoured to appease him, Balabhadra went to the city of Videha, where Janaka¹² received him hospitably and there he remained. Vāsudeva returned to Dvārakā. It was during his stay in the dwelling of Janaka that Duryodhana, the son of Dhṛitarāṣṭra, learned from Balabhadra the art of fighting with the mace. At the expiration of three years, Ugrasena and other chiefs of the Yādavas, being satisfied that Kṛṣṇa had not the jewel, went to Videha and removed Balabhadra's suspicions and brought him home.

Akrūra, carefully considering the treasures which the precious jewel secured to him, constantly celebrated religious rites and purified with holy prayer¹³, lived in affluence for fifty-two years; and through the virtue of that gem there was no dearth nor pestilence in the whole country.¹⁴ At the end of that period, Śatruघna, the great grandson of Satvata, was killed by the Bhojas and as they were in bonds of alliance with Akrūra, he accompanied them in their flight from Dvārakā.

From the moment of his departure various calamities, portents, snakes, dearth, plague and the like, began to prevail; so that he whose emblem is Garuda called together the Yādavas, with Balabhadra and Ugrasena and recommended them to consider how it was that so many prodigies should have occurred at the same time. On this Andhaka, one of the elders of the Yadu race, thus spoke : "Wherever Śvaphalka; the father of Akrūra, dwelt, there famine, plague, dearth and other visitations were unknown.

Once when there was want of rain in the kingdom of Kāśīrājā, Śvaphalka was brought there and immediately there fell rain from the heavens. It happened also that the queen of Kāśīrājā conceived and was quick with a daughter; but when the time of delivery arrived, the child issued not from the womb. Twelve years passed away and still the girl was unborn. Then Kāśīrājā spoke to the child and said, 'Daughter, why is your birth thus delayed? Come forth; I desire to behold you, why do you inflict this protracted suffering upon your mother?' Thus addressed, the infant answered, 'if, father, you will present a cow every day to the Brāhmaṇas, I shall at the end of three years more be born.' The king accordingly presented daily a cow to the Brāhmaṇas and at the end of three years the damsel came into the world. Her father called her Gāndini and the subsequently gave her to Śvaphalka, when he came to his palace for his benefit. Gāndini, as long as she lived, gave a cow to the Brāhmaṇas every day. Akrūra was her son by Śvaphalka and his birth therefore proceeds from a combination of uncommon excellence.

When a person such as he is, is absent from us, it is likely that famine, pestilence and prodigies should fail to occur? Let him then be invited to return : the faults of men of exalted worth must not be too severely scrutinised."

Agreeably to the advice of Andhaka the elder, the Yādavas sent a mission, headed by Keśava, Ugrasena and Balabhadra, to assure Akrūra that no notice would be taken of any irregularity committed by him; and having satisfied him that he was in no danger, they brought him back to Dvārakā. Immediately on his arrival, in consequence of the properties of the jewel, the plague, dearth, famine and every other calamity and portent, ceased. Kṛṣṇa, observing this, reflected¹⁵ that the descent of Akrūra from Gāndinī and Śvaphalka was a cause wholly disproportionate to such an effect and that some powerful influence must be exerted to arrest pestilence and famine. "Of a surety," said he to himself, "the great Syamantaka jewel is in his keeping, for such I have heard are amongst its properties. This

Akrūra too has been lately celebrating sacrifice after sacrifice; his own means are insufficient for such expenses; it is beyond a doubt that he has the jewel." Having come to this conclusion, he called a meeting of all the Yādavas at his house, under the pretext of some festive celebration. When they were all seated and the purpose of their assembling had been explained and the business accomplished, Kṛṣṇa entered into conversation with Akrūra and after laughing and joking, said to him, "Kinsman, you are a very prince in your liberality; but we know very well that the precious jewel which was stolen by Sudhanvan was delivered by him to you and is now in your possession, to the great benefit of this kingdom. So let it remain; we all derive advantage from its virtues. But Balabhadra suspects that I have it and therefore, out of kindness to me, show it to the assembly." When Akrūra, who had the jewel with him, was thus taxed, he hesitated what he should do. "If I deny that I have the jewel," thought he, "they will search my person and find the gem hidden amongst my clothes. I cannot submit to a search." So reflecting, Akrūra said to Nārāyaṇa, the cause of the whole world, "It is true that the Syamantaka jewel was entrusted to me by Śatadhanvan, when he went from hence. I expected every day that you would ask me for it and with much inconvenience therefore I have kept it until now. The charge of it has subjected me to so much anxiety, that I have been incapable of enjoying any pleasure and have never known a moment's ease. Afraid that you would think me unfit to retain possession of a jewel so essential to the welfare of the kingdom, I forbore to mention to you its being in my hands; but now take it yourself and give the care of it to whom you please." Having thus spoken, Akrūra drew forth from his garments a small gold box and took from it the jewel. On displaying it to the assembly of the Yādavas, the whole chamber where they sat was illuminated by its radiance.

"This", said Akrūra, "is the Syamantaka gem, which was consigned to me by Śatadhanvan : let him to whom it belongs now take it." When the Yādavas beheld the jewel, they were filled with astonishment and loudly expressed their delight. Balabhadra immediately claimed the jewel as his property jointly with Acyuta, as formerly agreed upon; while Satyabhāmā demanded it as her right, as it had originally belonged to her father.

Between these two Kṛṣṇa considered himself as an ox between the two wheels of a cart and thus spoke to Akrūra in the presence of all the Yādavas : "This jewel has been exhibited to the assembly in order to clear my reputation; it is the joint right of Balabhadra and myself and is the patrimonial inheritance of Satyabhāmā. But this jewel, to be of advantage to the whole kingdom, should be taken charge of by a person who leads a life of perpetual continence : If worn by an impure individual, it will be the cause of his death.

Now as I have sixteen thousand wives, I am not qualified to have the care of it. It is not likely that Satyabhāmā will agree to the conditions that would entitle her to the possession of the jewel; and as to Balabhadra, he is too much addicted to wine and the pleasures of sense to lead a life of self-denial. We are therefore out of the question and all the Yādavas, Balabhadra, Satyabhāmā and myself, request you, most bountiful Akrūra, to retain the care of the jewel, as you have done hitherto, for the general good; for you are qualified to have the keeping of it and in your hands it has been productive of benefit to the country. You must not decline compliance with our request." Akrūra, thus urged, accepted the jewel and thenceforth wore it publicly round his neck, where it shone with dazzling brightness; and Akrūra moved about like the sun, wearing a garland of light.

5. The Brahma and Hari Varīśa add to the first three Śūra and Purañjaya and to the second Dāsaka.

6. By the Parṇāśā river : Brahma Purāṇa : a river in Malva.

7. These are made incorrectly the descendants of Babhru in the Hari Varīśa.

8. The Bhāgavata, Matsya and Vāyu agree in the main, as to the genealogy that follows, with our text. The Vāyu states that Vṛṣṇi had two wives, Mādrī and Gāndhārī by the former he had Yudhājīt and Anamitra and by the latter Sumitra and Devamīḍhuṣa. The Matsya also names the ladies, but gives Sumitra to Gāndhārī and makes Mādrī the mother of Yudhājīt, Devamīḍhuṣa, Anamitra and Śini. The Agni has a similar arrangement, but substitutes Dhṛṣṭha for Vṛṣṇi and makes him the fifteenth in descent from Satvata. The Liṅga, Padma, Brahma Purāṇa and Hari Varīśa have made great confusion by altering, apparently without any warrant, the name of Vṛṣṇi of Krostri.

9. The Bhāgavata makes them sons of Yudhājīt; the Matsya and Agni, as observed in the preceding note, his brothers as well as Sumitra's.

10. This alludes to events detailed in the Mahābhārata.

11. The Vāyu calls Sudhanvan or Śatadhanvan king of Mithilā.

12. A rather violent anachronism to make Janaka contemporary with Balarāma.

13. The text gives the commencement of the prayer, but commentator does not say whence it is taken : सवनगातौ क्षत्रियवैश्यौ निघ्नं ब्रह्मा भगवति। 'Oh, goddess! The murderer of a Kṣatriya or Vaiśya, engaged in religious duties, is the slayer of a Brāhmaṇa;' i.e. the crime is equally heinous. Perhaps the last word should be भवति 'is'.

14. Some of the circumstances of this marvellous gem seem to identify it with a stone of widely diffused celebrity in the East and which, according to the Mohamedan writers, was given originally by Noah to Japhet; the Hijer al martyr of the Arabs, Sang yeddat of the Persians and Jeddah tash of the Turks, the possession of which secures rain and fertility. The author of the Habib-us-Sier gravely asserts that this stone was in the hands of the Mongols in his day or in the tenth century.

15. Kṛṣṇa's reflecting, the commentator observes, is to be understood of him only as consistent with the account here given of him, as if he were a mere man; for, as he was omniscient, there was no occasion for him to reflect or reason. Kṛṣṇa however appears in this story in a very different light from that in which he is usually represented; and the adventure, it may be remarked, is detached from the place in which we might have expected to find it, the narrative of his life, whch forms the subject of the next book.

16. The story of the Syamantaka gem occurs in the Bhāgavata. Vāyu, Matsya, Brahma and Hari Varīṣa and is alluded to in other Purāṇas. It may be considered as one common to the whole series. Independently of the part borne in it by Kṛṣṇa, it presents a curious and no doubt a faithful picture of ancient manners, in the loose self-government of a kindred clan, in the acts of personal violence which are committed, in the feuds which ensue, in the public meetings which are held and the part that is taken by the elders and by the women in all the proceedings of the community.

In the family of Anamitra, Prśni was born; his son was Śvaphalka,³ the sanctity of whose character has been described : the younger brother of Śvaphalka was named Citraka.

Śvaphalka had by Gāndini, besides Akrūra, Upamadgu, Mṛdura, Śārimejaya, Giri, Kṣatropakṣatra. Śatrughna, Arimarddana, Dharmadhris, Dhṛṣṭasarman, Gandhamojavāha and Prativāha. He had also a daughter, Sutārā.⁴

Devavat and Upadeva were the sons of Akrūra. The sons of Citrika were Pṛthu and Vipritha and many others.⁵ Andhaka had four sons, Kukkura, Bhajamāna, Śuci,⁶ Kambalavarhiṣa. The son of Kukkura was Vṛṣṭa;⁷ his son was Kapotaroman; his son was Viloman;⁸ his son was Bhava;⁹ who was also called Candanodakadundubhi;¹⁰ he was a friend of the Gandharva Tumburu; his son was Abhijit, his son was Punarvasu; his son was Āhuka and he had also a daughter named Āhukī. The sons of Āhuka were Devaka and Ugrasena. The former had four sons, Devavat, Upadeva, Sudeva and Devarakṣita and seven daughters, Vṛkadevā, Upadevā, Devarakṣitā, Śrīdevā, Sāntidevā, Sahadevā and Devakī: all the daughters were married to Vasudeva. The sons of Ugrasena were Kaṇsa, Nyagrodha, Sunāman, Kaṅka, Saṅku, Subhūmi, Rāṣṭrapāla, Yuddhamuṣṭī and Tuṣṭimat; and his daughters were Kansā, Kansavatī, Sutanu, Rāṣtrapālī and Kaṅkī.

The son of Bhajamāna¹¹ was Vidūratha; his son was Śūra; his son was Śamin;¹² his son was Pratikṣatra;¹³ his son was Svayambhoja;¹⁴ his son was Hridika, who had Kṛtavarman, Śatadhanu, Devamīduṣa and others.¹⁵ Śūra, the son of Devamīduṣa,¹⁶ was married to Māriṣā and had by her ten sons. On the birth of Vasudeva, who was one of these sons, the gods, to whom the future is manifest, foresaw that the divine being would take a human form in his family and thereupon they sounded with joy the drums of heaven; from this circumstance Vasudeva was also called Ānakadundubhi.¹⁷ His brothers were Devabhāga, Devaśravas, Anādhṛṣṭi, Karundhaka, Vatsabālaka, Śrījaya, Śyāma, Śamīka and Gaṇḍūṣa; and his sisters were Pṛthā, Śrutadevā, Śrutakīrtti, Śrutasravas and Rājādhidevī. Śūra had a friend named Kuntibhoja, to whom, as he had no children, he presented in due from his daughter Pṛthā. She was married to Pāṇḍu and bore him Yudhiṣṭhira, Bhīma and Arjuna, who were in fact the sons of the deities Dharma, Vāyu (air) and Indra. While she was yet unmarried, also, she had a son named Karṇa, begotten by the divine Āditya (the sun).

Pāṇḍu had another wife, named Mādrī who had by the twin sons of Āditya, Nāsatya and Dasra, two sons, Nakula and Sahadeva.¹⁸

Śrutadevā was married to the Kāruṣa prince Vṛddhaśarman and bore him the fierce Asura Dantavaktra. Dhṛṣṭaketu, Rājā of Kaikeya,¹⁹ married Śrutakīrtti and had by her Santarddana and four other sons, known as the five Kaikeyas. Jayasena, king of Avanti, married Rājādhidēvi and had Vinda and Anuvinda. Śrutasravas was wedded to Damaghoṣa, Rājā of Cedi and bore him Śiśupāla.²⁰ This prince was in a former existence the unrighteous but valiant monarch of the Daityas, Hiranyaśaṅku, who was killed by the divine guardian of creation (in the man-lion Avatāra). He was next the ten-headed sovereign Rāvaṇa, whose unequalled prowess, strength and power were overcome by the lord of the three worlds, Rāma. Having been killed by the deity in the form of Rāghava, he had long enjoyed the reward of his virtues in exemption from an embodied state, but had now received birth once more as Śiśupāla, the son of Damaghoṣa, king of Cedi. In this character he renewed, with greater inveteracy than ever, his hostile hatred towards the god surnamed Puṇḍarīkākṣa, a portion of the supreme being, who had descended to lighten the burdens of the earth; and was in consequence slain by him : but from the circumstance of his thoughts being constantly engrossed by the supreme being,

Śiśupāla was united with him after death; for the lord give to those to whom he is favourable whatever they desire and he bestows a heavenly and exalted even upon those whom he slays in his displeasure.

NOTES

1. Bhūtū : Vāyu. Kuni : Bhāgavata. Dyumni : Matsya.

2. The Agni makes these all brother's sons of Satyaka and adds another, Rṣabha, the father of Śvaphalka.

3. The authorities are not agreed here. Śvaphalka, according to the Agni, as just remarked, comes from Śimi, the son of Anamitra. The Bhāgavata, instead of Pr̄ṣni, has Vṛṣṇi, son of Anamitra; the Brahma and Hari Varmā have Vṛṣṇi; and the Agni, Pr̄ṣni, son of Yudhajit. The Matsya also makes Yudhajit the ancestor of Akrūra, through Rṣabha and Jayanta. Yudhajit in the Brahma, is the son of Kroṣṭri.

4. The different authorities vary in the reading of these names, though they generally concur in the number.

5. The Matsya and Padma call them sons of Akrūra, but no doubt incorrectly.

6. Śami : Vāyu. Śaśi : Matsya. Śini : Agni. This last makes them the sons of Babhru and calls the first Sundara.

7. Vṛṣṇi : Bhāgavata, Vāyu, Matsya, Dhṛṣṭa : Agni. Dhṛṣṇu : Brahma, Hari Varmā.

8. The Bhāgavata puts Viloman first. The Liṅga makes it an epithet of Kapotaroman, saying he was Vilomaja, 'irregularly begotten.' In place of Viloman we have Raivata, Vāyu; Taittiri, Matsya; Tittiri, Agni.

9. Nava : Agni. Bala : Liṅga. Nala : Matsya. Tamas : Kūrma. Anu : Bhāgavata.

10. The Matsya, Vāyu and Agni agree with our text. The Liṅga, Padma and Kūrma read Ānakadundubhi as a synonym of Bala. The Brahma and Hari Varmā have no such name, but here insert Punarvasu, son of Taittiri. The Bhāgavata has a different series or Anu, Andhaka, Dundubhi, Arijita, Punarvasu, Āhuka.

11. This Bhajamāna is the son of Andhaka, according to all the best authorities; so the Padma calls this branch the Andhakas. The Agni makes him the son of Babhru.

12. Vāta, Nivāta, Śamīn : Vāyu.
 13. Sonāśva : Matsya. Sonākṣa : Padma. Śini : Bhāgavata.
 14. Bhojaka : Agni. Bhoja : Padma.
 15. Ten sons : Matsya.
 16. Devārha : Vāyu, Padma, Agni and Matsya; and a different series follows or Kambalavarhiṣa,
 Asamaujas, Samaujas, Sudānṣṭra, Suvaśa, Dhṛṣṭa, Anamitra, Nighna, Satrajit. They all make Vasudeva the son of Śūra, however; but the three first leave it doubtful whether that Śūra was the son of Bhajamāna or not. The Bhāgavata and Brahma agree with the text, which is probably correct. The Brahma has Śūra, son of Devamīḍhuṣa, although it does not specify the latter amongst the sons of Hridika.
 17. Ānaka a larger and Dundubhi a smaller drum.
 18. The Mahābhārata is the best authority for these circumstances.
 19. The Padma calls him king of Kashmir.
 20. The Brahma Purāṇa and Hari Varṇśa make Śrutadevā mother of Śiśupāla and Pṛthukīrtti of Dantavaktra.

Maitreya said— Most eminent of all who cultivate Piety, I am curious to hear from you and you are able to explain to me, how it happened that the same being who when killed by Viṣṇu as Hiranyakaśipu and Rāvaṇa obtained enjoyments which, though scarcely

Hiranyakaśipu, he assumed a body composed of the figures of a lion and a man, so that Hiranyakaśipu was not aware that his destroyer was Viṣṇu : although therefore the quality of purity, derived from exceeding merit, had been attained, yet his mind was perplexed by the predominance of the property of passion; and the consequence of that intermixture was, that he reaped, as the result of his death by the hands of Viṣṇu, only unlimited power and enjoyment upon earth, as Daśānana, the sovereign of the three spheres; he did not obtain absorption into the supreme spirit, that is without beginning or end because his mind was not wholly dedicated to that sole object. So also Daśānana being entirely subject to the passion of love and engrossed completely by the thoughts of Jānakī, could not comprehend that the son of Daśaratha whom he beheld was in reality the divine Acyuta. At the moment of his death he was impressed with the notion that his adversary was a mortal and therefore the fruit he derived from being slain by Viṣṇu was confined to his birth in the illustrious family of the kings of Cedi and the exercise of extensive dominion. In this situation many circumstances brought the names of Viṣṇu to his notice and on all these occasions the enmity that had accumulated through successive births influenced his mind; and in speaking constantly with disrespect of Acyuta, he was ever repeating his different appellations. Whether walking, eating, sitting or sleeping, his animosity was never at rest and Kṛṣṇa was ever present to his thoughts in his ordinary semblance, having eyes as beautiful as the leaf of the lotus, clad in bright yellow raiment, decorated with a garland, with bracelets on his arms and wrists and a diadem on his head; having four robust arms, bearing the conch, the disc, the mace and the lotus. Thus uttering his names, even though in malediction and dwelling upon his image, though in enmity, he beheld Kṛṣṇa, when inflicting his death, radiant with resplendent weapons, bright with ineffable splendour in his own essence as the supreme being and all his passion and hatred ceased and he was purified from every defect. Being killed by the discus of Viṣṇu at the instant he thus meditated, all his sins were consumed by his divine adversary and he was blended with him by whose might he had been slain. I have thus replied to your inquiries. He by whom the divine Viṣṇu is named or called to recollection, even in enmity, obtains a reward that is difficult of attainment to the demons and the gods : how much greater shall be his recompense who glorifies the deity in fervour and in faith!

Vasudeva, also called Ānakadundubhi, had Rohinī, Pauravī,¹ Bhadrā, Madirā, Devakī and several other wives. His sons by Rohinī were Balabhadra, Sāraṇa, Śaru, Durmada and others. Balabhadra espoused Revatī and had by her Nisaṭha and Ulmuka. The sons of Sāraṇa were Mārṣṭi, Mārṣṭimat, Śiśu, Satyadhṛti and others. Bhadrāśva, Bhadrabāhu, Durgama, Bhūta and others, were born in the family of Rohinī (of the race of Puru). The sons of Vasudeva by Madirā were Nanda, Upananda, Krītaka and others. Bhadrā bore him Upanidhi, Gada and others. By his wife Vaisālī he had one son named Kauśika. Devakī bore him six sons, Kīrttimat, Suṣeṇa, Udāyin, Bhadrasena, Rijudāsa and Bhadradeha; all of whom Kaṅsa put to death.²

When Devakī was pregnant the seventh time, Yoganidrā (the sleep of devotion), sent by Viṣṇu, extricated the embryo from its maternal womb at midnight and transferred it to that of Rohinī; and from having been thus taken away, the child (who was Balarāma) received the name of Saṅkarṣaṇa. Next, the divine Viṣṇu himself, the root of the vast universal tree, inscrutable by the understandings of all gods, demons, sages and men, past, present or to come, adored by Brahmā and all the deities, he who is without beginning, middle or end, being moved to relieve the earth of her load, descended into the womb of Devakī and was born as her son Vāsudeva. Yoganidrā, proud to execute his orders, removed the embryo to Yaśodā, the wife of Nanda the cowherd.

From the moment he appeared, all mankind were led into the righteous path in him. While this powerful being resided in this world of mortals, he had sixteen thousand and one hundred wives; of these the principal were Rukminī, Satyabhāmā, Jāmbavatī, Jātahaśinī and four others. By these the universal form, who is without beginning, begot a hundred and eighty thousand sons, of whom thirteen are most renowned, Pradyumna, Carudeṣṇa, Sāmba and others. Pradyumna married Kakudvatī, the daughter of Rukmin and had by her Aniruddha. Aniruddha married Subhadrā, the grand-daughter of the same Rukmin and she bore him a son named Vajra. The son of Vajra was Bāhu; and his son was Sucāru.³

In this manner the descendants of Yadu multiplied and there were many hundreds of thousands of them, so that it would be impossible to repeat their names in hundreds of years. Two verses relating to them are current; the domestic instructors of the boys in the use of arms amounted to three crores and eighty lacs (or thirty-eight millions). Who shall enumerate the whole of the mighty men of the Yādava race, who were tens of ten thousands and hundreds of hundred thousands in number?" Those powerful Daityas who were killed in the conflicts between them and the gods were born again upon earth as men, as tyrants and oppressors; and in order to check their violence, the gods also descended to the world of mortals and became members of the hundred and one branches of the family of Yadu. Viṣṇu was to them a teacher and a ruler and all the Yādavas were obedient to his commands.

NOTES

1. Pauravī is rather a title attached to a second Rohinī, to distinguish her from the first, the mother of Balarāma : she is also said by the Vāyu to be the daughter of Bāhlīka.

2. The enumeration of our text is rather imperfect. The Vāyu names the wives of Vasudeva, Pauravī, Rohinī, Madirā, Rudrā, Vaiśākhī, Devakī; and adds two bond-maids, Sugandhī and Vanarajī. The Brahma Purāṇa and Hari Varmā name twelve wives and two slaves; Rohinī, Madirā, Vaiśākhī, Bhadrā, Sunāmnī, Sahadevā, Śāntidevā, Śrīdevā, Devarakṣitā, Vṛkadevī, Upadevī, Devakī; and Śāntanu and Bāravā. The children of the two slaves, according to the Vāyu, were Puṇḍra, who became a king and Kapila, who retired to the woods. In the Bhāgavata we have thirteen wives, Pauravī, Rohinī, Bhadrā, Madirā, Rocanā, Ilā, Devakī, Dhṛtadevī, Śāntidevā, Upadevī, Śrīdevā, Devarakṣitā and Sahadevā : the last seven in this and the preceding list are the daughters of Devaka.

3. The wives and children of Kṛṣṇa are more particularly described in the next book. The Brahma Purāṇa and Hari Varmā add some details of the descendants of Vasudeva's brothers : thus Devabhāga is said to be the father of Uddhava; Anadhrṣṭi of Devasravas, a great scholar or Paṇḍit. Devasravas, another brother of Vasudeva, had Satrughna and another son called Ekalavya, who for some cause being exposed when an infant, was found and brought up by the Niṣādas and was then termed Niṣādin, Vatsavat (Vatsabālaka) and Gaṇḍūṣa being childless, Vasudeva gave his son Kauśika to be adopted by the former and Kṛṣṇa gave Cāruḍeṣṇa and three others to the latter. Kanaka (Karundhakā) had two sons, Tantrija and Tantripāla. Avākṣrinjima (Śrījaya) had also two, Vīra and Aśvahanu. The gracious Śamika became as the son (although the brother) of Śyāma and disdaining the joint rule which the princes of the house of Bhoja exercised, made himself paramount. Yudhiṣṭhīra was his friend. The extravagant numbers of the Yādavas merely indicate that they were, as they undoubtedly were, a powerful and numerous tribe, of whom many traces exist in various parts of India.

इति श्रीविष्णुपुराणे चतुर्थांशे घोडशः अध्यायः॥

Parāśara said— I shall now summarily give you an account of the descendants of Turvasu.

The son of Turvasu was Vahni;¹ his son was Gobhānu;² his son was Traisāmba;³ his son was Karandhma; his son was Marutta. Marutta had no children and he therefore adopted Duṣyanta, of the family of Puru; by which the line of Turvasu merged into that of Puru.⁴ This took place in consequence of the malediction denounced on his son by Yayāti.⁵

1. Varga : Agni.
2. Bhānumat : Bhāgavata, which also inserts Bhaga before him.
3. Tribhānu : Vāyu. Triśānu : Brahma. Traisāli : Agni. Triśāri : Matsya.
4. Besides Bharata, who, as will be hereafter seen, was the son of Duṣyanta, the Vāyu, Matsya, Agni and Brahma Purāṇas enumerate several descendants in this line, for the purpose evidently of introducing, as the posterity of Turvasu, the nations of the south of India : the series is Varuttha, (Karutthāma, Brahma), Āndīra (Ākrīra, Brahma); whose sons are Pāṇḍya, Karata, Cola, Kerala; the Hari Varmśa adds Kola and the Agni very incorrectly Gandhāra.
5. The curse alluded to is the failure of his line (Prajāsamuccheda), denounced upon Turvasu as the punishment of refusing to take his father's infirmities upon him (see Bk. IV. Ch. XI). He was also sentenced to rule over savages and barbarians, Mlecchas or people not Hindus. The Mahābhārata adds that the Yavanas sprang from Turvasu. As sovereign of the south-east, he should be the ancestor of the people of Arakan, Ava; but the authorities cited in the preceding note refer the nations of the Peninsula to him and consequently consider them as Mlecchas; and these and similar passages indicate a period prior to the introduction of Hinduism into the south of India.

The son of Druhyu was Babhru; his son was Setu; his son was Āradvat;¹ his son was Gāndhāra,² his son was Dharma;³ his son was Dhṛita;⁴ his son was Duryāman;⁵ his son was Pracetas, who had a hundred sons and they were the princes of the lawless Mlechhas or barbarians of the north.⁶

1. Also Āraddha in MSS., and Āraṭṭa, Matsya, which last seems to be the preferable reading. The Vāyu has Āruddha; the Brahma, Angārasetu; but Āraṭṭa is a northern country, contiguous to or synonymous with, Gāndhāra.

2. Of Gāndhāra it is said in the Vāyu that it is a large country named after him and is famous for its breed of horses : ख्यायते तस्य नामा तु गान्धारविषयो महान्। गान्धार देशजाश्चापि तुरुगा वाजिनां वराः॥ The Matsya reads the beginning of the second line, आरद्टेशजातास्तु। showing that Āraṭṭa and Gāndhāra are much the same. See Bk. II. Ch. III. n.83.

3. The Brahma Purāṇa and Hari Varmśa, in opposition to all the rest, make Dharma and his successors the descendants of Anu.

4. Ghṛta : Agni.

5. Durddama : Vāyu and Bhāgavata. The Matsya, Brahma and Agni insert a Vidupa, Duduha or Vidula, before Pracetas.

6. So the Bhāgavata and Matsya. The Mahābhārata says the descendants of Durhya are the Vaibhojas, a people unacquainted with the use of cars or beasts of burden and who travel on rafts : they have no kings.

The son of Aṅga was Pāra;¹³ his son was Divaratha; his son was Dharmaratha;¹⁴ his son was Citraratha; his son was Romapāda,¹⁵ also called Daśaratha, to whom, being childless, Daśaratha, the son of Aja, gave his daughter Śāntā to be adopted.¹⁶ After this, Romapāda had a son named Caturaṅga; his son was Pr̥thulākṣa; his son was Campa, who founded the city of Campā.¹⁷ The son of Campa was Haryyaṅga; his son was Bhadraratha, who had two sons, Vṛhatkarman and Vṛhadhratha. The son of the first was Vṛhadbhānu;¹⁸ his son was Vṛihānmanas; his son was Jayadratha, who, by a wife who was the daughter of a Kṣatriya father and Brāhmaṇī mother, had a son named Vijaya;¹⁹ his son was Dhṛti; his son was Dhṛtavrata; his son was Satyakarman; his son was Adhiratha²⁰ who found Karṇa in a basket on the banks of the Ganges, where he had been exposed by his mother, Pr̥thā. The son of Karṇa was Vṛṣasena.²¹ These were the Aṅga kings. You shall next hear who were the descendants of Puru.

NOTES

1. By some unaccountable caprice the Brahma Purāṇa and Hari Vaṁśa, unsupported by any other authority, here substitute for Anu the name of Kaks̄eyu, a descendant of Puru and transfer the whole series of his posterity to the house of Puru.

2. Pakṣa and Parapakṣa : Vāyu. Parameśu : Matsya. Parokṣa : Bhāgavata.

3. Kālānala : Vāyu. Kolāhala : Matsya.

4. Mahāśāla : Agni. Mahāśila : Bhāgavata.

5. Nṛga : Agni. Vana : Bhāgavata.

6. Nava : Matsya. Śama : Bhāgavata.

7. Vrata : Agni. Suvrata : Matsya. Dakṣa : Bhāgavata. According to the Brahma Purāṇa and Hari Vaṁśa the five sons of Uśīnara were the ancestors of different tribes. Śivi was the progenitor of the Śaivas; Nṛga of the Yaudheyas; Nava of the Navarāṭras; Vrata of the Āmbaṣṭhas; and Kṛmi founded the city Kṛmilā.

8. Bhadra and Bhadraka : Matsya, Agni. These sons of Śivi give name to different provinces and tribes in the west and north-west of India.

9. Ruṣadhratha : Agni. Tuṣadhratha : Matsya.

10. Phena : Agni. Sena : Matsya.

11. Odra or in some copies Andhra : Bhāgavata.

12. See Bk. II. Ch. III. n. 3, 46, 49, 50 and 73. Of Suhma it may be remarked, that it is specified in the Siddhānta Kaumudī as an example of Pāṇini's rule; प्राचां नगरात्ते। 7.3.24; by which Nagara compounded with names of countries in the east becomes Nāgara, as Sauhmanāgara (सौहनागरः), 'produced, in a city of Suhma'. The descendants of Anu, according to the Mahābhārata were all Mlechhas. The last named work, as well as the Vāyu and Matsya Purāṇas, have an absurd story of the circumstances of the birth of Dīrghatamas, who was the son of Ujāsi or Utathya, the elder brother of Br̥haspati by Mamatā and of his begetting Aṅga and the rest. They agree in assigning descendants of all four castes to them; the Vāyu stating that Bali had पुत्रान् चातुर्वर्ण्यकरान् and the Matsya ascribing it to a boon given by Brahmā to Bali : चतुरो नियतान् चर्णन् त्वं स्थापयेति। 'Do you establish the four perpetual castes.' Of these, the Brāhmaṇas are known as Bāleyas : बालेषाः ब्राह्मणाश्वरै। The Matsya calls Bali, the son of Virocana and आयुकल्यप्रमाणिकः। 'existing for a whole Kalpa,' identifying him therefore, only in a different period and form, with the Bali of the Vāmana Avatāra.

13. Anāpāna : Vāyu. Khanāpāna : Bhāgavata, Adhvivāhana : Agni. Dadhvivahana : Matsya.

14. This prince is said in the Vāyu to have drunk the Soma juice along with Indra : येन विष्णुपदे गिरौ सोमः शक्रेणसह वै पीतो महात्मना।

15. The Matsya and Agni insert a Satyaratha.

16. This is noticed in the Rāmāyaṇa, in the story of the hermit Rṣyaśṛṅga, to whom Śāntā was given in marriage. Her adoptive father is called in the Rāmāyaṇa, as he is in the Agni and Matsya, Lomapāda : the meaning is the same, 'hairy foot.' Rāmāyaṇa, IX. X. See also Prelude to the Uttara Rāma Caritra, Hindu Theatre, I. 289.

17. The Bhāgavata differs here from all the other authorities in omitting Campā, the founder of Campāpurī, a city of which traces still remain in the vicinity of Bhagalpur, having inserted him previously amongst the descendants of Ikṣvāku (see Bk. IV. Ch. III. n. 12). Campā is every where recognised as the capital of Aṅga and the translators of the Rāmāyaṇa were very wide off the truth, when they conjectured that it might be Aṅgva or Ava.

18. Vṛhaddarbha : Brahma. The Bhāgavata omits the two successors of Campā and makes Vṛhadratha, Vṛhatkarman and Vṛhadbhānu, sons of Pr̥thulākṣa.

19. The Vāyu, Matsya and Hari Varṣa make Vijaya the brother of Jayadratha. The Bhāgavata agrees with our text. The mother of Vijaya from her origin was of the Sūta caste, the genealogist and charioteer. Manu, X. 47. Her son was of the same caste, children taking the caste of the mother : consequently the descendants of Vijaya, kings of Aṅga, were Sūtas; and this explains the contemptuous application of the term Sūta to Karṇa, the half brother of the Pāṇḍus; for he, as will presently be mentioned, was adopted into the Aṅga family and succeeded to the crown.

20. Some variety prevails in the series of princes here, but this arises from not distinguishing the collateral lines, the descendants of Jayadratha from those of Vijaya. The Vāyu and Matsya give the latter as in our text, but they agree also with the Agni and Brahma in the successors of Jayadratha, as Dṛḍharatha or Vṛhadratha and Janamejaya or Viśvajit.

21. Sūrasena : Vāyu. Vikarṇa : Brahma.

Anila¹² was the son of Taisu and he had four sons of whom Duṣyanta was the elder.¹³ The son of Duṣyanta was the emperor Bharata; a verse explanatory of his name is chanted by the gods; "The mother is only the receptacle; it is the father by whom a son is begotten. Cherish they son, Duṣyanta; treat not Śakuntalā with disrespect. Sons, who are born from the paternal loins, rescue their progenitors from the infernal regions. You are the parent of this boy; Śakuntalā has spoken truth." From the expression 'cherish', Bharasva, the prince was called Bharata.¹⁴

Bharata had by different wives nine sons, but they were put to death by their own mothers, because Bharata remarked that they bore no resemblance to him and the women were afraid that he would therefore desert them. The birth of his sons being thus unavailing, Bharata sacrificed to the Maruts and they gave him Bharadvāja, the son of Br̥haspati by Mamatā the wife of Utathya, expelled by the kick of Dirghatamas, his half brother, before his time. This verse explains the purport of his appellation; " 'Silly woman,' said Br̥haspati, 'cherish this child of two fathers' (bhara dvā-jam). 'No, Br̥haspati,' replied Mamatā, do you take care of him.' So saying, they both abandoned him; but from their expressions the boy was called Bharadvāja." He was also termed Vitatha, in allusion to the unprofitable (vitatha) birth of the sons of Bharata.¹⁵ The son of Vitatha was Bhavanmanyu;¹⁶ his sons were many and amongst them the chief were Vṛhatkṣatra, Mahāvirya, Nara and Garga.¹⁷ The son of Nara was Sankṛti; his sons were Ruciradhī and Rantideva.¹⁸ The son of Garga was Śini;¹⁹ and their descendants called Gārgyas and Śainyas, although Kṣatriyas by birth, became Brāhmaṇas.²⁰ The son of Mahāvirya was Urukṣaya,²¹ who had three sons, Trayyāruṇa, Puṣkarin and Kapi;²² the last of whom became a Brāhaman. The son of Vṛhatkṣatra was Suhotra²³, whose son was Hastin, who founded the city of Hastināpur.²⁴ The son of Hastin were Ajamīḍha,²⁵ Dvimiḍha and Purumiḍha. One son of Ajamīḍha was Kaṇva, whose son was Medhātithi;²⁶ his other son was Bṛhadīṣu, whose son was Bṛhadvasu;²⁷ his son was Bṛhatkarman;²⁸ his son was Jayadratha;²⁹ his son was Viśvajit;³⁰ his son was Senajit, whose sons were Rucirāśva, Kāśya, Dr̥ḍhadhanuṣ and Vasahanu.³¹ The son of Rucirāśva was Pṛthuseṇa; his son was Pāra; his son was Nīpa; he had a hundred sons, of whom Samara, the principal, was the ruler of Kāmpilya.³² Samara had three sons, Pāra, Sampāra, Sadaśva.

The son of Kṛta was Ugrāyudha, by whose prowess the Nīpa race of Kṣatriyas was destroyed;⁴¹ his son was Kṣemya; his son was Suviṛa, his son was Nrpañjaya;⁴² his son was Bahuratha. These were called Pauravas.

Ajamīḍha had a wife called Nīlinī and by her he had a son named Nīla; his son was Śanti; his son was Śuśanti; his son was Purujānu;⁴³ his son was Cakṣu;⁴⁴ his son was Haryyasva,⁴⁵ who had five sons, Mudgala, Srīñjaya,⁴⁶ Vṛhadiṣu, Pravīra⁴⁷ and Kāmpilya.⁴⁸ Their father said, "These my five (pañca) sons are able (alam) to protect the countries;" and hence they were termed the Pāñcālas.⁴⁹ From Mudgala descended the Maudgalya Brāhmaṇas;⁵⁰ he had also a son named Bahvaśva,⁵¹ who had two children, twins, a son and daughter, Divodāsa and Ahalyā. The son of Śatadvat of Gautama by Ahalyā was Śatānanda;⁵² his son was Satyadhṛti, who was a proficient in military science. Being enamoured of the nymph Urvaśi, Satyadhṛti was the parent of two children, a boy and girl. Śāntanu, a Rājā, while hunting, found these children exposed in a clump of long Śara grass; and compassionating their condition, took them and brought them up. As they were nurtured through pity (kṛpā), they were called Kṛpa and Kṛpi. The latter became the wife of Droṇa and the mother of Asvatthāman.

The son of Divodāsa was Mitrayu;⁵³ his son was Cyavana; his son was Sudāsa; his son was Saudāsa, also called Sahadeva; his son was Somaka; he had a hundred sons, of whom Jantu was the eldest and Pṛṣata the youngest. The son of Pṛṣata was Drupada; his son was Dhṛṣṭadyumna; his son was Dhṛṣṭaketu.

Another son of Ajamīḍha was named Rks a;⁵⁴ his son was Samvaraṇa; his son was Kuru, who gave his name to the holy district Kurukṣ etra; his sons were Sudhanuṣ, Jahnu, Parīkṣit and many others.⁵⁵ The son of Sudhanuṣ was Suhotra; his son was Cyavana; his son was Kṛtaka;⁵⁶ his son was Uparicara the Vasu,⁵⁷ who had seven children, Vṛhadratha, Pratyagra, Kuśāmba, Māvella, Matsya and others. Vṛhadratha had another son, who being born in two parts, which were put together (sandhita) by a female fiend named Jatā, he was denominated Jarāsandha;⁶⁰ his son was Sahadeva; his son

1. Abhayada : Vāyu. Vītamaya : Agni. Vātāyudha : Matsya. Cārupāda : Bhāgavata. The Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva, p. 136, 138, has two accounts of the descendants of Puru, differing materially in the beginning from each other and from the lists of the Purāṇas. In the first, Pravīra is made the son of Puru; his son is Manasyu, who has three sons, Śakta, Sanhanana and Vāgmin; and there the line stops. Another son of Puru is Raudrāśva, whose sons are Riceyu and the rest, as in our text; making them the second in descent, instead of the eleventh. In the second list, the son of Puru is Janamejaya, whose successors are Prācinvat, Samyāti, Ahamyāti, Śarvabhauma, Jayatsena, Avācīna, Ariha, Mahābhāuma, Ayutanāyin, Akrodhana, Devātithi, Ariha, Rikṣa, Matināra, who is therefore the fifteenth from Puru, instead of the fourth as in the first account or the twelfth as in the text.

2. Dhundu : Vāyu. Śambhu : Agni, Sudhanvan : Brahma.

3. Bahuvidha : Agni and Matsya.

4. Sampāti : Agni.

5. Omitted : Vāyu. Bahuvādin : Matsya.

6. Bhadrāśva : Matsya.

7. Rājeyu : Vāyu. Riceyu : Agni. They were the sons of the Apsarās Ghṛātāḥī : or of Misrakeśī : Mahābhārata. The Brahma Purāṇa and Hari Variṣā, have very unaccountably and in opposition to all other authorities, transferred the whole of the descendants of Anu of this family; substituting for Anu the second name in our text, Kakṣeyu, (Bk. IV. Ch. XVII.)

8. The Vāyu names also ten daughters, Rudrā, Sūdrā, Madrā, Subhāgā, Amalajā, Talā, Khalā, Gopajālā, Tāmrarasā and Ratnakūṭī; and adds that they were married to Prabhākara, a Ṛṣi of the race of Atri. The Brahma Purāṇa and Hari Variṣā have a legend of the birth of Soma, the moon, from him and one of these ten; who succeeded to the power and prerogatives of Atri. The sons of the other wives were less distinguished, but they formed families eminent amongst holy Brāhmaṇas, called Svastyātreyas.

9. Atimāra or Atibhāra : Bhāgavata. Antināra : Matsya. Matināra : Mahābhārata, Agni and Brahma. According to the Matsya and Hari Varnśa (not in the Brahma Purāṇa), Gaurī the daughter of this prince, was the mother of Māndhātri, of the family of Ikṣvāku.

10. In place of these the Matsya has Amūrttirayas and Nṛcandra and there are several varieties in the nomenclature. In place of the first we have Vasu or Trasu, Vāyu; Tañsurogha, Agni; Tañsurodha, Brahma; and Sumati, Bhāgavata. Pratiratha is read for the second of the Agni and Brahma; and for the third, Suratha, Agni; Subahu, Hari Varnśa.

11. Medhātithi is the author of many hymns in the Rgveda and we have therefore Brāhmaṇas and religious teachers descended from Kṣatriyas.

12. Malina : Vāyu. Raibhya : Bhāgavata. Dharmanetra: Brahma Purāṇa. The Hari Varnśa omits him, making sad blundering work of the whole passage. Thus the construction is such as to intimate that Tañsu or Tañsurodha had a wife named Ilā, the daughter of Medhātithi; that is, his brother's great-granddaughter :

मेधातिथिस्मुतस्तस्य.....इला नाम तु यस्यासीत् कव्या वै जनमेजय।
ब्रह्मावादिन्यपि स्त्री च तंपुस्तामयगच्छत॥ but this, as the commentator observes, is contrary to common sense (अर्थक्वादयुक्त) and he would read it therefore, इली नाम यस्यासीत्कन्या। 'The daughter of him who was named Ilīn,' a Rājā so called : but in the Vāyu and Matsya we have Ilīnā, the daughter of Yama, married to Tañsu and mother of Malina or Anila; more correctly perhaps Ailina : इलिना तु यमस्यासीत्कन्या सा जनयत् सुतम्। त्रसो (तंसो) सुदयितं पुत्रं मलिनं ब्रह्मावादिनं। उपदानवी ततो लेखे चतुरस्त्विलिनात्मजात्। सुष्टुप्तमिति॥ The blunder of the Hari Varnśa therefore arises from the compiler's reading Yasya, 'of whom', instead of Yamasya, 'Yama'. It is not an error of transcription, for the metre requires Yasya and the remark of the commentator proves the correctness of the reading. The name occurs Ilīna (ईलिन), the son of Tañsu, in the Mahābhārata, agreeably to the Anuvaṇśa śloka, which is there quoted. 'Sarasvatī bore Tañsu to Matināra and Tañsu begot a son, Ilīna, by Kālingī' : तंसुं सरस्वतीपुत्रं मतिनारादजीजनत्। ईलिनं जनयामास कालिगांया तंसुरात्मजं॥

13. The Vāyu, Matsya and Bhāgavata agree with out text in making these the grandsons of Tañsu : even the Brahma Purāṇa concurs, but the Hari

Varnśa makes them his sons, having apparently transformed Tañsosuta (तंसो सुतः), the son of Tañsu, into a synonym of Tañsu or Tañsurodha as in these parallel passages : तंसो सुतोऽथराजपिर्धर्मनेत्रः प्रतापवान्। उपदानवी ततो पुत्रान् चतुरोऽजनयच्छुभान्॥ 'The son of Tañsu was the illustrious sage Dharmanetra : Upadānavī had from him four excellent sons.' Brahma Purāṇa तंसुरोधोऽथराजपिर्धर्मनेत्रः प्रतापवान्। उपदा नवी सुतान् लेमे चतुरस्तंसुरोधः॥ 'Tañsurodha was a royal sage, the illustrious institution of laws. Upadānavī had four sons from Tañsurodha.' Hari Varnśa. The commentator explains Dharmanetra (धर्मनेत्र) to be 'institution of laws' (धर्मप्रवर्तकः). We have Upadānavī before, as the daughter of Vṛśaparvan the Daitya, married to Hiranyākṣa. Homilton (Buchanan) calls her the wife of Sughora. The four sons are named in other authorities, with some variations : Duṣyanta, Suṣyanta or Rṣyanta or Sumanta, Pravīra and Arṅgaha or Naya. The Mahābhārata enumerates five, Duṣyanta, Śūra, Bhīma, Vasu and Pravasu, but makes them the sons of Ilīna and grandson of Tañsu.

14. These two ślokas are taken from the Mahābhārata. Ādi Parvan and are part of the testimony borne by a heavenly messenger to the birth of Bharata. They are repeated in the same book, in the account of the family of Puru. They occur, with a slight variation of the order, in other Purāṇas, as the Vāyu, etc., and show the greater antiquity of the story of Śakuntalā, although they do not narrate it. The meaning of the name Bharata is differently explained in Śakuntalā; he is said to be so called from 'supporting' the world : he is also there named Sarvadāmanā, 'the conqueror of all.'

15. The Brahma Purāṇa and Hari Varnśa, the latter especially, appear to have modified this legend, with the view perhaps of reconciling those circumstances which are related of Bharadvāja as a sage with his history as a king. While therefore they state that Bharadvāja was brought by the winds of Bharata, they state that he was so brought to perform a sacrifice by which a son was born, whom Bharadvāja also inaugurated : धर्मसंक्रमणं चापि मरुद्विभरताय वै। अयाजयद्वरद्वाजो महद्विः क्रतुभिर्हितं। पूर्वं तु वितथे तस्य कृते पुत्रजन्मनु। ततोऽर्थं वितथो नाम भरद्वाजात् सुतोऽभवत्॥ In the Vāyu, Matsya and Agni, however, the story is much more consistently narrated; and Bharadvāja, being abandoned by his natural parent, is brought by the winds, as a child, not as sage; and being adopted by Bharata, is one and the same with Vitatha, as our text relates. Thus in the Vāyu, the Maruts bring to Bharata, already sacrificing for progeny (भरद्वाजं ततः पुत्रं चार्हस्पत्यं), Bharadvāja, the son of Bṛhaspati; and Bharata receiving him says. "This Bharadvāja shall be Vitatha :", ततः सवितथो नाम भरद्वाजस्तदास्प्यहं। The Matsya also says, the Maruts in compassion took the child and being pleased with Bharata's worship, gave it to him and he was named Vitatha : जगृहस्तं भरद्वाजं मरुतः कृपयानिवतः। तेन ते मरुतस्तस्य मरुत्सोमेन तुष्टुवुः। उपनिन्द्यु भरद्वाजं पुत्रार्थं भरताय वै। पूर्वं तु वितथे तस्मिन् कृते वै पुत्रजन्मनि। ततस्तु वितथो नाम भरद्वाजो नुपो भवान्॥ And the Agni tells the whole story in one verse : ततो मरुद्विरानीयं पुत्रस्म तु बृहस्पतेः। संक्रमितो भरद्वाजः क्रतुभिर्वितथोऽभवत्। Then the son of Bṛhaspati, being taken by the winds. Bharadvāja was transferred with sacrifice and was Vitatha.' The account given in the Bhāgavata is to the same purpose. The commentator on the text also makes the matter clear enough : भरद्वाजस्यैवभरतपुत्रत्वदशायां वितथेतिनाम्। 'The name of Bharadvāja in the condition of son of Bharata was Vitatha.' It is clear that a new-born infant could not be the officiating priest at a sacrifice for his own adoption, whatever the compiler of the Hari Vaṁśa may please to assert. From Bharadvāja, a Brāhmaṇa by birth and king by adoption, descended Brāhmaṇas and Kṣatriyas, the children of two fathers : तस्मादेव भरद्वाजाद्वाह्याणः क्षत्रिया भुवि। द्वामुख्यायणनामानः स्मृता द्विपितरस्तु वै॥ The Mahābhārata, in the Ādi Parvan, tells the story very simple. In one place, v. 3710, it says that Bharata, on the birth of his children proving vain, obtained from Bharadvāja, by great sacrifices, a son, Bhūmanyu; and in another passage it makes Bhūmanyu the son of Bharata by Sunandā, daughter of Sarvasena, king of Kāśī; p. 139, v. 3785. The two are not incompatible.

16. Manyu : Bhāgavata. Suketu : Agni. But the Brahma and Hari Vaṁśa omit this and the next generation and make Suhotra, Anuhotra, Gaya, Garga and Kapila the sons of Vitatha : they then assign to Suhotra two sons, Kāśika and Ghṛtsamati and identify them and their descendants with the progeny of Āyu, who were kings of Kāśī (see Bk. IV. Ch. VIII. n. 15); a piece of confusion unwarranted by any other authority except the Agni.

17. Vṛhat, Ahārya, Nara, Garga : Matsya.

18. Guruvīrya and Trideva : Vāyu. The first is called Gurudhī, Matsya; and Guru, Bhāgavata : they agree in Rantideva. The Bhāgavata describes the great liberality of this prince and his practice of Yoga. According to a legend preserved in the Megha Duta, his sacrifices of kine were so numerous, that their blood formed the river Carmanvatī, the modern Cambal.

19. Śivi : Matsya.

20. The other authorities concur in this statement; thus furnishing an additional instance of one caste proceeding from another. No reason is assigned : the commentator says it was from some cause : केनचित् कारणाद्वाह्याणशब्दभूः।

21. Durbhakṣaya : Vāyu. Urukṣat : Matsya, Duritakṣaya : Bhāgavata.

22. Trayāruni, Puskarāruni, Kavi; all became Brāhmaṇas : उरुक्षतः सुताह्वेते सर्वे ब्राह्मणतां गताः। Matsya : and there were three chief branches of the Kāvyas or descendants of Kavi : काव्यानां तु वराह्वेते त्रयः प्रोक्ता महर्ष्यः गर्गाः। संकृतयः काव्याः क्षत्रिपेता द्विजातयः॥ Gargas, Sankṛtis and Kāvyas. Ibid.

23. In the Mahābhārata, Suhotra is the son of Bhūmanyu; and in one place the father of Ajamīḍha, etc., and in another of Hastin. The Brahma Purāṇa in some degree and the Hari Vaṁśa in a still greater, have made most extraordinary confusion in the instance of this name. In our text and in all the best authorities we have three Suhotras, perfectly distinct : 1. Suhotra, great-grandson of Amāvasu, father of Jahnu and ancestor of Viśvāmitra and the Kauśikas (see Bk. III. Ch. XI.); 2. Suhotra son of Kṣatravṛddha and grandson of Ayus and progenitor of the race of Kāśī kings (Bk. IV. Ch. VIII.); and 3. Suhotra the son of Vṛhatkṣatra, grandson of Vitatha and parent of Hastin. In the two blundering compilations mentioned, we have, first (Hari Vaṁśa c. 20), a Suhotra son of Vṛhatkṣatra, of the race of Puru; his descent is not given, but, from the names which follow Suhotra, the dynasty is that of our present text : secondly (Hari Vaṁśa c. 27), Suhotra son of Kāñcana, of the line of Amāvasu and father of Jahnu, etc. thirdly (Hari Vaṁśa c. 29), Suhotra the son of Kṣatravṛddha and progenitor of the Kāśī kings : fourthly (Hari Vaṁśa 32), we have the first and third of these personages confounded; Suhotra is made the son of Vitatha and progenitor of the Kāśī kings, the dynasty of whom is repeated; thus connecting them with the line of Puru instead of Vṛṇus, in opposition to all authority. Again, we have a notable piece of confusion and Suhotra the son of Vitatha is made the father of Vṛhat, the father of the three princes who in our text and in the Hari Varnśa (c. 20) are the sons of Hastin; and amongst whom Ajamīḍha is made the father of Jahnu and ancestor of the Kausikas, instead of being, as in c. 27 and as every where else, of the family of Amāvasu. The source of all this confusion is obvious. The compilers extracted all the authentic traditions accurately enough, but, puzzled by the identity of name, they have also mixed the different accounts together and caused very absurd and needless perplexity. It is quite clear also that the Hari Varnśa does not deserve the pains taken and taken fruitlessly, by Hamilton and M. Langlois to reduce it to consistency. It is of no weight whatever as an authority for the dynasties of kings, although it furnishes some particular details, which it has picked up possibly from authentic sources not now available.

24. It was finally ruined by the encroachments of the Ganges, but vestiges of it were, at least until lately, to be traced along the river, nearly in a line with Delhi, about sixty miles to the east.

25. In one place, son of Suhotra; in another, grandson of Hastin : Mahābhārata.

26. The copies agree in this reading, yet it can scarcely be correct. Kaṇva has already been noticed as the son of Apratiratha. According to the Bhāgavata, the elder son of Ajamīḍha was Priyamedhas, from whom a tribe of Brāhmaṇas descended. The Matsya has Vṛhaddanuṣ and names the wife of Ajamīḍha, Dhūminī. It also however, along with the Vāyu, makes Kaṇva the son of Ajamīḍha by his wife Keśinī.

27. Vṛhaddanuṣ : Bhāgavata. Also called Vṛhaddarman : Hari Varnśa.

28. Vṛhatkaya : Bhāgavata.

29. Satyajit : Hari Varnśa.

30. Aśvajit : Matsya, Viśada : Bhāgavata.

31.	Bhāgavata	Matsya	Hari Varnśa
	Rucirāśva	Rucirāśva	Rucira
	Kāśya	Kāśya	Śvetaketu
	Dṛḍhahanu	Dṛḍhāśva	Mahimnāra
	Vatsa	Vatsa k. of Avanti.	Vatsa k. of Avanti.

32. Kāmpilya appears to be the Kampil of the Mohammedans, situated in the Doab. It was included in southern Pāñcāla. The Matsya makes Samara the son of Kāśya.

33. Vibhrāja in MSS., also in the Vāyu,

34. The Bhāgavata omits the descents subsequent to Nīpa and makes Brahmadatta the son of Nīpa by Sukṛti. In the Hari Varnśa is a curious legend of the different transmigrations of Brahmadatta and his six companions, who were successively as many Brāhmaṇas, then foresters, then deer, then water-fowl, then swans and finally Brāhmaṇas again, when with the king they obtained liberation. According to the Bhāgavata, Brahmadatta composed a treatise on the Yoga, a Yogatantra.

35. Dandasena : Hari Varnśa.

36. Bhallāka : Vāyu. Bhallāda : Bhāgavata. The Vāyu makes him the last of the race. The Hari Varnśa adds that he was killed by Kārṇa. The Matsya names his successor Janamejaya, when the race of the Nīpas was exterminated by Ugrāyudha; as noticed below.

37. So the Vāyu and Bhāgavata. The Matsya and Hari Varnśa, with less consistency, derive this family also from Ajamīḍha.

38. Kṛtimat : Bhāgavata.

39. Between these two the Vāyu inserts Mahat and Rukmaratha. The Matsya, Sudhanvan, Śarvabhauma, Mahāpaurava and Rukmadhara. The Brahma Purāṇa, Sudharman, Śarvabhauma, Mahat and Rukmaratha.

40. The Bhāgavata says he was the author of six Saṁhitās of the SāmaVeda. (See Bk. III. Ch. VI).

41. The Hari Varnśa says he killed Nīpa, the grandfather of Piṣata, but it had previously stated that it was the son of Bhallāta, several descents after Nīpa, who was killed by Ugrāyudha : and again (c. 32), Piṣata, conformably to other authorities, appears as the father of Drupada, in the family of Śrījaya. The Hari Varnśa relates the destruction of Ugrāyudha by Bhīṣma, in consequence of his demanding in marriage the widow of Śāntanu : after which, Piṣata, it is said, recovered possession of Kāmpilya.

42. Purāṇaya : Bhāgavata.

43. Purujāti : Vāyu. Puruja : Bhāgavata. The Brahma Purāṇa and Hari Varnśa omit Nīla and Śānti.

44. Rikṣa : Vāyu. Pṛthu : Matsya. Arka : Bhāgavata. Omitted : Brahma.
45. Bāhyāśva : Agni. Bhadraśva : Matsya. Bharmyāśva : Bhāgavata.
46. Jaya : Matsya. Sañjaya : Bhāgavata.
47. Yavīnara : Agni and Bhāgavata. Javīnara : Matsya.
48. Kapila : Matsya. Kṛmilāśva : Brahma.
49. Pāñcāla was at first the country north and west of Delhi, between the foot of the Himālaya and the Cambal. It was afterwards divided into northern and southern Pāñcāla, separated by the Ganges. Mākandi on the Ganges and Kāmpilya were the chief cities of the latter; Ahikṣetra in the former. The Pāñcālas, according to the Mahābhārata, expelled Samvaraṇa from Hastināpur, but it was recovered by Kuru. The purpose of the term Pāñcāla is similarly explained in other Purāṇas. In the Mahābhārata they are the grandsons of Ajamīḍha.
50. The Matsya says that they, as well as the Kaṇvas, were all followers or partisans of Angiras : मुद्रलस्यापिमौद्रलायः क्षत्रोपेता द्विजातयः एतेह्यक्षिरसः पक्षे संस्थिताः कण्वमुद्रलः। The Hari Varnśa has nearly the same words.
51. Bhadrayāśva : Vāyu. Parīcāśva : Agni. Bandhyāśva : Matsya. Bhārmya : Bhāgavata. But there is some indistinctness as to his descent. The Matsya and Hari Varnśa give the son of Mudgala only his patronymic Maudgalya. According to the first, his son was Indrasena; and his son, Bandhyāśva. The second makes Badhryāśva the son of Maudgalya by Indrasena. The Bhāgavata makes Bhārmya, the patronymic of Mudgala, the son of Bharmyāśva and who is the father of Divodāsa and Ahalyā : मिथुनं मुद्रलाद्वाम्पर्य द्विवोदासः पुमामभूत्। The commentator has, भार्म्यात् भम्पर्यशुम्रात्।
52. In the Rāmāyaṇa, Śatānanda appears as the family priest of Janaka, the father of Sītā.
53. From whom the Maitreya Brāhmaṇas were descended : Hari Varnśa. In the Matsya and Agni the son of Mitrāyū is called Maitreya (Bk. I. Ch. I.). The Brahma Purāṇa and Hari Varnśa here close the lineage of Divodāsa : the Agni adds but one name, Somāpi. They then proceed with the descendants of Sañjaya, one of the Pāñcālas or Pañcadhanus, Somadatta, Sahadeva and then as in our text. The Vāyu and Bhāgavata agree with the latter in making the line continuous from Divodāsa. According to the Matsya and Brahma Purāṇa the race of Ajamīḍha became extinct in the person of Sahadeva, but Ajamīḍha was thence called the Somaka family. It was in the reign of Drupada that the possessions of the Pāñcālas were divided; Drona, assisted by the Pāñdavas, conquering the country and proceeding the southern portion again to Drupada, as related in the Mahābhārata. The two princes last named in the list figure in the great war.
54. The Hari Varnśa gives him two brothers, Dhūmravarṇa and Sudarśana. In the Mahābhārata one list agrees with the text; the other calls Samvaraṇa the son of Ajamīḍha by his wife Rikṣā.
55. One other is named in the Bhāgavata, Matsya, Brahma and Agni; Animejaya, Arimarddana and Niṣadhaśva. The Hari Varnśa has Sudhanvat in place of Jahnu; having also Sudhanuś.
56. Kṛta : Vāyu. Kṛtayajña : Brahma. Kṛmi : Matsya, Kṛti : Bhāgavata.
57. The story of Uparicara or a Vasu who by command of Indra became king of Cedi, is told in the Mahābhārata, Ādi Parvan. He is there said to have at first five sons, Vṛhadratha, king of Magadha, Pratyagra, Kuśāmba, also called Manivāhana, Māvella and Yadu, by his wife Girikā; afterwards he has, by Adrikā, an Apsarā condemned to the form of a fish, Matsya a son and Satyavati or Kālī a daughter : the latter was the mother of Vyāsa. The same legend is referred to in the accounts of Uparicara and his family in the Bhāgavata, Matsya, Hari Varnśa, etc.
58. Vṛṣabha : Matsya.
59. Satyajita : Vāyu. Satyahita : Bhāgavata. Satyadhrītra or Puṣya : Matsya.

Parāśara said— Parīkṣit, the son of Kuru, had four sons, Janamejaya, Śrutasena, Ugrasena and Bhīmsena.¹ The son of Jahnu was Suratha; his son was Vidūratha; his son was Sārvabhauma; his son was Jayasena, his son was Āravīn; his son was Ayutāyus; his son was Akrodhana; one of his sons was Devatithi and another was called Rikṣa, his son was Dilīpa; his son was Pratīpa, who had three sons, Devāpi, Śāntanu and Bāhlika. The first adopted in childhood a forest life and Śāntanu became king. Of him this verse is spread through the earth; "Śāntanu is his name, because if he lays his hands upon an old man, he restores him to youth and by him men obtain tranquillity (śānti)."

In the kingdom over which Śāntanu ruled there was no rain for twelve years. Apprehensive that the country would become a desert, the king assembled the Brāhmaṇas and asked them why no rain fell and what fault he had committed. They told him that he was as it were a younger brother married before an elder, for he was in the enjoyment of the earth, which was the right of his elder brother Devāpi. "What then am I to do?" said the Rājā : to which they replied, "Until the gods shall be displeased with Devāpi, by his declining from the path of righteousness, the kingdom is his and to him therefore you should resign it." When the minister of the king Asmarsārīn, heard this, he collected a number of ascetics who taught doctrines opposed to those of the Vedas and sent them into the forest; where meeting with Devāpi, they perverted the understanding of the simple-minded prince and led him to adopt heretical notions. In the meantime, Śāntanu being much distressed to think that he had been guilty of the offence intimated by the Brāhmaṇas, sent them before him into the woods and then proceeded thither himself, to restore the kingdom to his elder brother. When the Brāhmaṇas arrived at the hermitage of Devāpi, they informed him, that, according to the doctrines of the Vedas, succession to a kingdom was the right of the elder brother : but he entered into discussion with them and in various ways advanced arguments which had the defect of being contrary to the precepts of the Vedas. When the Brāhmaṇas heard this, they turned to Śāntanu and said, "Come hither, Rājā; you need give yourself no further trouble in this matter; the dearth is at an end; this man is fallen from his state, for he has uttered words of disrespect to the authority of the eternal, uncreated Veda; and when the elder brother is degraded, there is no sin in the prior espousals of his junior." Śāntanu thereupon returned to his capital and administered the government as before, and his elder brother Devāpi being degraded from his caste by repeating doctrines contrary to the Vedas, Indra poured down abundant rain, which was followed by plentiful harvests.²

इति श्रीविष्णुपुराणे चतुर्थांशे विशः अध्यायः॥

The son of Bāhlīka was Somadatta, who had three sons, Bhūri, Bhūriśravas and Śala.³ The son of Śāntanu was the illustrious and learned Bhīṣma, who was born to him by the holy river-goddess, Gaṅgā; and he had by his wife Satyavatī two sons, Citrāṅgada and Vicitravīrya. Citrāṅgada, while yet a youth, was killed in a conflict with a Gandharva, also called Citrāṅgada. Vicitravīrya married Ambā and Ambalikā, the daughters of the king of Kāśī; and indulging too freely in connubial rites, fell into a consumption, of which he died. By command of Satyavatī, my son Kṛṣṇa-dvāipāyana, ever obedient to his mother's wishes,⁴ begot upon the widows of his brother the princes Dhṛtarāṣṭra and Pāṇḍu and upon a female servant, Vidūra. Dhṛtarāṣṭra had Duryodhana, Duhṣāsana and other sons, to the number of a hundred. Pāṇḍu having incurred the curse of a deer, whose mate he had killed in the chase, was deterred from procreating children; and his wife Kuntī bore to him in consequence three sons, who were begotten by the deities Dharmā, Vāyu and Indra, namely, Yudhiṣṭhīra, Bhīma and Arjuna : and his wife Mādrī had two sons, Nakula and Sahadeva, by the celestial sons of Aśvinī. These had each a son by Draupadî. The son of Yudhiṣṭhira was Prativindhya; of Bhīma, Śrutasoma; of Arjuna, Śrutakīrtti; of Nakula, Śatānīka; and of Sahadeva, Śrutakarmān. The Pāṇḍavas had also other sons.⁵ By his wife Yaudheyī, Yudhiṣṭhira had Devaka. The son of Bhīma by Hiḍimbā was Ghaṭotkaca and he had also Sarvatraga by his wife Kāśī. The son of Sahadeva by Vijayā was Suhotra; and Niramitra was the son of Nakula by Kāreṇumatī. Arjuna had Irāvat by the serpent-nymph Ulupī; Babhruvāhana, who was adopted as the son of his maternal grandfather, by the daughter of the king of Manipura; and by his wife Subhadrā, Abhimanyu, who even in extreme youth was renowned for his valour and his strength and crushed the chariots of his foes in fight. The son of Abhimanyu by his wife Uttarā was Parīkṣit, who, after the Kurus were all destroyed, was killed in his mother's womb by the magic Brahma weapon, hurled by Aśvatthāman : he was however restored to life by the clemency of that being whose feet receive the homage of all the demons and the gods and who for his own pleasure had assumed a human shape (Kṛṣṇa). This prince, Parīkṣit, now reigns over the whole world with undivided sway.⁶

1. This, although it occurs in other authorities, appears to be an error, for these are the sons of a subsequent Parīkṣit (see the next chapter). The Matsya omits Parīkṣit here and the Bhāgavata states that he had no children. In most of the Purāṇas, however, the line of Parīkṣat is continued, but there is very great confusion in the lineage. According to the Vāyu, Janamejaya was the son of Parīkṣit, whose son was Śrutasena, whose son was Bhīmasena, Janamejaya had also a son named Suratha; but Suratha was also the name of the son of Jahnu, from whom the line continues as in the text. The Brahma Purāṇa and Hari Varnśa also make Suratha the son both of Janamejaya and of Jahnu; and they observe that there are two Rikṣas, two Parīkṣits, three Bhīmsenas and two Janamejayas, in the lunar race. Some of the confusion probably originates with the Mahābhārata, which, as before noticed, gives two lists from Puru to Śāntanu, differing from one another and from all the lists of the Purāṇas. In the first of these lists such collateral names have been retained as appear to have furnished our text and that of other Purāṇas with distinct persons ; thus making the members of one fraternity so many descendants. Of the two lists, however, the second is probably to be regarded as the more recent, if not more correct; for Vaiśampāyana repeats it at Janamejaya's request, because the latter is not satisfied with the summary account which the former had first communicated to him. Mahābhārata vol. I. p. 136 and p. 138.

2. The Mahābhārata merely states that Devāpi retired to a religious life. The story of his heresy is narrated, much as in the text, in the Bhāgavata, Vāyu. The Matsya adds, that he was also leprous; on which account his subjects contemned him. He was probably set aside in favour of his younger brother, either on that account or on that of his heresy; such a disposition being conformable to Hindu law. According to the Bhāgavata and Matsya he is still alive at a place called Kalāpa grāma, where, in the Kṛta age of the next Mahāyuga, he will be the restorer of the Kṣatriya race.

3. The Matsya says that Bāhlīka had a hundred sons or lords of the Bāhlīkas.

4. Before her marriage to Śāntanu, Satyavatī had a son, Kṛṣṇa-dvāipāyana or Vyāsa, by Parāśara : he was therefore the half brother of Vicitravīrya and legally qualified to raise up offspring to him by his widow. This law is abrogated in the present age. The whole story of the sons of Śāntanu is told at length in the Mahābhārata.

5. The Mahābhārata names some of them rather differently and adds some particulars. Thus Yaudheya was the son of Yudhiṣṭhira by his wife Devikā, daughter of Govāsana of the Śaivya tribe. The son of Bhīmasena was Sarvaga by Balandharā, princess of Kāśī; he had also Ghaṭotkaca by Hiḍimbā. Abhimanyu was the son of Arjuna by Subhadrā. The wives and sons of the other two are the same but Kāreṇumatī is termed a princess of Cedi and Vijayā of Madra.

6. In the details immediately preceding, the Purāṇas generally concur, deriving them probably from the same source, the Ādi Parvan of the Mahābhārata and employing very frequently the same words. The period at which the chapter closes is supposed to be that at which the Vyāsa, who arranged or compiled the Purāṇas, is believed to have flourished. Parīkṣit died of the bite of a snake, according to the Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva. The Bhāgavata is supposed to have been narrated to him in the interval between the bite and its fatal effect.

I will now enumerate the kings who will reign in future periods.¹ The present monarch, Parīkṣit,² will have four sons, Janamejaya, Śrutasena, Ugrasena and Bhīmasena.³ The son of Janamejaya will be Śatānīka,⁴ who will study the Vedas under Yājñiyavalkya and military science with Kṛpa; but becoming dissatisfied with sensual enjoyments, he will acquire spiritual knowledge from the instructions of Śaunaka and ultimately obtain salvation. His son will be Aśvamedhadatta (a son given by the gods in reward for the sacrifice of a horse);⁵ his son will be Asīma-Kṛṣṇa;⁶ his son will be Nicakra,⁷ who will remove the capital to Kauśāmbī, in consequence of Hastināpura being washed away by the Ganges; his son will be Uṣṇa;⁸ his son will be Citraratha; his son will be Vṛṣṇimat;⁹ his son will be Sunītha;¹⁰ his son will be Ricā;¹¹ his son will be Nr̄cakṣu;¹² his son will be Sukhībala;¹³ his son will be Pariplava; his son will be Sunaya;¹⁴ his son will be Medhāvin; his son will be Nr̄pañjaya;¹⁵ his son will be Mṛdu;¹⁶ his son will be Tigma;¹⁷ his son will be Vṝhadratha; his son will be Vasudāna;¹⁸ and his son will be another Śatānīka; his son will be Udayana;¹⁹ his son will be Ahīnara;²⁰ his son will be Khaṇḍapāni;²¹ his son will be Niramitra;²² his son will be Kṣemaka;²³ of him this verse is recited; "The race which gave origin to Brāhmaṇas and Kṣatriyas and which was purified by regal sages, terminated with Kṣemaka in the Kali age."²⁴

1. The style now adopted is that of prophecy, as Vyāsa could not consistently have recorded the events which were posterior to his time.

2. Also read Parīkṣita, Parīkṣa and Parīkṣi.

3. See Bk. IV. Ch. XX. The Vāyu and Matsya relate, rather obscurely, a dispute between Janamejaya and Vaiśampāyana, in consequence of the former's patronage of the Brāhmaṇas of the Vājasaneyi branch of the Yajurveda, in opposition to the latter, who was the author of the black or original Yajuś (see Bk. III. Ch. V). Janamejaya twice performed the Aśvamedha according to the Vājasaneyi ritual and established the Trisarvī or use of certain texts of Aśmaka and others by the Brāhmaṇas of Arīga and by those of the middle country. He perished however in consequence, being cursed by Vaiśampāyana. Before their disagreement Vaiśampāyana related the Mahābhārata to Janamejaya. Mahābhārata Ādi Parvan.

states the number of princes twenty-five. The specification however, commencing with Śatānīka, is twenty-six or twenty-seven. The passage is, पञ्चविंशतिः भविष्याः पूर्ववंशजाः। अनुवंशशस्तलोकोऽयं गीतो विप्रैः पुरातनैः। ब्रह्मक्षत्रस्य यो योनिर्वशो देवर्षि सत्कृतः। क्षेमकं प्राप्य राजानं संस्थां प्राप्स्यति वै कलौ॥

4. The reading of the text is rather, 'his ((Parīkṣit) it's) other son will be Śatānīka;' तस्यापः शतानीको भविष्यति। but the commentator refers 'his' to Janamejaya; तस्यजनमेजयस्य। The Vāyu, Matsya and Bhāgavata also make Śatānīka the son of Janamejaya. The Brahma Purāṇa has a totally different series or Parīkṣit; Sūryāpiḍa, Candrāpiḍa, Janamejaya, Satyakarṇa, Śvetakarṇa, Sukumāra and Ajaśyāma.

5. The Bhāgavata interposes Sahasrānīka. The Vṛhatkathā has the same descent, but calls the son of Shasrānīka, Udayana or Vatsa. The Bhāgavata has Aśvamedhaja.

6. Adhisāma K. : Vāyu. Adhisoma K. : Matsya. The former states that the Vāyu Purāṇa was narrated in this king's reign, in the second year of a three years' sacrifice at Kurukṣetra.

7. Nemicakra : Bhāgavata. Vicakṣus : Matsya. They agree with the text as to the removal of the capital and the cause.

8. Ukta : Bhāgavata. Bhūrijiyeṣṭha : Matsya.

9. Sucidratna, Vāyu : Sucidrava. Mats.; Kaviratha, Bhāgavata; is interposed between Citraratha and Vṛṣṇimat.

10. Sutīrtha : Vāyu.

11. Ruci : Vāyu. Omitted : Matsya and Bhāgavata.

12. Citrākṣa : Vāyu.

13. Sukhīnala : Bhāgavata.

14. Sutapas : Matsya.

15. Purañjaya : Matsya.

16. Ūrva : Matsya. Dūrva : Bhāgavata.

17. Tigmātman : Matsya. Timi : Bhāgavata.

18. Sudāsa : Bhāgavata. Vasudāman : Matsya.

19. The Matsya concurs with the text (see above, note 5), the Bhāgavatas has Durdaman.

20. Vahīnara : Bhāgavata.

21. Daṇḍapāni : Bhāgavata, Vāyu, Matsya.

22. Nimi : Bhāgavata.

23. Kṣepaka : Vāyu.

24. The same memorial verse is quoted in the Matsya and Vāyu Purāṇa, preceded by one which

I will not repeat to you the future princes of the family of Ikṣvāku.¹

The son of Vṛhadbala² will be Vṛhatkṣaṇa;³ his son will be Urukṣepa;⁴ his son will be Vatsa;⁵ his son will be Vatsavyūha;⁶ his son will be Prativyoman;⁷ his son will be Divākara; his son will be Sahadeva;⁸ his son will be Vṛhadaśva;⁹ his son will be Bhānuratha;¹⁰ his son will be Supratītha;¹¹ his son will be Marudeva;¹² his son will be Sunakṣatra, his son will be Kinnara;¹³ his son will be Antarikṣa; his son will be Suvarṇa;¹⁴ his son will be Amitrajit;¹⁵ his son will be Vṛhadrāja;¹⁶ his son will be Dharman;¹⁷ his son will be Kṛtañjaya, his son will be Rāṇañjaya; his son will be Sañjaya; his son will be Śākyā;¹⁸ his son will be Śuddhodana,¹⁹ his son will be Rātula,²⁰ his son will be Prasenajit, his son will be Kṣudraka, his son will be Kuṇḍaka;²¹ his son will be Suratha;²² his son will be Sumitra. These are the kings of the family of Ikshwāku, descended from Vrihadbala. This commemorative verse is current concerning them; "The race of the descendants of Ikshwāku will terminate with Sumitra: it will end in the Kali age with him."²³

1. See Bk. IV. Ch. II.
2. Vṛhadratha : Vāyu.
3. Vṛhatkṣaya : Vāyu. Vṛhadraṇa : Bhāgavata. Omitted : Matsya.
4. Omitted : Vāyu. Urukṣaya : Matsya. Urukriya : Bhāgavata.
5. Omitted by all three.
6. Vatsavṛddha : Bhāgavata.
7. Prativyūha : Vāyu.
8. The Bhāgavata inserts Bhānu. The Matsya says that Ayodhyā was the capital of Divākara. The Vāyu omits the next twelve names; probably a defect in the copies.
9. Druvāśva : Matsya.
10. Bhānumat : Bhāgavata, Bhāvyaratha or Bhāvyā : Matsya.
11. Pratīkāśva : Bhāgavata. Pratīpāśva : Matsya.
12. The Bhāgavata and Matsya prefix a Supratīpa or Supratīka.
13. Puṣkara : Bhāgavata.
14. Suparvan or Sumantra : Matsya. Sutapas : Bhāgavata.
15. Amantravit : Matsya.
16. Vṛhadbrāja : Bhāgavata.
17. Omitted : Matsya Varhiṣ : Bhāgavata.
18. The Bhāgavata and Vāyu have Śākyā. My copy of the Matsya has Śādhyā, but the Radcliffe MS., more correctly, no doubt. Śākyā (शक्यः).
19. In some copies Krodhodana; but it is also Śuddhodana, Matsya and Vāyu; Śuddhoda, Bhāgavata.

20. Rāhula : Vāyu. Siddhārtha or Puṣkala : Matsya Lāṅgala : Bhāgavata. This and the two preceding names are of considerable chronological interest; for Śākyā is the name of the author or reviver of Buddhism, whose birth appears to have occurred in the seventh and death in the sixth century before Christ (B.C. 621-543). There can be no doubt of the individual here intended, although he is out of his place, for he was the son, not the father, of Śuddhodana and the father of Rāhula; as he is termed in the Amara and Haima Kośas, Śaudhodani or Śuddhodana suta the son of Śuddhodana and Rāhulasu the parent of Rāhula : so also in the Mahāvarīśa, Siddhārtha or Śākyā is the son of Śuddhodano and father of Rāhula. Turnour's translation, p. 9. Whether they are rightly included amongst the princes of the race of Ikṣvāku is more questionable, for Śuddhodana is usually described as a petty prince, whose capital was not Ayodhyā, but Kapilavastu. At the same time it appears that the provinces of the Doab had passed into the possession of princes of the lunar line and the children of the sun may have been reduced to the country north of the Ganges or the modern Gorakhpur, in which Kapila was situated. The Buddhists do usually consider their teacher Śākyā to be descended from Ikṣvāku. The chronology is less easily adjusted, but it is not altogether incompatible. According to the lists of the text, Śākyā, as the twenty-second of the line of Ikṣvāku, is contemporary with Ripuñjaya, the twenty-second and last of the kings of Magadha, of the family of Jarāsandha; but, agreeably to the Buddhist authorities, he was the friend of Bimbasāra, a king who in the Paurāṇik list appears to be the fifth of the Śaiśunāga dynasty and tenth from Ripuñjaya. The same number of princes does not necessarily imply equal duration of dynasty and Ikṣvāku's descendants may have outlasted those of Jarāsandha; or as is more likely for the dynasty was obscure and is evidently imperfectly preserved - several descents may have been omitted, the insertion of which would reconcile the Paurāṇik lists with those of the Buddhists and bring Śākyā down to the age of Bimbasāra. It is evident, from what occurs in other authorities, that the Aikṣvākava princes are regarded as contemporaries even of the Śaiśunāga dynasty : see c. 24, n. 17.

21. Kṣulika : Vāyu. Kulaka or Kṣullaka : Matsya. Omitted : Bhāgavata. In the Mahāvira Caritra, a work written by the celebrated Hemacandra, in the twelfth century, we have a Prasenajit, king of Magadha, residing at Rājgr̥ha, succeeded by Śrenīka and he by Kūlika. The Buddhists have a Prasenajit contemporary with Śakya, son of Mahāpadma, king of Magadha. There is some confusion of persons wither in the Paurāṇik genealogies or in the Buddhist and Jain traditions, but they agree in brining the same names together about the same period.

22. Omitted : Bhāgavata.

23. The Vāyu and Bhāgavata have the same stanza. We have here twenty-nine or thirty princes of the later solar line, contemporary with the preceding twenty-six or twenty-seven of the later dynasty of the moon.,

I will now relate to you the descendants of Vārhadratha, who will be the kings of Magadha. There have been several powerful princes of this dynasty, of whom the most celebrated was Jarāsandha, his son was Sahadeva, his son is Somāpi;¹ his son will be

The son of Mahānanda will be born of a woman of the Śūdra or servile class; his name will be Nanda, called Mahāpadma, for he will be exceedingly avaricious.¹⁸ Like another Parāśurāma, he will be the annihilator of the Kṣatriya race; for after him the kings of the earth will be Śūdras. He will bring the whole earth under one umbrella : he will have eight sons, Sumālya and others, who will reign after Mahāpadma; and he and his sons¹⁹ will govern for a hundred years. The Brāhmaṇa Kauṭilya will root out the nine Nandas.²⁰

Upon the cessation of the race of Nanda, the Mauryas will possess the earth, for Kauṭilya will place Candragupta²¹ on the throne : his son will be Vindusāra;²² his son will be Aśokavarddhana;²³ his son will be Suyaśas;²⁴ his son will be Daśaratha; his son will be Sangata; his son will Śāliśuka; his son will be Somaśarmman; his son will be Saśadharman;²⁵ and his successor will be Vṛhadratha. In Magadha a sovereign named Viśvasphaṭika will establish other tribes; he will extirpate the Kṣatriya or martial race and elevate fishermen, barbarians and Brāhmaṇas and other castes, to power.⁶⁹ The nine Nāgas will reign in Padmāvatī, Kāntipurī and Mathurā; and the Guptas of Magadha along the Ganges to Prayāga.⁷⁰ A prince named Devarakṣita will reign, in a city on the sea-shore, over the Kośalas, Oḍras, Puṇḍras and Tāmraliptas.⁷¹ The Guhas will possess Kāliṅga, Māhihaka and the mountains of Mahendra.⁷² The race of Maṇidhanu will occupy the countries of the Niśadas, Naimiśikas and Kālatoyas.⁷³ The people called Kanaks will possess the Amazon country and that called Mūṣika.⁷⁴ Men of the three tribes, but degraded and Ābhīras and Śūdras, will occupy Śaurāṣṭra, Avanti, Śūra, Arbuda and Marubhūmi and Śūdras, outcastes and barbarians will be masters of the banks of the Indus, Dārvika, the Candrabhāgā and Kāshmir.⁷⁵

These will all be contemporary monarchs, reigning over the earth; kings of churlish spirit, violent, temper and ever addicted to falsehood and wickedness. They will inflict death on women, children and cows; they will seize upon the property of their subjects; they will be of limited power and will for the most part rapidly rise and fall; their lives will be short, their desires insatiable and they will display but little piety.

simple ablution will be purification;⁷⁸ mutual assent will be marriage; fine clothes will be dignity;⁷⁹ and water afar off will be esteemed a holy spring. Amidst all castes he who is the strongest will reign over a principality thus vitiated by many faults. The people, unable to bear the heavy burdens imposed upon them by their avaricious sovereigns, will take refuge amongst the valleys of the mountains and will be glad to feed upon wild honey, herbs, roots, fruits, flowers and leaves : their only covering will be the bark of trees and they will be exposed to the cold and wind and sun and rain. No man's life will exceed three and twenty years. Thus in the Kali age shall decay constantly proceed, until the human race approaches its annihilation.

When the practices taught by the Vedas and the institutes of law shall nearly have ceased and the close of the Kali age shall be nigh, a portion of that divine being who exists of his own spiritual nature in the character of Brahma and who is the beginning and the end and who comprehends all things, shall descend upon earth : he will be born in the family of Viṣṇuyaśas, an eminent Brāhmaṇa of Sambhala village, as Kalki, endowed with the eight superhuman faculties. By his irresistible might he will destroy all the Mlechas and thieves and all whose minds are devoted to iniquity.

Thus, most excellent Muni, the kings who are past, who are present and who are to be, have been enumerated. From the birth of Parīkṣit to the coronation of Nanda it is to be known that 1015 years have elapsed.⁸¹

When the two first stars of the seven Rṣis (the great bear) rise in the heavens and some lunar asterism is seen at night at an equal distance between them, then the seven Rṣis continue stationary in that conjunction for hundred years of men.⁸²

At the birth of Parīkṣit they were in Maghā and the Kali age then commenced, which consists of 1200 (divine) years. When the portion of Viśnu (that had been born from Vasudeva) returned to heaven, then the Kali age commenced.

they will return hither in the beginning of the Kṛta age and becoming members of the family of the Manu, give origin to the Kṣatriya dynasties.⁸⁴ In this manner the earth is possessed through every series of the three first ages, the Kṛta, Tretā and Dvāpara, by the sons of the Manu; and some remain in the Kali age, to serve as the rudiments of renewed generations, in the same way as Devāpi and Maru are still in existence.

I have now given you a summary account of the sovereigns of the earth; to recapitulate the whole would be impossible even in a hundred lives. These and other kings, who with perishable frames have possessed this ever-during world and who, blinded with deceptive notions of individual occupation, have indulged the feeling that suggests, "This earth is mine—it is my son's—it belongs to my dynasty," have all passed away. So, many who reigned before them, many who succeeded them and many who are yet to thousands; whose names and tribes and come, have ceased or will cease, to be. Earth families I have not enumerated to you, from laughs, as if smiling with autumnal flowers, to their great number and the repetition of behold her kings unable to effect the appellations it would involve. It is through infatuation that kings desire to possess me, whom their predecessors have been forced to leave, whom their fathers have not retained. Beguiled by the selfish love of sway, fathers contend with sons and brothers with brothers, for my possession. Foolishness has been the character of every king who has boasted, 'All this earth is mine—everything is mine—it will be in my house for ever;' for he is dead. How is it possible that such vain desires should survive in the hearts of his descendants, who have seen their progenitor, absorbed by the thirst of dominion, compelled to relinquish me, whom he called his own and tread the path of dissolution?

NOTES

1. Munika, Vāyu : Pulika, Matsya; Śunaka, Bhāgavata.

2. For 23 years, V. and M.

3. 24 years V.; Tilaka or Bālaka, 28, M.

4. 50 years V.; 53, M.

5. Ajaka, 21 years V.; Sūryaka, 21, M.; Rajaka, Bhāgavata.

6. 20 years V. and M.

7. This number is also specified by the Vāyu and Bhāgavata and the several years of the reigns of the former agree with the total. The particulars of the Matsya compose 145 years, but there is no doubt some mistake in them.

8. Śisunāka, who according to the Vāyu and Matsya relinquished Banārasa to his son and established himself at Girivraja or Rājgrīha in Bihar, reigns 40 years V. and M.

9. 36 years V. and M.

10. Kṣemakarman, 20 years V.; Kṣemadharman, 36, M.

11. 40 years V.; Kṣemajit or Kṣemārcis, 36, M.; Kṣetrajña, Bhāgavata.

12. Vimbisara, 28 years V.; Vindusena or Vindhyaśena, 28, M.; Vidhisāra, Bhāgavata.

13. 25 years V.; 27, M.; but the latter inserts a Kaṇvāyana, 9 years and Bhūmimitra or Bhūmiputra, 14 years before him. In this and the preceding name we have appellations of considerable celebrity in the traditions of the Buddhists. Vidmisāra, read also Vindhūsāra, Vilvisāra, etc., is most probably their Vimbasāra, who was born at the same time with Śākyā and was reigning at Rājgr̥ha when he began his religious career. The Mahāvarīśa says that Siddhatto and Bimbisaro were attached friends, as their fathers had been before them. Śākyā is said to have died in the reign of Ajātaśatru, the son of Vimbasāra, in the eighth year of his reign. The Vāyu transposes these names and the Matsya still more alters and order of Ajātaśatru; but the Bhāgavata concurs with our text. The Buddhist authority differs from the Purāṇas materially as to the duration of the reigns, giving to Bimbisaro 52 years and to Ajatasattu 32 : the latter, according to the same, murdered his father. Mahāvarīśa, p. 10. We may therefore with some confidence claim for these princes a date of about six centuries B.C. They are considered contemporary with Sudhoddhana, in the list of the Aikṣvākavas (p. Bk. IV. Ch. XXII. n. 20).

14. Harṣaka, 25 years V.; Vansaka, 24, M.

15. 33 years V.; Udibhi or Udāśin, 33, M. According to the Vāyu, Udaya or Udayāśva founded Kusumapur or Pātaliputra, on the southern angle of the Ganges : स वै पुरवरं राजा पृथिव्यां कुसुमाद्यं। गंगायाः दक्षिणेकोणे चतुर्येऽद्वे करिष्यति॥ The legends of Śākyā, consistently with this tradition, take no notice of this city in his peregrinations on either bank of the Ganges. The Mahāvarīśa calls the son and successor of Ajātaśatru, Udayibhadako (Udayinbhadraka) : Bk. I. Ch. II.

16. 42 and 43 years V.; 40 and 43, M. The Mahāvarīśa has in place of these, Anuruddhako, Mundo and Nāgadāso; all in succession patricides : the last deposed by an insurrection of the people.

17. The several authorities agree in the number of ten Śaiśunāgas and in the aggregate years of their reigns, which the Matsya and the Bhāgavata call 360 : the Vāyu has 362, with which the several periods correspond : the details of the Matsya give 363. The Vāyu and Matsya call the Śaiśunāgas, Kṣatrābandhus, which may designate an inferior order of Kṣatriyas : they also observe, that contemporary with the dynasties already specified, the Pauravas, the Vārhadrathas and Māgadhas, there were other races of royal descent; as, Aikṣvākava princes, 24 :

Pāncālas, 25, V.; 27, M. : Kālakas or Kāsakas or Kāseyas, 24 : Haihayas, 24, V.; 28, M. : Kālingas, 32, V.; 40, M. : Śakas, V.; Aśmakas, M, 25 : Kuravas, 26 : Maithilas, 28 : Sūrasenas, 23 : and Vitihotras, 20.

18. The Bhāgavata calls him Mahāpadmapati, the lord of Mahāpadma; which the commentator interprets, 'sovereign of an infinite host' or 'of immense wealth;' Mahāpadma signifying 100,000 millions. The Vāyu and Matsya, however, consider Mahāpadma as another name of Nanda.

19. So the Bhāgavata also; but it would be more compatible with chronology to consider the nine Nandas as so many descents. The Vāyu and Matsya give eighty-eight years to Mahāpadam and only the remaining twelve to Sumālyā and the rest of the remaining eight; these twelve years being occupied with the efforts of Kauṭilya to expel the Nandas. The Mahāvarīśa, evidently intending the same events, gives names and circumstances differently : it may be doubted if with more accuracy. On the disposal of Nāgadāsa, the people raised to the throne the minister Susunāgo, who reigned eighteen years. This prince is evidently confounded with the Śiśunāga of the Purāṇas. He was succeeded by his son Kālāsoka, who reigned twenty years; and he was succeeded by his sons, ten of whom reigned together for twenty-two years : subsequently there were nine, who, according to their seniority, reigned for twenty-two years. The Brāhmaṇa Canaka put the ninth surviving brother, named Dhana Nando (Rich-Nanda), to death and installed Chandragupta Mahāvarīśa p. 15 and 21. These particulars, notwithstanding the alteration of some of the names, belong clearly to one story; and that of the Buddhists looks as if it was borrowed and modified from that of the Brāhmaṇas. The commentary on the Mahāvarīśa, translated by Turnour (Introduction, p. xxxvii), calls the sons of Kālāsoka the 'nine Nandas;' but another Buddhist authority, the Dīpavāriśa, omits Kālāsoko and says that Susunāgo had ten brothers, who after his demise reigned collectively twenty-two years.

Journal of the As. Soc. Of Bengal Nov. 1838, p. 930.

20. For the particulars of the story here alluded to see the Mudrā Rāksasa, Hindu Theatre, vol. II. Kauṭilya is also called, according to the commentator on our text, Vātsyāyana, Viṣṇugupta and Cāṇakya. According to the Matsya Purāṇa, Kauṭilya retained the regal authority for a century but there is some inaccuracy in the copies.

21. This is the most important name in all the lists, as it can scarcely be doubted that he is the Sandrocottus or as Athenaeus writes more correctly, the Sandrocoptus, of the Greeks, as I have endeavoured to prove in the introduction to the Mudrā Rākṣasa. The relative position of Candragupta, Vidmisāra or Bimbisāra and Ajātaśatru, serve to confirm the identification. Śākyā was contemporary with both the latter, dying in the eighth year of Ajātaśatru reign. The Mahāvarīśa says he reigned twenty-four years afterwards; but the Vāyu makes his whole reign but twenty-five years, which would place the close of it B.C. 526. The rest of the Śaiśunāga dynasty, according to the Vāyu and Matsya, reigned 143 or 140 years; bringing their close to B.C. 383. Another century being deducted for the duration of the Nandas, would place the accession of Candragupta B.C. 283. Candragupta was the contemporary of Seleucus Nicator, who began this reign B.C. 310 and concluded a treaty with him B.C. 305. Although therefore his date may not be made out quite correctly from the Paurāṇik premises, yet the error cannot be more than twenty or thirty years. The result is much nearer the truth than that furnished by Buddhist authorities. According to the Mahāvarīśa a hundred years had elapsed from the death of Buddha to the tenth year of the reign of Kālāsoko. He reigned other ten years and his son's forty-four, making of total of 154 years between the death of Śākyā and the accession of Candragupta which is consequently placed B.C. 389 or above seventy years too early. According to the Buddhist authorities, Chan-ta-kutta or Candragupta commenced his reign 396 B.C. Burmese Table; Prinsep's Useful Tables. Turnour, in his Introduction, giving to Kālāsoko eighteen years subsequent to the century after Buddha, places Candragupta's accession B.C. 381, which, he observes, is sixty years too soon; dating, however, the accession of Candragupta from 323 B.C. or immediately upon Alexander's death, a period too early by eight or ten years at least. The discrepancy of dates, turnour is disposed to think, proceeds from some intentional perversion of the Buddhistical chronology. Introduction P.L. The commentator on our text says that Candragupta was the son of Nanda by a wife named Murā, whence he and his descendants were called Mauryas : चन्द्रगुप्तं नन्दस्य व पत्न्यन्तरस्य मुरासज्जस्य पुत्रं मौर्याणां प्रथमं। Tod considers Maurya a corruption of Mori, the name of a Rajput tribe. The Tīka on the Mahāvarīśa builds a story on the fancied resemblance of the word to Mayūra, S. Mori, Pr. 'a peacock'. There being abundance of pea-fowl in the place where the Śākyā tribe built a town, they called it Mori and there princes were thence called Mauryas. Turnour, Introduction to the Mahāvarīśa, p. xxxix. Candragupta reigned, according to the Vāyu P., 24 years; according to the Mahāvarīśa, 34; to the Dipavasano, 24.

22. So the Mahāvarīśa, Bindusāra. Burmese Table, Bin-tu-sara. The Vāyu has Bhadrasāra, 25 years; the Bhāgavata, Vārisāra. The Matsya names but four princes of this race, although it concurs with the others in stating the series to consist of ten. The names are also differently arranged and one is peculiar : they are, Śatadhanvan, Vṛhadratha, Śuka and Daśaratha.

23. Aśoka, 36 years, Vāyu; Śuka, 26, Matsya; Aśokavarddhana, Bhāgavata; Aśoka and Dhammaśoka, Mahāvarīśa. This king is the most celebrated of any in the annals of the Buddhists. In the commencement of his reign he followed the Brahmanical faith, but became a convert to that of Buddha and a zealous encourager of it. He is said to have maintained in his palace 64,000 Buddhist priests and to have erected 84,000 columns or topes throughout India. A great convocation of Buddhist priests was held in the eighteenth year of his reign, which was followed by missions of Ceylon and other places. According to Buddhist chronology he ascended the throne 218 years after the death of Buddha, B.C. 325. As the grandson of Candragupta, however, he must have been some time subsequent to this or agreeably to the joint duration of the reigns of Candragupta and Bindusāra, supposing the former to have commenced his reign about B.C. 315, forty-nine years later or B.C. 266. The duration of his reign is said to have been thirty-six years, bringing it down to B.C. 230 : but if we deduct these periods from the date assignable to Candragupta, of B.C. 283, we shall place Aśoka's reign from B.C. 234 to 198. Now it is certain that a number of very curious inscriptions, on columns and rocks, by a Buddhist prince, in an ancient form of letter and the Pāli language, exist in India; and that some of them refer to Greek princes, who can be no other than members of the Seleucidan and ptolemaean dynasties and are probably Antiochus the Great and Ptolemy Euergetes, kings of Syria and Egypt in the latter part of the third century before Christ. Journal of the Asiatic Society of Bengal, February and March, 1838. The Indian king appears always under the appellation Piyadaśī or Priyadarśī, 'the beautiful;' and his entitled Devānam-piya, 'the beloved of the gods.' According to Buddhist authorities, the Rasavāhinī and Dīpavariṇī, quoted by Turnour (J. As. Soc. Of Bengal, Dec., 1837, p. 1056 and Nov. 1838, p. 930), Piyadaśī or Piyadaśāno is identified both by name and circumstances with Aśoka and to him therefore the inscriptions must be attributed. Their purpose agrees well enough with his character and their wide diffusion with the traditionally report of the number of his monuments. His date is not exactly that of Antiochus the great, but it is not very far different and the corrections required to make it correspond are no more than the inexact manner in which both Brahmanical and Buddhist chronology is preserved may well be expected to render necessary.

24. The name of Daśaratha, in a similar ancient character as that of Piyadaśī's inscriptions, has been found at Gayā amongst Buddhist remains and like them deciphered by Prinsep, Journal, As. Society Bengal, August, 1837, p. 677. A different series of names occur in the Vāyu; or Kuśala, 8 years; Bandhupālita, Indrapālita, Daśavarman, 7 years; Śatadhara, 8 years; and Vṛhadaśva, 7 years. The Bhāgavata agrees in most of the names and its omission of Daśaratha is corrected by the commentator.

25. Śatadhanvan, Bhāgavata.

26. The Vāyu says nine Sumūrtyas reigned 137 years. The Matsya and Bhāgavata have ten Mauryas and 137 years. The detailed numbers of the Vāyu and Matsya differ from their totals, but the copies are manifestly corrupt.

27. The Bhāgavata omits this name, but states that there were ten Śungas, although, without Puṣpamitra, only nine are named. The Vāyu and Matsya have the same account of the circumstances of his accession to the throne; the former gives him a reign of sixty, the latter of thirty-six years. In a play attributed to Kālidāsa, the Mālavikāgnimitra, of which Agnimitra is the hero, his father is alluded to as the Senānī or general, as if he had deposed his master in favour, not of himself, but of his son. Agnimitra is termed king of Vidiśā, not of Magadha. Puṣpamitra is represented as engaged in a conflict with the Yavanas on the Indus; thus continuing the political relations with the Greeks or Scythians of Bactria and Ariana. See Hindu Theatre, vol. I. 347.

28. 8 years V.; omitted M.

29. 7 years V. and M.; but the latter places him after Vasumitra; and in the drama the son of Agnimitra is called Vasumitra.

30. 8 years V.; 10 years M.

31. Andraka, V. Antaka, M. : they agree in his reign, 2 years, Bhadraka, Bhāgavata.

32. 3 years V. and M.

33. 3 years V.; omitted, M.; Ghoṣa, Bhāgavata.

34. 9 years M.

35. Bhāgavata M.; 32 years V. and M.

36. Kṣemabhūmi, V.; Devabhūmi, M.; 10 years both.

37. The Bhāgavata says, 'more than a hundred,' शताधिकं। The commentator explains it 112, द्वादशाधिकं। The Vāyu and Matsya have the same period.

38. The names of the four princes agree in all the authorities. The Matsya transfers the character of Vyasanī to the minister, with the further addition of his being a Brāhmaṇa; Dvija. In the lists given by Jones and Wilford, the four Kāṇvas are said to have reigned 345 years; but in seven copies of the Viśnu Purāna, from different parts of India, the number is, as given in the text, forty-five : एते काणवायनाश्वत्वाः पञ्चतत्त्वारिंशद्बर्षणि भूपतयो भविष्यन्ति। There is however authority for the larger number, both in the text of the Bhāgavata and the comment. The former has, काणवायना इमे भूमि चत्त्वारिंशच्च पञ्च। शतानि त्रीणि भोक्ष्यन्ति वर्षणां च कलौ युगे॥ and the latter, काणवायनाश्वर्षणां त्रीणिशतानि पञ्चतत्त्वारिंशद्बर्षणि भूमि भोक्ष्यन्ति। There is no doubt therefore of the purpose of the text; and it is only surprising that such a chronology should have been inserted in the Bhāgavata, not only in opposing to all probability, but to other authority. The Vāyu and Matsya not only confirm the lower number by stating it as a total, but by giving it in detail; thus : Vasudeva will reign 9 years, Bhūmimitra, 14, Nārāyaṇa, 12 and Suśarman, 10. Total - 45. And six copies of the Matsya concur in this statement.

39. The expressions Andhrajātiyas and Andharbhṛtyas have much perplexed Wilford, who makes three races out of one Āndhras, Andharjātiyas and Andharbhṛtyas. As. Res. IX. 101. There is no warrant for three races in the Purāṇas, although the Matsya and perhaps the Vāyu, distinguishes two, as we shall hereafter see. Our text has but one, to which all the terms may be applied. The first of the dynasty was an Āndhra by birth or caste (jātiya) and servant (bhṛtyas) of the last of the Kāṇva race. So the Vāyu; सिन्धुकोद्यन्धजातीयः। the Matsya; काण्वायनस्तदा भूत्यः सुशम्पाणं प्रसाद्य तं शिष्युकोऽन्धः सजातीयः प्रस्यतीमां वसुभर्णां and the Bhāgavatas; हत्वाकाप्वं सुशम्पाणं तद्वृत्तौ वृप्लो बलो गां भोक्ष्यत्यन्धजातीयः कंचित्कालंसत्रम्। The terms 'an Andhra by caste' and 'a Bhṛtya or servant,' with the addition, in the last passage, of Vṛṣala, 'a Śūdra,' all apply to one person and one dynasty. Wilfor has made wild work with his triad. The name of the first of this race is variously read : Sindhuka, Vāyu; Śiśuka, Matsya; Balin, Bhāgavata; and according to Wilfor, Chismaka in the Brahmāṇḍa P. and Śūdraka or Śūraka in the Kumārikā Khaṇḍa of the Skanda Purāṇa As. Res. IX. 107. He reigned 23 years, Vāyu and Matsya. If the latter form of his name be correct, he may be the king who is spoken of in the prologue to the Mṛcchakaṭī.

63. The Vāyu and Bhāgavata state also 30 kings and 456 years; the Matsya has 29 kings and 460 years. The actual enumeration of the text gives but 24 names; that of the Bhāgavata but 23; that of the Vāyu but 17. The Matsya has the whole 29 names, adding several to the list of our text; and the aggregate of the reigns amounts of 435 years and 6 months. The difference between this and the total specified arises probably from some inaccuracy in the MSS. As this list appears to be fuller than any other, it may be advisable to insert it as it occurs in the Radcliffe copy of the Matsya Purāṇa -

1. Śiśuka, 23 years, 2. Kṛṣṇa, 18, 3. Simālakarṇi,

18, 4. Purnotsanga, 18, 5. Śrīvasvāni, 18, 6. Śātakarṇi, 56, 7. Lambodara, 18, 8. Apītaka, 12, 9. Saṅgha, 18, 10. Śātakarṇi, 18, 11. Skandhasvāti, 7, 12. Mṛgendra, 3, 13. Kuntalasvāti, 8, 14. Śivaśrī, 7, 25. Skandhasvāti, 7, 26. Yajñaśrī, 9, 27. Vijaya, 6, 28. Vadaśrī, 10, 29. Pulomat, 7. Total 435 years 6 month. Several of the names vary in this list from those in my copy. The adjuncts Svāti and Śātikarṇi appear to be conjoined or not with the other appellations, according to the convenience of the metre and seem to be the family designations or titles. The dynasty is of considerable chronological interest, as it admits of some plausible verifications. That powerful race of Andhra princes ruled in India in the beginning of the Christian era, we learn from Pliny, who describes them as possessed of thirty fortified cities, with an army of 100,000 men and 1000 elephants. The Andhra of this writer are probably the people of the upper part of the peninsula, Andhra being the proper designation of Teliṅgāna. The Peutingerian tables, however, place the Andre-Indi on the banks of the Ganges and the southern princes may have extended or shifted the site of their power. Towards the close of the dynasty we find names that appear to agree with those of princes of middle India, of whom mention is made by the Chinese; as, Yue-gnai (Yajñaśrī), king of Kiapili, A.D. 408; Des Guignes, I. 45; and Ho-lo-mien (Pulomān), king of Magadha in 621; ibid, I. 56. The Paurāṇik lists place these two princes more nearly together, but we cannot rely implicitly upon their accuracy. Calculating from Candragupta downwards, the Indian date of Yajña and the Chinese Yue-gnai corresponds; for we have, 10 Mauryas, 137 years 10 Śungas, 112. 4 Kanvas, 45. 27 Andhras, 437. Total 731. Deduct for Candragupta's date 312 B.C. Total 419 A.C. A date remarkably near that derivable from the Chinese annals. If the Indian Pulomān be the same with the Chinese Ho-lo-mien, there must be some considerable omission in the Paurāṇik dynasty. There is a farther identification in the case of Ho-lo-mien, which makes it certain that a prince of Magadha is intended, as the place of his residence is called by the Chinesc Kia-so-mo-pulo-ching and Potoli-tse-ching; or in Sanskrit, Kusuma-pura and Pāṭali-putra. The equivalent of the latter name consists, not only in the identiy of the sounds Pāṭali and Po-to-li, but in the translation of 'putra' by 'tse'; each word meaning in their respective languages 'son'. No doubt can be entertained therefore that the city intended is the metropolis of Magadha, Pāṭaliputra or Pali-bothra. Wilform identifies Pulomat or Pulomān with the Po-lo-muen of the Chinese; but Des Guignes interprets Po-lo-muen kue, 'royaume des Brahmanes'. Buchanan (Hamilton), following the Bhāgavata as to the name of the last king, Sulomadhi, would place him about A.D. 846; but his premises are far from accurate and his deduction in this instance at least is of no weight. Geneal. of the Hindus, Introduction p. 16. He supposes the Andhra kings of Magadha to have retained their power on the Ganges until the Mohammedan invasion or the twelfth century, when they retired to the south and reigned at Warankal in Teliṅgāna. Inscriptions and coins, however, confirm the statement of the Purāṇa, that a different dynasty succeeded to the Andhras some centuries before the Mohammedan conquests; and the Chines also record, that upon the death of the king of Magadha, Ho-lo-mien (Puloman?), some time before A.D. 648, great troubles in India took place. Des Guignes. Some very curious and authentic testimony to the actual existence of these Andhra kings has been lately afforded by the discovery of an ancient inscription in Gujarat, in which Rudra Dāmā, the Kṣatrapa or Satrap of Surāṣṭra, is recorded to have repeatedly overcome Śātakarṇi, king of the southern country (Dakṣinapatha). The inscription is with out date, but it is in an old character and makes mention of the two Maurya princes, Candragupta and Aśoka, as if not very long prior to its composition. Prinsep, to whom we are indebted for the deciphering and translating of this important document, has been also successfull in deciphering the legends on a series of coins belonging to the princes of Surāṣṭra, amongst whom the name of Rudra Dāmā occurs; and he is inclined, although with hesitation, to place these princes about a century after Aśoka or Rudra Dāmā about 153 B.C. J. As. Soc. Bengal, May 1837 and April 1838. According to the computation hazarded above from our text, the race of Andhra kings should not commence till about 20 years B.C., which would agree with Pliny's notice of them; but it is possible that they existed earlier in the south of India, although they established their authority in Magadha only in the first centuries of the Christian era.

64. These parallel dynasties are thus particularised in our other authorities :

Abhiras, 7, M.; 10, V.; kings of Avabhṛti, 7, Bhāgavata Garddabhis, 10, M. V. Bhāgavata Śakas, 18, M.V.; Kāṅkas, 16, Bhāgavata Yavanas, 8, M.V. Bhāgavata, Tuśaras, 14, M.V.; Tuśkaras, 14, Bhāgavata Marūṇḍas, 13, V.; Purūṇḍos, 13, M.; Surūṇḍas, 10, Bhāgavata Mannas, 18, V.; Hūṇas, 19, M.; Maulas, 11, Bhāgavata. Total 85 kings, Vāyu; 89, Matsya; 76 and 1399 years, Bhāgavata.

The other two authorities give the years of each dynasty severally. The numbers are apparently intended to be the same, but those of the Matsya are palpable blunders, although almost all the MSS. agree in the reading. The chronology of the Vāyu is Abhīras, 67 years; Garddabhins, 72; Śakas, 380; Yavanas, 82; Tuśaras, 500 (all the copies of the Matsya have 7000); Marūṇḍas, 200; and Mlecchas, intending perhaps Maunas, 300 years. Total 1601 years or less than 19 years to a reign. They are not however continuous, but nearly contemporary dynasties; and if they comprise, as they probably do, the Greek and Scythian princes of the west of India, the periods may not be very wide of the truth. The Matsya begins the list with one more dynasty, another Andhra (see n. 39), of whom there were seven : अन्धाणां संस्थिते राज्ये तेषां भूत्यान्वया नृपाः । सर्वेवान्धा भविष्यन्ति नवापीरास्ततो नृपाः॥ 'When the dominion of the Andhras has ceased, there shall be seven other Andhras, kings of the race of their servants; and then nine Abhīras.' etc. The passage of the Vāyu, although somewhat similar in terms, has a different purpose : अन्धाणां संस्थितानां च तेषां वंशा समा युः । सर्वैवतुभविष्यन्ति-दशाभीरास्ततो नृपाः॥ "Of these, the Andhras having passed away, there shall be seven contemporary races; as, ten Abhīras.' The passage is differently read in different copies, but this is the only intelligible reading. At the same time it subsequently specifies a period for the duration of the Andhra dynasty different from that before given or three hundred years, as if a different race was referred to : अन्धा भीक्ष्यन्ति वसुधां शते द्वे च शतं च हौ । 'The Andhras shall possess the earth two hundred years and one hundred.' The Matsya has twice five hundred : अन्धा श्रीपञ्चतीयाश्च ते द्वे पञ्चशतं समाः । 'The Śrīparvatīya Andhras twice five hundred years.' One MS. has more consistently fifty-two years : द्विर्पञ्चाशतं समाः । But there is evidently something faulty in all the MSS. The expression of the Matsya, 'Śrīparvatīya Andhras,' is remarkable; Śrīparvat being in Telingānā. There is probably some confusion of the two races, the Magadha and Tailinga kings, in these passages of the Purānas. The Bhāgavata has a dynasty of seven Andhra kings, but of a different period (see n. 39). Wilfor has attempted a verification of these dynasties; in some instances perhaps with success, though certainly not in all. The Abhīras he calls the shepherd kings of the north of India : they were more probably Greeks or Scythians or Parthians, along the lower Indua : traces of the name occur, as formerly observed, in the Abiria of Ptolemy and the Ahīrs as a distinct race still exist in Gujarat. Raish Mehfil. The Śakas are the Sace and the duration of their power is not unlikely to be near the truth. The eight Yavana kings may be, as he suppose, Greek princes of Bactria, or rather of western India. The Tuśaras he makes the Parthians. If the Bhāgavata has the preferable reading Tuskaras, they were the Tocari, a Scythian race. The Murūṇḍas, as he has it, Maurūṇḍas, he considers to be a tribe of Hūṇas, the Morundae of Ptolemy. According to the Matsya they were of Mleccha origin, Mleccha-saribhava. The Vāyu calls them Arya-mlecchas; quere, Barbarians of Ariana. Wilford regards the Maunas as also a tribe of Hūṇas; and the word is in all the MSS. of the Matsya, Hūṇas; traces of whom may be still found in the west and south of India. Inscription at Merritch. Jour. R. As. Soc. Vol. III. p. 103. The Garddabhins Wilford conjectures to be descendants of Bahram Gor, king of Persia; but this is very questionable. That they were a tribe in the west of India may be conjectured, as some strange tales prevail there of a Gandharva, changed to an ass, marrying the daughter of the king of Dhār. As. Res. VI. 35 and IX. 147; also 'Cutch' by Mrs. Postans, p. 18 : fables suggested no doubt by the name Garddabha, signifying as ass. There is also evidently some affinity between these Garddabhins and the old Gadhia Pysa or assmoney, as vulgarly termed, found in various parts of western India and which is unquestionably of ancient date. Journ. As. Soc. Bengal, Dec. 1835, p. 688. It may be the coinage of the Garddabha princes; Garddabha, being the original of Gadhā, meaning also an ass. I have elsewhere conjectured the possibility of their being current about a century and a half before our era. Journ. R. As. Soc. Vol. III. 385. Tod, quoting a parallel passage in Hindi, reads, instead of Garddhabhin, Gor-ind, which he explains the Indras or lords of Gor; but the reading is undoubtedly erroneous.

65. The copies agree in reading Pauras, but the commentator remarks that it is sometimes Maunas, but they have already been specified; unless the term be repeated in order to separate the duration of this dynasty from that of the rest. Such seems to be the purpose of the similar passage of the Bhāgavata. 'These kings (Andhras etc.) will possess the earth 1099 years and the eleven Maulas 300.' एते भोक्ष्यन्ति पृथिवीं दशवर्षशतानि च नवाधिकां च नवतिं मौला एकादश

क्षिति भास्यान्त्यब्दशतानि त्रीणि। No such name as Pauras occurs in the other authorities. The analogy of duration identifies them with the Mlecchas of the Vāyu : 'Eleven Mlecchas will possess the earth for three centuries:' शतानि त्रीणि भोक्ष्यन्ते म्लेच्छा एकादशैवतु। and the Vāyu may refer to the Maunas, as no other period is assigned for them. The periods of the Bhāgavata, 1099 and 300, come much to the same as that of our text, 1390; the one including the three centuries of the Maunas, the other stating it separately. The Vāyu apparently adds it to the rest, thus making the total 1601, instead of 1390. It is evident that the same scheme is intended by the several authorities, although some inaccuracy affects either the original statement or the existing manuscripts.

66. Kilakila, Kolakila, Kolikila, Kilinakila, as it is variously read. Sir Wm. Jones's Pandit stated that he understood it to be a city in the Mahratta country (As. Res. XI. 142); and there has been found a confirmation of his belief in an inscription, where Kilagila, as it is there termed, is called the capital of Nārasimha Deva, king of the Konkan, Journ. R. As. Soc. Vol. IV. p. 282. This inscription dates A.D. 1058. The Purāṇas refer probably to a long antecedent date, when the Greek princes or their Indo-Scythic successors, following the course of the Indus, spread to the upper part of the western coast of the peninsula. The text calls them Yavanas; and the Vāyu and Matsya say they were Yavanas in institutions, manners and policy : धर्मतः कामतोऽर्थतः। The Bhāgavata names five of their princes, Bhūtananda, Bangiri, Śiśunandī, Yaśonandī and Pravīra, who will reign 106 years and they are therefore imperfect representatives of the series in our text. The Matsya has no farther specific enumeration of any dynasty. The Vāyu makes Pravīra the son of Vindhyaśakti; the latter reigning 96 years and the former 60 : the latter is king of Kāñcanapuri, 'the golden city' and is followed by four sons, whose names are not mentioned. Between Vindhyaśakti and Pravīra, however, a dynasty of king is introduced, some of the names of which resemble those of the Kilakila princes of the text. They are, Bhogin the son of Śeṣanāga, Sadācandra, Nakhavat, Dhanandhamita, Vinśaja, Bhūtinanda—at a period before the end of the Śūringas? (the copies have शुंगाना न कुलस्यान्ते)—Madhunandī, his younger brother Nandīyaśas; and in his race there will be three other Rājās, Dauhitra, Śiśuka and Ripukāyān. These are called princes of Vidiṣa or Videsa; the latter meaning perhaps 'foreign' and constitute the Nāga dynasty. Our text calls Vindhyaśakti a Murddhābhīṣikta, a warrior of a mixed race, sprung from a Brāhmaṇa father and Kṣatriya mother.

67. The text of this passage runs thus : तत्पुत्रास्त्रयोदशैब वाहोकाश्चत्रयस्तः। पुष्पमित्रपुष्पमि त्रायास्त्रयोदशेमेकलाश्च। 'Their sons,' तत्पुत्रा the commentator explains by विन्ध्यशक्त्यादीनां यथायथं त्रयोदशपुत्राः। 'thirteen sons of Vindhyaśakti and the rest.' The Bhāgavata has a different statement, identifying the sons of the Vindhya race with the Bāhlīkas and making them thirteen : तेषां त्रयोदशसुता भवितारश्चाहीकाः। 'The Bāhlīkas will be their thirteen sons.' As the commentator : भूतनन्दादीनां यथायथं वाहीकनामानश्चत्रयोदशसुता भविष्यन्ति। 'There will be severally thirteen sons, called Bāhlīkas, of Bhūtananda and the rest.' The following verse is, पुष्पमित्रो राजन्यः दुर्मित्रोऽथ तथैवच। 'Puṣpamitra, a king and then Durmitra : who or what they were does not appear. The commentator says. Puṣpamitra was another king and Durmitra was his son : पुष्पमित्रोनामाऽन्यो राजन्योऽस्य च दुर्मित्रोनाम पुत्रः। Here is evidently careless and inaccurate compilation. The Vāyu, though not quite satisfactory, accords better with our text. 'Pravīra', it says, 'will have four sons : when the Vindhya race is extinct, there will be three Bahlika kings, Supratīka, Nabhirā, who will reign thirty years and Śakyamānābhava (quere this name), king of the Mahiṣas. The Puṣpamitra will then be and the Patumitras also, who will be seven kings of Mekalā. Such is the generation.' तत्प्य (प्रवीरस्य) पुत्रास्तु चत्वारो भविष्यन्ति नराधिपाः। विन्ध्यकानां कलेऽतीते नृपा वै बाहीकासत्र्यः। सुप्रतीको नभीरश्च समा भोक्ष्यन्ति त्रिंशतीः। शक्यमानाभवो राजा महीषीणं महीपतिः। पुष्पमित्रा भविष्यन्ति यदुप्रित्रास्त्रथैवच (or यदुप्रित्रास्त्रयोदश) मेकलायां नृपाः सप्त भविष्यन्तीति सन्ततिः॥ The plural verb with only two Bāhlīka names indicates some omission, unless we correct it to भोक्ष्यते 'they two will reign;' but the following name and title, Śakyamānābhava, king of the Mahiṣas, seems to have little connection with the Bāhlīka. If, in a subsequent part of the citation, the reading 'trayodaśa' be correct, it must then be thirteen Patumitras, but it will be difficult to know what to do with Sapta, 'seven'. If for Saṅtati we might read Saptati, 'seventy,' the sense might be, 'these thirteen kings ruled for seventy-seven years.'

However this may be, it seems correct to separate the thirteen sons or families of the Vindhya princess most from the three Bāhlīkas and them from the Puspamitras and Paṭumitras, who governed Mekalā, a country on the Narbada (see Bk. II. Ch. III. n. 18). What the Bāhlīkas or princes of Balkh, had to do in this part of India is doubtful. The Durmitra of the Bhāgavata has been conjectured by Tod (Trans. R. As. Soc. I. 325) to be intended for the Bactrian prince Demetrius : but it is not clear that even the Bhāgavata considers this prince as one of the Bāhlīkas and the name occurs nowhere else.

68. For the situation of Kośalā, see Bk. II. Ch. III. n. 79. The three copies of the Vāyu read Komalā and call the kings, the Meghas, more strong than sapient : कोमलायां तु राजानो भविष्यन्ति महाबालः मेघा इति समाख्याता बुद्धिमत्तो न वै च तु। The Bhāgavata agrees with our text. The Vāyu says of the Naiṣadhas or kings of Niṣadha, that they were all of the race of Nala; नलरंश प्रसूताः। The Bhāgavata adds two other races, seven Andhras (see note 63) and kings of Vaidūra, with the remark that these were all contemporaries, being, as the commentator observes, petty or provincial rulers : खण्डलमण्डलेषुपूलाः।

69. The Vāyu has Viśvasphāṇi and Viśvasphīṇi : the Bhāgavata, Viśvasphūrtti or in some MSS. Viśvaphūrji. The castes he establishes or places in authority, to the exclusion of the Kṣatriyas, are called in all the copies of our text Kaivarttas, Paṭus, Pulindas and Brāhmaṇas. The Vāyu (three MSS.) has Kaivarttas, Pañcakas, Pulindas and Brāhmaṇas : कैवर्त्तान् पञ्चकाश्वैव युलिन्दान्नाहाणान्तथा। The Bhāgavata has, Pulindas, Yadus and Mādrakas. The Vāyu describes Viśvasphāṇi as a great warrior and apparently as a eunuch : विश्वस्फाणि महासत्त्वे युद्धे विष्णुसमो बली। विश्वस्फाणिर्नरपति बलीवा विकृतिरूप्यते॥ He worshipped the gods and manes and dying on the banks of the Ganges went to the heaven of Indra : जाहवीतीरमासाद्य शरीर त्यक्ष्यते बली संन्यस्य शरीरं तं शक्रलोकं गमिष्यति।

70. Such appears to be the purport of our text : नव नागाः पंचावत्यां कान्तिपुर्या मथुरायामनु। गंगाप्रयागं मागधागुपाश भोक्ष्यन्ति॥ The nine Nāgas might be thought to mean the same as the descendants of Śeṣanāga, but the Vāyu has another series here, analogous to that of the text : 'The nine Nāka kings will possess the city Campāvatī and the seven Nāgas (?) the pleasant city Mathurā. Princes of the Gupta race will posses all these countries, the banks of the Ganges to Prayāga and Sāketa and Magadha : नव नाकास्तुभौक्ष्यन्ति पुरी चम्पावती नृपाः। मथुरां च पुरीं रस्यां नागा भोक्ष्यन्ति सप्त वै। अनुगांगाप्रयागं च साकेतं मगधांस्तथा। एतान् जनपदान् सर्वान् भौक्ष्यन्ते गुप्तवंशजाः॥ This account is the most explicit and probably most accurate, of all. The Nākas were Rājās of Bhāgalpur; the Nāgas, of Mathurā; and the intermediate countries along the Ganges were governed by the Guptas or Rājās of the Vaiśya caste. The Bhāgavata seems to have taken great liberties with the account, as it makes Viśvasphūrtti king over Anugaṅgā, the course of the Ganges from Haridvāra, according to the commentator, to Prayāga, residing at Padmavatī : वीर्यवान् क्षत्रपुत्सार्थ्यं पद्मवत्यां स वै पुरि। अनुगांगामाप्रयागं गुप्तां भोक्ष्यन्ति मेदिनी॥ omitting the Nāgas altogether and converting 'gupta' into an epithet of 'medini,' the preserved or protected earth. Wilford considers the Nāgas, Nākas and Guptas to be all the same : he says, 'Then came a dynasty of nine kings, called the nine Nācas or Nāgas; these were an obscure tribe, called for that reason Guptavaṇīśas, who ruled in Padmāvati'. That city he calls Patna, but in the Mālati and Madhava Padmāvati lies amongst the Vindhya hills Kāntipuri he makes Kotwal, near Gwalior. The reading of the Vāyu, Campāvatī, however, obviates the necessity of all vague conjecture. According to Wilford there is a powerful tribe still called Nākas between the Yamunā and the Betvā. Of the existence and power of the Guptas, however, we have recently had ample proofs from inscriptions and coins, as in the Candragupta and Samudragupta of the Allatabad column; Journ. As. Soc. Bengal, March and June, 1834; and Kumāragupta, Candragupta, Samudragupta, Śāsigupta, on the Archer coins, found at Kanauj and elsewhere; As. Res. XVII. pl. 1. fig. 5, 7, 13, 19; and Journ. As. Soc. Bengal, Nov. 1835, pl. 38 and 39; and in other numbers of the same Journal : in all which, the character in which the legends are written is of a period prior to the use of the modern Devanāgarī and was current in all probability about the fifth century of our era, as conjectured by Prinsep : see his table of the modifications of the Sanskrit alphabet from 543 B.C. to 1200 A.D. Journ. As. Soc. Bengal, March, 1838.

71. The Vāyu also mentions the descendants of Devarakṣita or Daivarakṣitas as kings of the Kośalas, Tāmralipta and the sea coast; so far conforming with our text as to include the western parts of Bengal, Tamluk, Midnapur and Orissa. One copy reads Andhra, perhaps for Odra, Orissa; and one has Campā for the capital, which is probably an error, although the two other MSS., being still more faulty, do not offer the means of correction.

72. The Vāyu has the same. The countries are parts of Orissa and Berar.

73. The Vāyu has sons of Maṇidhanya for the ruling dynasty, but names the countries those of the Naiṣadhas, Yudakas, Śaiśikas and Kālatoyas. The first name applies to a tract of country near the Vindhya mountains, but the last to a country in the north. The west or south-west, however, is probably intended in this place.

74. The Strī Rājya is usually placed in Bhote. It may perhaps here designate Malabar, where polyandry equally prevails. Mūṣika or the country of thieves, was the pirate coast of the Konkan. The Vāyu reads Bhokṣyaka or Bhokhyaka for Mūṣika : स्त्रीराज्यं भोक्ष्यकांश्चैव भोक्ष्यन्ति कनकाद्वयः। The Bhāgavata omits all these specifications subsequent to the notice of Viśvasphūrtti.

75. From this we might infer that the Viśnu Purāṇa was compiled when the Mohammedans were making their first encroachments on the west. They seem to have invaded and to have settled in Sindh early in the eighth century, although Indian princes continued on the Indus for a subsequent period. Scriptor. Arab. De rebus Indicis. Gildemeister, p.6. They were engaged in hostilities in 698 or 700 with prince of Kabul, in whose name, however disguised by its Mohammedan representations of Ratil, Ratbal or Ratibal, it is not difficult to recognise the genuine Hindu appellation of Ratanpāl or Ratnapāl. Their progress in this direction has not been traced; but at the period of their invasion of Sindh they advanced to Multan and probably established themselves there and at Lahore within a century. Kashmir they did not occupy till a much later date and the Rāja Tarangini takes no notice of any attacks upon it; but the Chinese have recorded an application from the king of Kashmir, Chin-tho-lo-pi-li, evidently the Candrāpiḍa of the Sanskrit, for aid against the Arabs, about A.D. 713. Gildemeister, p. 13. Although, therefore, not actually settled at the Punjab so early as the beginning, they had commenced their incursions and had no doubt made good their footing by the end of the eighth or commencement of the ninth century. This age of the Purāṇa is compatible with reference to the contemporary race of Gupta kings, from the fourth or fifth to the seventh or eighth century; or if we are disposed to go farther back, we may apply the passage to the Greek and Indo-Scythian princes. It seems more likely to be the former period; but in all such passages in this or other Purāṇas there is the risk that verses inspired by the presence of Mohammedan rulers may have been interpolated into the original text. Had the Mohammedans of Hindustan, however, been intended by the latter, the indications would have been more distinct and the localities assigned to them more central. Even the Bhāgavata, the date of which we have good reason for conjecturing to be the middle of the twelfth century and which influenced the form assumed about that time by the worship of Viśnu, cannot be thought or refer to the Mohammedan conquerors of upper India. It is there stated, that 'rulers fallen from their castes or Śūdras, will be the princes of Saurāṣṭra, Avanti, Abhīra, Śūra, Arbuda and Mālava; and barbarians, Śūdras and other outcastes, not enlightened by the Vedas, will possess Kāshmir, Kauntī and the banks of the Candrabhāgā and Indus :' सौराष्ट्रावन्त्यभीराशूरा अर्बुदमालवाः। ब्रात्या द्विजा भविष्यन्ति शूद्रप्रायाः जनाधिपाः। सिंधोस्तरं चन्द्रभागां कौत्तों काप्मीरमण्डलं। भोक्ष्यन्ति शूद्रा ब्रात्याद्या म्लेच्छा अब्रह्यवर्च्चस॥ Now it was not until the fourteenth and fifteenth centuries that the Mohammedans established themselves in Gujarat and Malva and the Bhāgavata was unquestionably well known in various parts of India long before that time. (Account of Hindus Sects. As. Res. Vol. XVI). It cannot therefore allude to Mohammedans. By specifying the princes as seceders from the Vedas, there is no doubt that the barbarians and outcastes intended are so only in a religious sense; and we know from indisputable authorities that the western countries, Gujarat, Abu, Mālavā, were the chief seats, first of the Buddhists and then of the Jainas, from a period commencing perhaps before the Christian era and scarcely terminating with the Mohammedan conquest. Inscriptions from Abu, As. Res. Vol. XVI.

76. The commentator, having no doubt the existing state of things in view, interprets the passage somewhat differently : the original is, तैश्विमिश्रा जनपदास्तच्छीलवर्त्तिनो राजाश्रयशुभिणो म्लेच्छाशार्याश्विपर्ययेण वर्तमानाः प्रजाः क्षपयिष्यन्ति। The comment explains शुभिणाः 'strong' (वलिनः), and adds, 'the Mlecchas will be in the centre and the Āryyas at the end.' म्लेच्छा मध्ये आर्याशान्ते इत्येतद्गोणं वर्तमानाः। meaning, if any thing, that the unbelievers are in the heart of the country and the Hindus on the borders : a description, however, never correct, except as applicable to the governments; and in that case inconsistent with the text, which had previously represented the bordering countries in the hands of outcastes and heretics. All that the text intends, is to represent infidels and foreigners high in power and the Brāhmaṇas depressed. It is not unlikely that the reading is erroneous, notwithstanding the copies concur and that the passage should be here the same as that of the Vāyu; तैश्विमिश्रा जनपदा म्लेच्छाचाराश्वसर्वशः विपर्ययेण वर्तन्ते नाशयिष्यन्ति वै प्रजाः। 'Intermixed with them, the nations, adopting everywhere barbaric institutions, exist in a state of disorder and the subjects shall be destroyed.' The expression Mlechchācārāśca being used instead of Mlechchāscāryāśca. A passage similar to that of the text, noticing the intermixture of Hindus and Barbarians, occurs in a different place (see Bk.II. Ch. III. n. 4) and designates the conditions of India in all ages : at no period has the whole of the population followed Brahmanical Hinduism.

77. That is, there will be no Tīrthas, places held sacred and objects of pilgrimage; no particular spot of earth will have any special sanctity.

78. Gifts will be made from the impulse of ordinary feeling, not in connection with religious rites and as an act of devotion; and ablution will be performed for pleasure or comfort, not religiously with prescribed ceremonies and prayers.

79. The expression Sadveśadhāri (सद्वेषधारि) is explained to mean either one who wears fine clothes or who assumes the exterior garb of sanctity. Either interpretation is equally allowable.

80. The Bhāgavata agrees with the text in these particulars. The chief star of Tisya is in the constellation Cancer.

81. All the copies concur in this reading: यावत्परीक्षितो जन्म याकन्दाभिषेचनं एतद्वर्षसहस्रं तु ज्येऽपंचदशोत्तरं। Three copies of the Vāyu assign to the same interval 1050 years : पंचाशदुत्तरं। and of the

Matsya five copies have the same, पंचाशदुत्तरं। or 1050 years; while one copy has 1500 years; पंचशतोत्तरं। The Bhāgavata has 1115 years; एतद्वर्षसहस्रं तु शतं पंचदशोत्तरं। which the commentator explains, a thousand years and a hundred with fifteen over; वर्षसहस्रं पंचदशोत्तरं शतं च। He notices nevertheless, although he doesn't attempt to account for the discrepancy, that the total period from Parīksit to Nanda was actually, according to the duration of the different intermediate dynasties, as enumerated by all the authorities, fifteen centuries; viz. Magadha kings . . . 1000 years, Pradyota etc . . . 138 years. Śiśunāga. . . 362. Total 1500 years. The shorter period is best proportioned to the number of kings; for reckoning from Sahadeva, who was contemporary with Parīksit and taking the number of the Vāhradrathas from the Matsya, we have thirty-two of them, five of the Pradyota race and ten Śaiśuniāgas or in all forty-seven; which, as the divisor of 1050, gives rather more twenty-two years to a reign. The Vāyu an the Matsya further specify the interval from Nanda to Pulomat, that last of the Āndhra kings, as being 836 years; a total that does not agree exactly with the items previously specified : 9 Nandas. . . 100 years, 10 Mauryas. . . 137, 10 Śūṅgas. . . 112, 4 Kanvas. . . 45. 29 Andhras. . . 460. Total 62 kings, 854 years. In either case the average duration of reign is not improbable, as the highest number gives less than fourteen years to each prince. It is important to remember that the reign of Parīksit is, according to Hindu chronology, coeval with the commencement of the Kali age; and even therefore taking the longest Paurāṇik interval we have but sixteen centuries between Candragupta—or considering him as the same with Sandrocottos, nineteen centuries B.C.—for the beginning of the Kali age. According to the chronology of our text, however, it would be but B.C. 1415; to that of the Vāyu and Matsya, B.C. 1450; and to that of the Bhāgavata, 1515. According to Wilford's computations (As. Res. Vol. IX. Chron. Table, p. 116) the conclusion of the great war took place B.C. 1370; Buchanan conjectures it to have occurred in the thirteenth century B.C. Vyāsa was the putative father of Pāṇḍu and Dhṛtarāṣṭra and consequently was contemporary with the heroes of the great war. Colebrooke infers from astronomical date that arrangement of the Vedas attributed to Vyāsa took place in the fourteenth century B.C. Bentley brings to the date of Yudhiṣṭhīra, the chief of the Pāṇḍavas, to 575 B.C. (Historical View of Hindu Astronomy, p. 67); but the weight of authority is in favour of the thirteenth or fourteenth century B.C. for the war of the Mahābhārata and the reputed commencement of the Kali age.

82. A similar explanation is given in the Bhāgavata, Vāyu and Matsya Purāṇas; and like accounts from astronomical writers are cited by Colebrooke, As. Res. Vol. IX. P. 358. The commentator on the Bhāgavata thus explains the notion : "The two stars (Pulaha and Kratu) must rise or be visible before the rest and whichever asterism is in a line south from the middle of those stars, is that with which the seven stars are united; and so they continue for one hundred years." Wilford has also given a like explanation of the revolution of the R̥ṣis; As. Res. Vol. IX. P. 83. According to Bentley the notion originated in a contrivance of the astronomers to show the quantity of the precession of the equinoxes. "This was by assuming an imaginary line or great circle passing through the poles of the ecliptic and the beginning of the fixed Maghā, which circle was supposed to cut some of the stars in the Great Bear. The seven stars in the Great Bear the circle so assumed was called the line of the R̥ṣis and being fixed to the beginning of the lunar asterism Maghā, the precession would be solved by stating the degree etc., of any moveable lunar mansion cut by that fixed line or circle as an index. Historical View of Hindu Astronomy, p.65.

83. The Bhāgavata has the same; and this agrees with the period assigned for the interval between Parīkṣit and Nanda of 1050 years; as, including Maghā, we have ten asterisms to Purvāśādha or 1000 years. The Vāyu and Matsya are so very inaccurate in all the copies consulted, that it is not safe to affirm what they mean to describe apparently they state that at the end of the Andhra dynasty the R̥ṣis will be in Kṛttikā, which furnishes other ten asterisms; the whole being nearly in accordance with the chronology of the text, as the total interval from Parīkṣit to the last of the Andhras is $1050+836=1886$ and the entire century of each asterism at the beginning and end of the series need not be taken into account. The copies of the Matsya read, सतर्ष्यस्तथा तेस्यः प्रदोषाणि समः 'The seven R̥ṣis are on a line with the brilliant Agni;' that is, with Kṛttikā, of which Agni is the presiding deity. The Vāyu intends in all probability the same phrase, but the three copies have, प्रतीपे राज्ञः a very unintelligible clause. Again, it seems as if they intended to designate the end of the Andhra race as the period of a complete revolution or 2700 years; for the Vāyu has, सतर्विंशैः शतै भविष्या अन्ध्राणतेऽन्यथा पुनः। 'The races at the end of the Andhras will be after 2700 years:' the Matsya has, सतर्विंशति भाव्येन अन्ध्राणतेऽन्यकात् (?) पुनः। and at the close of the passage, after specifying as usual that 'the seven R̥ṣis were in Maghā in the time of Parīkṣit.' सतर्ष्यो मध्यायुक्तः कालै परीक्षितः समे। the Vāyu adds, अन्ध्रान्ते स चतुर्विंशे भविष्यन्ति स ते मता। a passage which, though repeated in the MSS., is obviously most inaccurate; although it might perhaps be understood to intimate that the R̥ṣis will be in the twenty-fourth asterism after the Andhra race : but that would give only 1400 years from Parīkṣit to Puloma; whilst if the twenty-fourth from Maghā was intended, it would give 2400 years : both periods being incompatible with previous specifications. The Matsya has a different reading of the second line, but one not much more satisfactory; ब्राह्मणस्तुचतुर्विंशे भविष्यन्ति शतंसमाः। 'A hundred years of Brahmā will be in the twenty-fourth (asterism?).' In neither of these authorities, however, is it proposed by the last-cited passages to illustrate the chronology of princes or dynasties: the specification of the period, whatever it may be, is that of the era at which the evil influence of the Kali age is to become most active and irresistible.

84. The Bhāgavata has the same. Devāpi, as the commentator observes, being the restorer of the lunar and Maru of the solar race.

85. To be the cause of Sarikalpa. 'conviction,' 'belief' and Vikalpa, 'doubt,' 'disbelief.' The Bhāgavata indulges in a similar strain and often in the same words. The whole recalls the words of the Roman satirist; I, demens et saevas curre per Alpes, Ut pueris placeas, et declamatio fias.

Maitreya said¹—You have related to me a full account of all the different dynasties of kings and of their successive transactions. I wish now to hear a more particular description, holy Ṛṣi, of the portion of Viśnu² that came down upon earth and was born in the family of Yadu. Tell me also what actions he performed in his descent, as a part of a part of the supreme, upon the earth.³

Vasudeva formerly married the daughter of Devaka, the illustrious Devakī, a maiden of celestial beauty. After their nuptials, Kāṁsa, the increaser of the race of Bhoja, drove their car as their charioteer. As they were going along, a voice in the sky, sounding aloud and deep as thunder, addressed Kāṁsa and said, “Fool that you are, the eighth child of the damsel whom you are driving in the car shall take away your life⁴!” On hearing this, Kāṁsa drew his sword and was about to put Devakī to death; but Vasudeva interposed, saying, “Kill not Devakī, great warrior; spare her life and I will deliver to you every child that she may bring forth.” Appeased by which promise and relying on the character of Vasudeva, Kāṁsa desisted from the attempt.

“Agni,” said Earth, “is the progenitor of gold; Sūrya, of rays of light :⁵ the parent and guide of me and of all spheres is the supreme Nārāyaṇa, who is Brahmā, the lord of the lord of patriarchs; the eldest of the eldest born; one with minutes and hours; one with time; having form, though indiscrete. This assemblage of yourselves, O gods, is but a part of him. The sun, the winds the saints, the Rudras, the Vasus, the Aśvins, fire, the patriarch creators of the universe, of whom Atri is the first, all are but forms of the mighty and inscrutable Viṣṇu. The Yakṣas, Rāksasas, Daityas, spirits of evil, serpents and children of Danu, the singers and nymphs of heaven, are forms of the great spirit, Viṣṇu. The heavens painted with planets, constellations and stars; fire, water, wind and myself and every perceptible thing; the whole universe itself—consists of Viṣṇu. The multifarious forms of that manifold being encounter and succeed one another, night and day, like the waves of the sea. At this present season many demons, of whom Kālanemi is the chief, have over-run and continually harass, the region of mortals. The great Asura Kālanemi,⁶ that was killed by the powerful Viṣṇu, has revived in Karīsa, the son of Ugrasena and many other mighty demons, more than I can enumerate, as Ariṣṭa, Dhenuka, Keśin, Pralamba, Naraka, Sunda and the fierce Bāṇa, the son of Bali,⁷ are born in the palaces of kings. Countless hosts of proud and powerful spirits, chiefs of the demon race, assuming celestial forms, now walk the earth; and, unable to support myself beneath the incumbent load, I come to you for succour. Illustrious deities, do you so act that I may be relieved from my burden, lest helpless I sink into the nethermost abyss.”

“Celestials,” said Brahmā, “all that Earth has said is undoubtedly true. I, Mahādeva and you all, are but Nārāyaṇa; but the impersonations of his power are forever mutually fluctuating and excess or diminution is indicated by the predominance of the strong and the depression of the weak. Come therefore, let us repair to the northern coast of the milky sea and having glorified Hari, report to him what we have heard. He, who is the spirit of all and of whom the universe consists, constantly, for the sake of Earth, descends in a small portion of his essence to establish righteousness below.”

"O you," said Brahmā, "who are distinct from holy writ⁸; whose double nature is twofold wisdom⁹, superior and inferior and who are the essential end of both; who, alike devoid and possessed of form, are the twofold Brahma¹⁰; smallest of the least and largest of the large; all and knowing all things; that spirit which is language; that spirit which is supreme; that which is Brahma and of which Brahma is composed! You are the Rk, the Yajuṣ, the Sāman and the Atharvan Vedas. You are accentuation, ritual, signification, metre and astronomy; history, tradition, grammar, theology, logic and law : you who are inscrutable. You are the doctrine that investigates the distinctions between soul and life and body and matter endowed with qualities¹¹; and that doctrine is nothing else but your nature inherent in and presiding over it¹². You are imperceptible, indescribable, inconceivable; without name or colour or hands or feet; pure, eternal and infinite. You hear without ears and see without eyes. You are one and multiform. You move without feet; you seize without hands. You know all, but are not by all to be known¹³. He who beholds you as the most subtle of atoms, not substantially existent, puts an end to ignorance; and final emancipation is the reward of that wise man whose understanding cherishes nothing other than you in the form of supreme delight¹⁴. You are the common centre of all¹⁵, the protector of the world and all beings exist in you : all that has been or will be, you are. You are the atom of atoms; you are spirit; you only are distinct from primeval nature¹⁶. You, as the lord of fire in four manifestations¹⁷, give light and fertility to Earth. You are the eye of all and wearer of many shapes and unobstructedly traverses the three regions of the universe. As fire, though one, is variously kindled and, though unchangeable in its essence, is modified in many ways, so you, lord, who are one omnipresent form, take upon you all modifications that exist. You are one supreme; you are that supreme and eternal state which the wise behold with the eye of knowledge. There is nothing else but you. O lord; nothing; else has been or will be. You are both discrete and indiscreet, universal and individual, omniscient, all seeing, omnipotent, possessed of all wisdom and strength and power. You are liable neither to diminution nor increase; you are independence and without beginning; you are the subjugator of all. You are unaffected by weariness, sloth, fear, anger or desire. You are free from soil, supreme, merciful,¹⁸ uniform, undecaying, lord over all, the stay of all, the fountain of light, imperishable. To you, uninvested by material envelopes,¹⁹ unexposed to sensible imaginings, aggregate of elemental substance,²⁰ spirit supreme, be adoration. You assume a shape, O pervader of the universe, not as the consequence of virtue or vice, nor from any mixture of the two, but for the sole object of maintaining piety in the world.²¹"

The Muni Nārada informed Karmśa that the supporter of the earth, Viśnu, would be the eighth child of Devakī; and his wrath being excited by this report, he placed both Vasudeva and Devakī in confinement. Agreeably to his promise, the former delivered to Kamsa each infant as soon as it was born. It is said that these, to the number of six, were the children of the demon Hiranyaśaśipu, who were introduced into the womb of Devakī, at the command of Viśnu, during the hours of Devakī's repose, by the goddess Yoganidrā,²⁴ the great illusory energy of Viśnu, by whom, as utter ignorance, the whole world is beguiled.

Propitiated with offerings of wine and flesh and various viands, you shall bestow upon mankind all their prayers. Through my favour all men shall ever have faith in you. Assured of this, go, goddess and execute my commands."

NOTES

1. The whole of this book is dedicated to the biography of Kṛṣṇa. Many of the Purāṇas omit this subject altogether or only allude to it occasionally. In others it is equally prominent. The Brahma Purāṇa gives the story exactly in the same words as our text: which has the best right to them may be questioned; but, as it is usually met with, the Brahma Purāṇa is a very heterogeneous compilation. The Hari Variṣṭha has a narrative more detailed than that of the text, with additions and embellishments of its own. The Brahma Vaivartta throughout celebrates the acts of Kṛṣṇa; and one portion of it, the Kṛṣṇa Janma Khaṇḍa, especially describes his boyhood and youth. The incidents are the same in general as those in the text, but they are lost amidst interminable descriptions of Kṛṣṇa's sports with the Gopīs and with his mistress Rādhā, a person not noticed elsewhere; the whole is in a style indicative of a modern origin. The Agni Purāṇa and Padma Purāṇa (Uttara Khaṇḍa) have accounts of Kṛṣṇa, but they are mere summaries, compiled evidently from other works. The principal authority for the adventures of Kṛṣṇa is the Bhāgavata, the tenth book of which is exclusively devoted to him. It is this work which has, no doubt, mainly extended the worship of Kṛṣṇa, as its popularity is evinced by its having been translated into all the spoken languages of India professing to have a literature. The Prem-sagar, its Hindi version, is well known; but there are also translations in Mahratta, Telugu, Tamil. It does not seem likely, however, that the Viṣṇu Purāṇa has copied the Bhāgavata; for although its greater conciseness may sometimes look like abridgement, yet the descriptions are generally of a more simple and antiquated character. Here, as usual, the Mahābhārata is no doubt the earliest extant authority; but it is not the earliest, for whilst it omits to narrate most of his personal adventures unconnected with his alliance with the Pāṇḍavas, it often alludes to them and names repeatedly his capital, his wives and his progeny. It also devotes a section, the Mauśala Parva, to the destruction of the Yādavas. The story of Kṛṣṇa the prince and hero must have been complete when the Mahābhārata was compiled. It is doubtful, however, if Kṛṣṇa the boy and his adventures at Vṛndāvan, were not subsequent inventions. There are no allusions to them in the poem, of an unsuspicious nature. The only ones that I have met with are contained in a speech by Śiśupāla. Sabhā Parva, vol. I. p. 360, in which he reviles Kṛṣṇa; but they may easily have been interpolated. There may be others scattered through the poem, but I have not observed them.

2. The notices of Kṛṣṇa's origin and character in various passages of the Mahābhārata are by no means consistent and indicate different dates at least. In an address to him by Arjuna, Vana Parva, vol. I. p. 426, he is said to have passed thousands of years in various holy places, engaged in arduous penances. He is frequently identified with the Ṛṣi Nārāyaṇa or he and Arjuna are said to be Nara and Nārāyaṇa : त्वं च चाहं च कौन्तेय ननरायणौ स्मृतौ। In the Dānā-dharma he is represented as a worshipper of Śiva and propitiating him and his wife Umā and receiving as boons from them wives and children. As a warrior and prince he is always on the scene; but he is repeatedly called an Arīṣa or portion of Viṣṇu; whilst in a great number of places he is identified with Viṣṇu or Nārāyaṇa and is consequently 'all things.' This latter is his character, of course, amongst the Vaiṣṇavas, agreeably to the text of the Bhāgavata : कृष्णास्तु भगवान् स्वयं 'Kṛṣṇa is the lord (Viṣṇu) himself.'

3. This is a still farther diminution of Kṛṣṇa's dignity; he is not even a part, but 'a part of a part,' Aṁśāṁśāvatāra (अंशांशंवतारः) but this, the commentator maintains, is to be understood only of his form or condition as man, not of his power, as it suffered no diminution, either in its primary or secondary state, as light by suffusion suffers no decrease; and a verse of the Veda is cited to this effect : 'Though that which is full be taken from what is full, yet the remainder is undiminished ; पूर्णस्यपूर्णमादाय पूर्णमेवावशिष्यते।' Kṛṣṇa is nevertheless the very supreme Brahma, though it be a mystery how the supreme should assume the form of a man; परं ब्रह्म न नाश्नुति परं गूढं परं ब्रह्म मनुष्यलिङ्गं कृष्णास्तु भगवानस्वयम्। So the Bhāgavata in one passage predicts that the Parapuruṣa, Puruṣottama or Viśṇu, will be born visibly in the dwelling of Vasudeva; वसुदेवाणैः साक्षाद्वावान् पुरुषः परः जनिष्यते।

4. The Bhāgavata tells the circumstance as in the text. The Hari Variṣṭha makes Nārada apprise Karīṣṇa of his danger. Nārada's interposition is not mentioned until afterwards by our authority. Devakī is the cousin of Karīṣṇa : see Bk. iv. Ch. xv.

5. Agni or fire, refines gold, burns away the dross, according to the commentator. The sun is the lord of the rays of light; or, as the cause of rain and vegetation, the lord of cattle. The phrase is, गत्वा सूर्यः परो गुरुः।

6. According to the Vāyu, Kālanemi or Kayabhadra was a son of Virocana, the grandson of Hiranyaakaśipu : his death is described in the Hari Variṣṭha.

7. These appear subsequently in the narration and are destroyed by Kṛṣṇa.

8. Anāmnāya (अनाम्नाय); not the immediate object of the Vedas, which is devotion, not abstraction; ritual or worship, not knowledge.

9. The two kinds of knowledge (द्वेविद्ये) are termed Parā (परा) 'supreme,' and Aparā (अपरा), 'other' or 'subordinate', the first is knowledge of Para Brahma, of spirit abstractedly considered, perfect knowledge derived from abstraction; the second is knowledge of Śabda Brahma, of spirit as described and taught in the Vedas or their supplementary branches. The identity of the supreme with both descriptions of holy knowledge pervades the whole of the address.

10. Para Brahma and Śabda Brahma : see the preceding note.

11. The doctrine alluded to may be either intended generally or in the several instances, the discussion of the spiritual soul and living soul, of body subtle and sensible and of matter endowed with qualities, reference may be purposed to the Vedānta, Yoga and Sāṃkhya systems.

12. That is, as the Śabda Brahma, the supreme is identical with philosophical doctrines, being the object, the instigator and the result.

13. This is taken from the Vedas, the original of which is quoted and translated by Jones : see his Works. XIII. 368. The passage is thus cited by the commentator on our text : अपाणिपादी जवतो गृहीता पश्यत्यचक्षुः स शृणोत्यकर्णः स वेति वेद्य न च तस्य वेत्ता तमाहुरयं पुरुषं महान्। 'Without hand or foot he runs, he grasps; without eyes he sees; and without ears he hears : he know all that may be known and no one know him. Him they call the first great spirit.'

14. Varenya rūpa, explained by Paramānanda mūrtti; he whose form or impersonation is Supreme felicity.

15. Literally 'navel of all ;' त्वं विश्वाप्तिः। The passage is also read, त्वं विश्वमादिः। 'Though are all and the first,' the cause or creator.

16. Or the passage is understood, 'Though are one subsequently to Prākṛti;' त्वमेकः प्रकृतेः परस्तात्। that is, you are Brahmā, the active will of the supreme, creating forms from rudimental matter.

17. As the three fires enjoined by the Vedas and the fire metaphorically of devotion; or lightnings, solar heat, fire generated artificially and the fire of digestion or animal fire; or Viśṇu in that character bestows beauty, vigour, power and wealth.

18. Prīta : one copy has Śānta, 'calm,' 'undisturbed.'

19. Beyond the separate layers or envelopes of elementary substances (see p. 18); or, according to the Vedānta notions, uninvested by those grosser sheaths or coverings, derived from food and the like, by which subtle body is enclosed.

20. Mahāvibhūti saṁsthāna (महाविभूतिसंस्थान). Vibhūti is explained by Prāpāñca, sensible material or elementary substance, constituting body.

21. The passage is somewhat obscurely expressed and is differently interpreted; it is, नाकारणात्कारणादा कारणाकारणात्रच। 'Not from no cause, nor from cause, nor from "cause and no cause.' The term 'no cause' may, the commentator says designate fixed prescribed duties, the Nityakarma; 'cause' may signify occasional sacrifices, the Kāmya-karma : neither of these can form any necessity for Viṣṇu's descent, as they might of a mere mortal's being born on the earth : or Kāraṇa is explained to mean 'obtaining pleasure,' from Ka (क) and Ārana (आरण), 'obtaining: ' obtaining happiness or the cause of it, piety, virtue (धर्मः); and with the negative, Akāraṇa (अकारण), the reverse, pain, the consequence of wickedness (अधर्मः). The purport is clear enough; is merely meant to state that Viṣṇu is not subject to the necessity which is the cause of human birth.

22. The term Pradhāna, which is repeated in this passage, is explained in the second place to mean Pumān, 'soul' or 'spirit': प्रधानसुखीद्विगवत् प्रधानमूलापरात्मन्।

23. The same account of the origin of Kṛṣṇa is given in the Mahābhārata, Ādi Parva vol. I. p. 266. The white hair is impersonated as Balarāma; the black, as Kṛṣṇa. The commentator on our text maintains that this is not to be literally understood: 'Viṣṇu did not intend that the two hairs should become incarnate, but he meant to signify, that, should he send them, they would be more than sufficient to destroy Karīsa and his demons : or the birth of Rāma and Kṛṣṇa was a double illusion, typified by the two hairs.' This seems to be a refinement upon an older and somewhat undignified account of the origin of Kṛṣṇa and his brother. The commentator on the Mahābhārata... argues that they are to be understood merely as the media by which Devakī and Rohinī conceived.

24. Yoganidrā (योगनिद्रा) is the sleep of devotion or abstraction, the active principle of illusion, personified and also termed Māyā and Mahāmāyā, also Avidyā or ignorance. In the Durgā Māhātmya of the Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa she appears as Devī or Durgā, the Śakti or bride of Śiva; but in our text as Vaiṣṇavī or the Śakti of Viṣṇu.

25. Allusion is here made to the exploits of Durgā, as celebrated especially in the Durgā Māhātmya : and it must be posterior to the date of that or some similar composition. The passage may be an interpolation, as the Mārkaṇḍeya Purāṇa in general has the appearance of being a more recent compilation than the Viṣṇu.

26. This refers to the Piṭha sthānas, 'fifty-one places', where, according to the Taittras, the limbs of Śatī fell, when scattered by her husband Śiva, as he bore her dead body about and tore it to pieces, after she had put an end to her existence at Dakṣa's sacrifice. This part of the legend seems to be an addition to the original fable made by the Taitras, as it is not in the Purāṇas (see the story of Dakṣa's sacrifice). It bears some analogy to the Egyptian fable of Isis and Osiris. At the Piṭha sthānas, however, of Jvālāmukhī, Vindhya-vāsinī, Kālighāṭ and others, temples are erected to the different forms of Devī or Śatī, not to the phallic emblem of Mahādeva, which, if present, is there as an accessory and embellishment, not as a principal and the chief object of worship is a figure of the goddess; a circumstance in which there is an essential difference between the temples of Durgā and shrines of Osiris.

The nurse of the universe, Jagaddhātri, thus enjoined by the god of gods, conveyed the six several embryos into the womb of Devakī¹ and transferred the seventh after a season to that of Rohinī; after which, Hari, for the benefit of the three regions, became incarnate as the conception of the former princess and Yoganidrā as that of Yaśodā, exactly as the supreme Viśṇu had commanded. When the portion of Viśṇu had become incorporate upon earth, the planetary bodies moved in brilliant order in the heavens and the seasons were regular and genial. No person could bear to gaze upon Devakī, from the light that invested her; and those who contemplated her radiance felt their minds disturbed. The gods, invisible to mortals, celebrated her praises continually from the time that Viśṇu was contained in her person.

You are Svāhā; you are Svadhā; you are wisdom, ambrosia, light and heaven. You have descended upon earth for the preservation of the world. Have compassion upon us, O goddess and do good unto the world. Be proud to bear that deity by whom the universe is upheld.'

NOTES

1. It is mentioned in the preceding chapter that they were all put to death, in which the Hari Varmśa concurs. The Bhāgavata makes Karhṣa spare them and restore them to their parents, as he had nothing to apprehend from their existence.

Thus eulogised by the gods, Devakī bore in her womb the lotus-eyed deity, the protector of the world. The sun of Acyuta rose in the dawn of Devaki to cause the lotus petal of the universe to expand. On the day of his birth the quarters of the horizon were irradiate with joy, as it moonlight was diffused over the whole earth. The virtuous experienced new delight, the strong winds were hushed and the rivers gilded tranquilly, when Janārddana was about to be born. The seas with their own melodious murmurings made the music, while the spirits and the nymphs of heaven danced and sang : the gods, walking the sky, showered down flowers upon the earth and the holy fires glowed with a mild and gentle flame. At midnight, when the supporter of all was about to be born, the clouds-emitted low pleasing sounds and poured down rain of flowers.

As soon as Ānakadundubhi beheld the child, of the complexion of the lotus leaves, having four arms and the mystic mark Śrivatsa on his breast, he addressed him in terms of love and reverence and represented the fears he entertained of Kāmsa.

So saying, he was silent : and Vasudeva, taking the baby went out that same night; for the guards were all charmed by Yoganidrā, as were the warders at the gates of Mathurā and they obstructed not the passage of Ānakadundubhi. To protect the infant from the heavy rain that fell from the clouds of night, Śeṣa, the many-headed serpent, followed Vasudeva and spread his hoods above their heads; and when the prince, with the child in his arms, crossed the Yamunā river, deep as it was and dangerous with numerous whirlpools the waters were stilled and rose not above his knce. On the bank he saw Nanda and the rest, who had come thither to bring tribute due to Kāṁsa; but they beheld him not.¹ At the same time Yaśodā was also under the influence of Yoganidrā, whom she had brought forth as her daughter and whom the prudent Vasudeva took up, placing his son in her place by the side of the mother : he then quickly returned home. When Yaśodā awoke, she found that she had been delivered of a boy, as black as the dark leaves of the lotus and she was greatly rejoiced.

Vasudeva, bearing off the female infant of Yaśodā , reached his mansion unobserved and entered and placed the child in the bed of Devakī : he then remained as usual. The guards were awakened by the cry of the new-born baby and, starting up, they sent word to Karīṣa that Devakī had borne a child. Karīṣa immediately repaired to the residence of Vasudeva, where he seized upon the infant. In vain Devakī convulsively entreated him to relinquish the child : he threw it ruthlessly against a stone; but it rose into the sky and expanded into a gigantic figure, having eight arms, each wielding some formidable weapon. This terrific being laughed aloud and said to Karīṣa, “What avails it you, Karīṣa, to have hurled me to the ground? He is born who shall kill you, the mighty one amongst the gods, who was formerly your destroyer. Now quickly secure him and provide for your own welfare.” Thus having spoken, the goddess, decorated with heavenly perfumes and garlands and hymned by the spirits of the air, vanished from before the eyes of Bhoja rājā.²

1. The Bhāgavata more consistently makes Vasudeva find Nanda and the rest fast asleep in their houses and subsequently describes their bringing tribute or tax (kara) to Karīṣa.

हे प्रलम्ब! महाबाहो! केशिन्! धेनुक! पूतने!

The vile and contemptible denizens of heaven are assiduously plotting against my life, for they dread my prowess : but, heroes, I hold them of no account. What can the impotent Indra or the ascetic Hara, perform? or what can Hari accomplish, except the murder of his foes by fraud? What have we to fear from the Ādityas, the Vasus, the Agnis or any others of the immortals, who have all been vanquished by my resistless arms? Have I not seen the king of the gods, when he had ventured into the conflict, quickly retreat from the field, receiving my shafts upon his back, not bravely upon his breast ? When in resentment he withheld the fertilising showers from my kingdom, did not my arrows compel the clouds to part with their waters, as much as were required? Are not all the monarchs of the earth in terror of my prowess and subject to my orders, save only Jarāsandha my sire?¹ Now, chiefs of the Daitya race, it is my determination to inflict still deeper degradation upon these evil-minded and unprincipled gods. Let therefore every man who is notorious for liberality (in gifts to gods and Brāhmaṇas), every man who is remarkable for his celebration of sacrifices, be put to death, that thus the gods shall be deprived of the means by which they subsist. The goddess who has been born as the infant child of Devakī has announced to me that he is again alive who in a former being was my death. Let therefore active search be made for whatever young children there may be upon earth and let every boy in whom there are signs of unusual vigour be slain without remorse."

When Vasudeva was set at liberty, he went to the wagon of Nanda and found Nanda there rejoicing that a son was born to him.¹ Vasudeva spoke to him kindly and congratulated him on having a son in his old age. “The yearly tribute,” he added, “has been paid to the king and men of property should not tarry near the court, when the business that brought them there has been transacted. Why do you delay, now that your affairs are settled? The inhabitants of Vraja awoke in alarm at the cries of the fiend, ran to the spot and beheld Pūtanā lying on the earth and Kṛṣṇa in her arms. Yaśodā snatching up Kṛṣṇa, waved over him a cow-tail brush to guard him from harm, whilst Nanda placed dried cow-dung powdered upon his head; he gave him also an amulet,³ saying at the same time,

May Govinda guard your head; Keśava your neck; Viṣṇu your belly; Janārddana your legs and feet; the eternal and irresistible Nārāyaṇa your face, your arms, your mind and faculties of sense. May all ghosts, goblins and spirits malignant and unfriendly, ever fly you, appalled by the bow, the discus, mace and sword of Viśṇu and the echo of his shell. May Vaikuṇṭha guard you in the cardinal points; and in the intermediate ones, Madhusūdana. May Rṣikeśa defend you in the sky and Mahidhara upon earth.' Having pronounced this prayer to avert all evil, Nanda put the child to sleep in his bed underneath the waggon. Beholding the vase carcass of Pūtanā, the cowherds were filled with astonishment and terror.

NOTES

1. It is literally 'went to the cart' or 'waggon ;' नन्दस्य शकटं गतः। as if Nanda and his family dwelt in such a vehicle, as the Scythians are said to have done. The commentator explains Śakaṭa (शकट) the place of loosing or unharnessing the waggon; शकटावपोचनस्थानः। In the Bhāgavata, Vasudeva does not quit Mathurā, but goes to the halting ground of Nanda, who has come to that city to pay his taxes : ययौ तदवमोचनं। explained by the comment, तस्य वसतिस्थानः।

2. In the Hari Vaiśiṣṭa this female fiend is described as coming in the shape of a bird.

3. The Rakṣā, the preserver or preservative against charms, is a piece of thread or silk or some more costly material, bound round the wrist or arm, with an appropriate prayer such as that in the text. Besides its application to children, to avert the effects of evil eyes or to protect them against Dains or witches, there is one day in the year, the Rākhī Pūrṇimā or full moon in the month of Śravaṇa (July-August), when it is bound upon the wrists of adults by friendly or kindred Brāhmaṇas, with a short prayer or benediction. The Rākhī is also sent sometimes by persons of distinction and especially by females, to members of a different family or even race and nation, to intimate a sort of brotherly or sisterly adoption. On one occasion, whilst Madhusūdana was asleep underneath the waggon, he cried for the breast and kicking up his feet he overturned the vehicle and all the pots and pans were upset and broken. The cowherds and their wives, hearing the noise, came exclaiming, “Ah ! ah !” and there they found the child sleeping on his back. “Who could have upset the waggon ?” said the cowherds. “This child,” replied some boys, who witnessed the circumstance; “we saw him,” said they, “crying and kicking the waggon with his feet and so it was overturned: no one else had any thing to do with it.” The cowherds were exceedingly astonished at this account; and Nanda, not knowing what to think, took up the boy; whilst Yaśodā offered worship to the broken pieces of pots and to the waggon, with curds, flowers, fruit and unbruised grain.

The initiatory rites requisite for the two boys were performed by Garga, who was sent to Gokula by Vasudeva for that purpose : he celebrated them without the knowledge of the cowherds;¹ and the wise sage, eminent amongst the wise, named the elder of them Rāma and the other Kṛṣṇa. In a short time they began to crawl about the ground, supporting themselves on their hands and knees and creeping everywhere, often amidst ashes and filth. Neither Rohinī nor Yaśodā was able to prevent them from getting into the cowpens or amongst the calves, where they amused themselves by pulling their tails.

As they disregarded the prohibitions of Yaśodā and rambled about together constantly, she became angry and taking up a stick, followed them and threatened the dark-complexioned Kṛṣṇa with a whipping. Fastening a cord round his waist, she tied him to the wooden mortar,² and being in a great passion, she said to him,

As soon as she had departed, the lotus-eyed Kṛṣṇa, endeavouring to extricate himself, pulled the mortar after him to the space between two Arjuna trees that grew near together : having dragged the mortar between these trees, it became wedged aviary there and as Kṛṣṇa pulled it through, it pulled down the trunks of the trees.

मन्त्रयामासुरुद्विना महोत्पातातिभीरवः॥ २२॥

Hearing the crackling noise, the people of Vraja came to see what was the matter and there they beheld the two large trees, with shattered stems and broken branches, prostrate on the ground, with the child fixed between them, with a rope round his belly, laughing and showing his white little teeth, just budded. It is hence that Kṛṣṇa is called Dāmodara, from the binding of the rope (dāma) round his belly (udara).³ The elders of the cowherds, with Nanda at their head, looked upon these circumstances with alarm, considering them as of evil omen.

"We cannot remain in this place," said they; "let us go to some other part of the forest; for here many evil signs threaten us with destruction; the death of Pūtanā, the upsetting of the waggon and the fall of the trees without their being blown down by the wind. Let us depart hence without delay and go to Vrindavan, where terrestrial prodigies may no more disturb us."

Having thus resolved, the inhabitants of Vraja communicated their intention to their families and desired them to move without delay. Accordingly they set off with their waggons and their cattle, driving before them their bulls and cows and calves; the fragments of their household stores they threw away and in an instant Vraja was over-spread with flights of crows. Vrindavan was chosen by Kṛṣṇa, whom acts do not affect, for the sake of providing for the nourishment of the kine; for there in the hottest season the new grass springs up as verdantly as in the rains. Having repaired, then, from Vraja to Vrindavan, the inhabitants of the former drew up their wagons in the form of a crescent.⁴

As the two boys, Rāma and Dāmodara, grew up, they were ever together in the same place and engaged in the same boyish sports. They made themselves crests of the peacocks' plumes and garlands of forest flowers and musical instruments of leaves and reeds or played upon the pipes used by the cowherds; their hair was trimmed like the wings of the crow," and they resembled two young princes, portions of the deity of war : they were robust and they roamed about, always laughing and playing, sometimes with each other, sometimes with other boys; driving along with the young cowherds the calves to pasture. Thus the two guardians of the world were keepers of cattle, until they had attained seven years of age, in the cow-pens of Vrindavana.

Then came on the season of the rains, when the atmosphere laboured with accumulated clouds and the quarters of the horizon were blended into one by the driving showers. The waters of the rivers rose and overflowed their banks and spread beyond all bounds, like the minds of the weak and wicked transported beyond restraint by sudden prosperity. The pure radiance of the moon was obscured by heavy vapours, as the lessons of holy writ are darkened by the arrogant scoffs of fools (and unbelievers). The bow of Indra held its place in the heavens all unstrung, like a worthless man elevated by an injudicious prince to honour. The white line of storks appeared upon the back of the cloud, in such contrast as the bright conduct of a man of respectability opposes to the behaviour of a scoundrel. The ever-fitful lightning, in its new alliance with the sky, was like the friendship of a profligate for a man of worth. Overgrown by the spreading grain, the paths were indistinctly traced, like the speech of the ignorant, that conveys no positive meaning.

At this time Kṛṣṇa and Rāma, accompanied by the cow-boys, traversed the forests, that echoed with the hum of bees and the peacock's cry. Sometimes they sang in chorus or danced together; sometimes they sought shelter from the cold beneath the trees; sometimes they decorated themselves with flowery garlands, sometimes with peacocks' feathers; sometimes they stained themselves of various hues with the minerals of the mountain; sometimes weary they reposed on beds of leaves and sometimes they excited their juvenile associates to sing and sometimes they mimicked the cry of the peacock with their pipes.

In this manner participating in various feelings and emotions and affectionately attached to each other, they wandered, sporting and happy, through the wood. At evening tide came Kṛṣṇa and Balarāma, like two cow-boys, along with the cows and the cowherds. At evening tide the two immortals, having come to the cow-pens, joined heartily in whatever sports amused the sons of the herdsmen.

1. The Bhāgavata describes Garga's interview with Nanda and the inducements of the latter to keep the former's celebration of the Saṅkāras or initiatory rites of the two boys, secret from the Gopas. Garga there describes himself as the Purohita or family priest, of the Yādavas.

2. The Ulūkhala or mortar is a large wooden bowl on a solid stand of timber, both cut out of one piece; the pestle is also of wood; and they are used chiefly for bruising or threshing unwinnowed corn and separating the chaff from the grain. As important agents in household economy, they are regarded as sacred, and even hymned in the Vedas.

3. Our text, and that of the Hari Varmā, take no notice of the legend of Nalakubera and Manigrīva, sons of Kubera, who, according to the Bhāgavata, had been metamorphosed, through a curse of Nārada, into these two trees and for whose liberation this feat of Kṛṣṇa was intended.

4. The Hari Varīṣṭa, not satisfied with the prodigies which had alarmed the cowherds, adds another, not found, it is believed, anywhere else. The emigration, according to that work, originates, not with the Gopas, but the two boys, who wish to go to Vrindavan and in order to compel the removal, Kṛṣṇa converts the hairs of his body into hundreds of wolves, who so harass and alarm the inhabitants of Vraja, that they determine to abandon their homes.

5. The Kāka-pakṣa, or crow's wing, implies the hair left on each side of the head, the top being shaved.

अधिरुहोत्पतिष्यामि हृदेऽस्मिन्ननिलाशिनः॥ १०॥

One day Kṛṣṇa, unaccompanied by Rāma, went to Vṛndāvan : he was attended by a troop of cowherds and gaily decorated with wild flowers. On his way he came to the Yamunā, which was flowing in sportive undulations and sparkling with foam, as if with smiles, as the waves dashed against the borders. Within its bed, however, was the fearful pool of the serpent Kāliya, boiling with the fires of poison;¹ from the fumes of which, large trees upon the bank were blighted and by whose waters, when raised by a gale into the air, birds were scorched. Beholding stills dreadful lake, which was like another mouth of death, Madhusūdana reflected that the wicked and poisonous Kāliya, who had been vanquished by himself (in the person of Garuḍa) and had been obliged to fly from the ocean (where he had inhabited the island Ramaṇaka), must be lurking at its bottom and defiling the Yamunā, the consort of the sea, so that neither men nor cattle could slake their thirst by her waters. Such being the case, he determined to dislodge the Nāga and enable the dwellers of Vraja to frequent the vicinage without fear; for it was the especial purpose he considered of his descent upon earth to reduce to subjection all such violators of law. "Here" thought he, "is a Kadamba tree, which is sufficiently near; I can climb up it and thence leap into the serpent's pool."

Having thus resolved, he bound his clothes tightly about him and jumped boldly into the lake of the serpent-king. The waters, agitated by his plunge amidst them, were scattered to a considerable distance from the bank and the spray falling upon the trees, they were immediately set on fire by the heat of the poisonous vapour combined with the water; and the whole horizon was in a blaze. Kṛṣṇa, having dived into the pool, struck his arms in defiance² and the snake-king, hearing the sound, quickly came forth: his eyes were coppery red and his hoods were flaming with deadly venom : he was attended by many other powerful and poisonous snakes, feeders upon air and by hundreds of serpent-nymphs, decorated with rich jewels, whose earrings glittered with trembling radiance as the wearers moved along. Coiling themselves around Kṛṣṇa, they all bit him with teeth from which fiery poison was emitted. Kṛṣṇa's companions, beholding him in the lake, encompassed by the snakes, twining around him, ran off to Vraja, lamenting and bewailing aloud his fate. "Kṛṣṇa," they called out, "has foolishly plunged into the serpent's pool and is there bitten to death by the snake-king! Come and see."

The cowherds and their wives and Yaśodā, hearing this news, which was like a thunderbolt, ran immediately to the pool, frightened out of their senses and crying, "Alas ! alas ! where is he ?" The Gopīs were retarded by Yaśodā, who in her agitation stumbled and slipped at every step; but Nanda and the cowherds and the invincible Rāma hastened to the banks of the Yamunā, eager to assist Kṛṣṇa.

The Gopīs, overcome with sorrow, wept and called affectionately and with convulsive sobs, upon Keśava. "Let us all," said they, "plunge with Yaśodā into the fearful pool of the serpent-king. We cannot return to Vraja; for what is day, without the sun? What night, without the moon? What is a herd of heifers, without its lord? What is Vraja, without Kṛṣṇa? Deprived of him, we will go no more to Gokula. The forest will lose its delights; it will be like a lake without water. When this dark lotus leaf complexioned Hari is not present, there is no joy in the maternal dwelling. How strange is this! And as for you, you cowherds, how, poor beings, will you live amidst the pastures, when you no longer behold the brilliant lotus eyes of Hari? Our hearts have been wiled away by the music of his voice. We will not go without Puṇḍarikākṣa to the folds of Nanda. Even now, though held in the coils of the serpent-king, see, friends, how his face brightens with smiles as we gaze upon him."

When the mighty son of Rohīṇī, Balarāma heard these exclamations of the Gopīs and with disdainful glance beheld the cowherds overcome with terror, Nanda gazing fixedly upon the countenance of his son and Yaśodā unconscious, he spoke to Kṛṣṇa in his own character: "What is this, O god of gods ! the quality of mortal is sufficiently assumed; do you not know yourself eternal? You are the centre of creation, as the nave is of the spokes of a wheel. A portion of you have I also been born, as your senior. The gods, to partake of your pastimes as man, have all descended under a like disguise; and the goddesses have come down to Gokula to join in your spores. You, eternal, have last of all appeared below. Wherefore, Kṛṣṇa, do you disregard these divinities, who, as cowherds, are your friends and kin? These sorrowing females, who also are your relations? You have put on the character of man; you have exhibited the tricks of childhood: now let this fierce snake, though armed with venomous tangs, be subdued, (by your celestial vigour)."

Thus reminded of his real character by Rāma, Kṛṣṇa smiled gently and speedily extricated himself from the coils of the snakes. Laying hold of the middle hood of their chief with both his hands, he bent it down and set his foot upon the hitherto undended head and danced upon it in triumph. Wherever the snake attempted to raise his head, it was again trodden down and many bruises were inflicted on the hood by the pressure of the toes of Kṛṣṇa. Trampled upon by the feet of Kṛṣṇa, as they changed position in the dance, the snake fainted and vomited forth much blood³. Beholding the head and neck of their lord thus injured and the blood flowing from his mouth, the females of the snake-king implored the clemency of Madhusūdana.

How shall we fully declare him of whom the egg of Brahmā, made up of earth, sky, water, fire and air, is but a small portion of a part? Holy sages have in vain sought to know your eternal essence. How shall I address you, who are possessed, through your own strength and essence, of the eight great faculties, in energy unequalled? You are the supreme, the progenitor of the supreme (Brahmā) : you are the supreme spirit and from you the supreme proceeds : you are beyond all finite objects; how can I speak your praise? How can I declare his greatness, from whom come Brahmā, Rudra, Candra, Indra, the Maruts, the Aśvins, the Vasus and Ādityas; of whom the whole world is an infinitely small portion, a portion destined to represent his essence; and whose nature, primitive or derived, Brahmā and the immortals do not comprehend? How can I approach him, to whom the gods offer incense and flowers culled from the groves of Nandana; whose incarnate forms the king of the deities ever adores unconscious of his real person; whom the sages, that have withdrawn their senses from all external objects, worship in thought and enshrining his image in the purposes of their hearts, present to it the flowers of sanctity?"⁴

I am quite unable, O god of gods, to worship or to hymn you. Your own clemency must alone influence your mind to show me compassion. It is the nature of snakes to be savage and I am born of their kind : hence this is my nature, not mine offence. The world is created, as it is destroyed, by you; and the species, form and nature of all things in the world are your work. Even such as you have created me in kind, in form and in nature, such I am. and such are my actions : should I act differently, then indeed should I deserve your punishment, for so you have declared⁵. Yet that I have been punished by you is indeed a blessing; for punishment from you alone is a favour. Behold I am now without strength, without poison; deprived of both by you. Spare me my life; I ask no more. Command me what I shall do."

Being thus addressed by Kāliya, Kṛṣṇa replied, "You must not tarry here, nor anywhere in the stream of the Yamunā; depart immediately, with your family and followers, to the sea; where Garuḍa, the foe of the serpent race, will not harm you, when he sees the impressions of my feet upon your brow."

Again, tending upon the herds, Keśava and Rāma wandered through the woods and on one occasion came to a pleasing grove of palms, where dwelt the fierce demon Dhenuka, feeding upon the flesh of deer. Beholding the trees covered with fruit and desirous of gathering it, the cowherds called out to the brothers and said, “See, Rāma; see, Kṛṣṇa; in this grove, belonging to the great Dhenuka, the trees are loaded with ripe fruit, the smell of which perfumes the air : we should like to eat some, will you throw some down?" As soon as the boys had spoken, Saṅkarṣaṇa and Kṛṣṇa shook the trees and brought down the fruit on the ground.

NOTES

1. This exploit is related in the Bhāgavata, Hari Vaiśiṣṭa and other Vaiśnava Purāṇas, much in the same strain, but not always in the same place : it more commonly precedes the legend of the discomfiture of Kāliya.

Hearing the noise of the falling fruit, the fierce and malignant demon Dhenuka, in the form of an ass, hastened to the spot in a great passion and began to kick Rāma on the breast with his hinder heels. Rāma, however, seized him by both hind legs and whirling him round until he expired, tossed his carcass to the top of a palm tree, from the branches of which it struck down abundance of fruit, like rain drops poured upon earth by the wind. The animals that were of kin to Dhenuka came running to his aid; but Kṛṣṇa and Rāma treated them in the same manner, until the trees were laden with dead asses and the ground was strewed with ripe fruit. Henceforward the cattle grazed unobstructed in the palm grove and cropped the new pasturage, where they had never before ventured¹.

When the demon in the form of an ass and all his tribe, had been destroyed, the grove of palms became the favourite resort of the Gopas and their wives and the sons of Vasudeva, greatly pleased, repaired to the Bhāṇḍīra fig tree. They continued to wander about, shouting and singing and gathering fruits and flowers from the trees; now driving the cows afar to pasture; now calling them by their names; now carrying the foot-ropes of the kine upon their shoulder; now ornamenting themselves with garlands of forest flowers, they looked like two young bulls when the horns first appear. Attired the one in yellow and the other in sable garments, they looked like two clouds, one white and one black, surmounted by the bow of Indra. Sporting mutually with frolics beneficial to the world, they roamed about like two monarchs over all the collected sovereigns of the earth. Assuming human duties and maintaining the human character, they strayed through the thickets amusing themselves with sports suited to their mortal species and condition, in swinging on the boughs of trees or in boxing and wrestling and hurling stones.

Having observed the two lads thus playing about, the Asura Pralamba, seeking to devour them, came amongst the cowherd boys in the shape of one of themslves and mixed, without being suspected, in their pastimes; for he thought, that, thus disguised, it would not be difficult to find an opportunity to kill, first Kṛṣṇa and afterwards the son of Rohinī. The boys commenced playing at the game of leaping like deer, two and two together.¹

Govinda was matched with Śridāman and Balarāma with Pralamba : the other boys were coupled with one another and went leaping away. Govinda beat his companion and Balarāma his; and the boys who were on Kṛṣṇa's side were also victorious. Carrying one another, they reached the Bhāṇḍīra fig; and from thence those who were victors were conveyed back to the starling-ground by those who were vanquished.

It being Pralamba's duty to carry Saṅkarṣaṇa, the latter mounted upon his shoulders, like the moon riding above a dark cloud; and the demon ran off with him, but did not stop : finding himself, however, unable to bear the weight of Balarāma, he enlarged his bulk and looked like a black cloud in the rainy season, Balarāma beholding him like a scorched mountain, his head crowned with a diadem and his neck hung round with garlands, having eyes as large as cart wheels, a fearful form and shaking the earth with his tread, called out, as he was carried away, to his brother, "Kṛṣṇa, Kṛṣṇa, I am carried off by some demon, disguised as a cowherd and huge as a mountain! What shall I do? Tell me, Madhusūdana : the villain runs away with speed!"

Thus reminded by the magnanimous Kṛṣṇa, the powerful Baladeva laughed and squeezed Pralamba with his knees, striking him at the same time on the head and face with his fists, so as to beat out both his eyes. The demon, vomiting blood from his mouth and having his brain forced through the skull, fell upon the ground and expired. The Gopas, beholding Pralamba slain, were astonished and rejoiced and cried out, "Well done," and praised Balarāma: and thus commended by his play-fellows and accompanied by Kṛṣṇa, Bala, after the death of the daitya Pralamba, returned to Gokula.³

1. Jumping with both feet at once, as deer bound, two boys together, the one that holds out longest or comes to a given point first, is the victor and the vanquished is then bound to carry him to the goal, if not already attained and back again to the starting post, on his shoulders. The Bhāgavata does not specify the game, but mentions that the vanquished carry the victors on their backs.

2. This passage is read and explained differently in different copies. In some it is, अत्रं यथा वाडवानिनांबुहिमस्वरूपं परिगृह्य स्वस्थं। हिमाचले भानुमतो शुसङ्खाजलत्वमुपैति पुनस्तथैव॥ And this is explained, सामुद्रमम्बु वाडवाख्येन वहिना अत्रं भक्षितं घनीभूय हिमस्वरूपं कस्तकसंज्ञेनवायुना वाडवानिगतेन सूर्यं नाडीमयेन परिगृह्य गृहीत्वा स्वस्थमाकशस्थं कृतं सन् हिमाचले भवतीति शेषः॥ 'The water of the ocean, devoured by the fire called Vādava, becoming condensed or in the form of dew or snow, is seized by the wind called Kastaka, from which the Vādava fire has departed, consisting of a pipe of the solar rays and being placed in the air, lies or is on the Himācalā' etc. This is rather an awkward and confused representation of the notion and the other reading is somewhat preferable : it consists simply in substituting कास्त for स्वस्थं that is, according to the commentary, अम्बु वाडवानिना जाधं कास्तं केन वायुना वाडवानिगतेनाकरस्मिनाडीमयेन अस्तं हिमाचले क्षिं हिमरूपं परिगृह्य स्थितं सत्। 'The water devoured by the fire is thrown by the wind Ka, made of a solar ray etc.; on the Himācalā, where it assumes the form of snow;' and so on. However disfigured by inaccurate views of some of the instruments in operation, the physiology is in the main very correct and indicates accurate observation of natural phenomena. The waters of the ocean, converted into vapour by solar heat, are raised by the same influence into the air and thence borne by the winds to the summits of lofty mountain ranges, where they are arrested by a diminished temperature, descend in the form of snow and again supply the streams that perpetually restore to the sea the treasures of which it is as perpetually plundered.

3. According to the Hari Varnśa the gods themselves praised this proof of Rāma's strength (bala) and hence he derived the name of Balarāma.

Parāśara said— Whilst Keśava and Rāma were sporting thus in Vraja, the rainy season ended and was succeeded by the season of autumn, when the lotus is full blown. The small Saphari fish, in their watery burrows, were oppressed by the heat, like a man by selfish desires, who is devoted to his family. The peacocks, no longer animated by passion, were silent amidst the woods, like holy saints, who have come to know the unreality of the world.

The clouds, of shining whiteness, exhausted of their watery wealth, deserted the atmosphere, like those who have acquired wisdom and depart from their homes. Evaporated by the rays of the autumnal sun, the lakes were dried up, like the hearts of men when withered by the contact of selfishness. The pellucid waters of the season were suitably embellished by white water-lilies, as are the minds of the pure by the apprehension of truth. Brightly in the starry sky shone the moon with undiminished orb, like the saintly being, who has reached the last stage of bodily existence in the company of the pious.

The rivers and lakes slowly retired from their banks, as the wise by degrees shrink from the selfish attachment that connects them with wife and child. First abandoned by the waters of the lake, the swans again began to congregate, like false ascetics, whose devotions are interrupted and they are again assailed by innumerable afflictions. The ocean was still and calm and exhibited no undulations, like the perfect sage, who has completed his course of restraint and has acquired undisturbed tranquillity of spirit. Everywhere the waters were as clear and pure as the minds of the wise, who behold Viśṇu in all things.

The autumnal sky was wholly free from clouds, like the heart of the ascetic, whose cares have been consumed by the fire of devotion. The moon allayed the fervours of the sun, as discrimination alleviates the pain to which egotism gives birth. The clouds of the atmosphere, the muddiness of the earth, the discolouration or the waters, were all removed by autumn, as abstraction detaches the senses from the objects of perception. The exercise of inspiring, suppressing and expiring the vital air, was as if performed daily by the waters of the lakes (as they were full and stationary and then again declined)¹.

At this season, when the skies were bright with stars, Kṛṣṇa, repairing to Vraja, found all the cowherds busily engaged in preparing for a sacrifice to be offered to Indra²; and going to the elders, he asked them, as it out of curiosity, what festival of Indra it was in which they took so much pleasure.

Nanda replied to his question and said, "Satakratu or Indra is the sovereign of the clouds and of the waters : sent by him, the former bestow moisture upon the earth, whence springs the grain, by which we and all embodied beings subsist; with which also and with water, we please the gods : hence too these cows bear calves and yield milk and are happy and well nourished. So when the clouds are seen distended with rain, the earth is neither barren of corn, nor bare of verdure, nor is man distressed by hunger. Indra, the giver of water, having drunk the milk of earth by the solar ray, sheds it again upon the earth for the sustenance of all the world. On this account all sovereign princes offer with pleasure sacrifices to Indra at the end of rains and so also do we and so do other people."

Parāśara said— When Kṛṣṇa heard this speech from Nanda in regard to the worship of Indra, he determined to put the king of the celestials into a passion and replied, "We, father, are neither cultivators of the soil, nor dealers in merchandise; we are sojourners in forests and cows are our divinities. There are four branches of knowledge, logical, scriptural, practical and political³. Hear me describe what practical science is Agriculture, commerce and tending of cattle; the knowledge of these three professions constitutes practical science. Agriculture is the subsistence of farmers; buying and selling, of traders. Kine are our support. Thus the knowledge of means of support is threefold.

The object that is cultivated by any one should be to him as his chief divinity; that should be venerated and worshipped, as it is his benefactor. He who worships the deity of another and diverts from him the reward that is his due, obtains not a prosperous station either in this world or in the next. Where the land ceases to be cultivated there are bounds assigned, beyond which commences the forest; the forests are bounded by the hills and so far do our limits extend. We are not shut in with doors, nor confined within walls; we have neither fields nor houses; we wander about happily wherever we list, travelling in our waggons.⁴ The spirits of these mountains, it is said, walk the woods in whatever forms they will or in their proper persons sport upon their own precipices. If they should be displeased with those who inhabit the forests, then, transformed to lions and beasts of prey, they will kill the offenders.

We then are bound to worship the mountains; to offer sacrifices to cattle. What have we to do with Indra? Cattle and mountains are our gods. Brāhmaṇas offer worship with prayer; cultivators of the earth adore their landmarks; but we who tend our herds in the forests and mountains should worship them and our kine. Let prayer and offerings then be addressed to the mountains Govardhana and kill a victim in due form. Let the whole station collect their milk without delay and feed with it the Brāhmaṇas and all who may desire to partake of it.

When the oblations have been presented and the Brāhmaṇas have been fed, let the Gopas circumambulate the cows, decorated with garlands of autumnal flowers. If the cowherds will attend to these suggestions, they will secure the favour of the mountain, of the cattle and also mine.

When Nanda and the other Gopas heard these words of Kṛṣṇa, their faces expanded with delight and they said that he had spoken well. “You have judged rightly, child,” exclaimed they; “we will do exactly as you have proposed and offer adoration to the mountain.”

Accordingly the inhabitants of Vraja worshipped the mountain, presenting to it curds and milk and flesh; and they fed hundreds and thousands of Brāhmaṇas and many other guests, who came to the ceremony, even as Kṛṣṇa had enjoined : and when they had made their offerings, they circumambulated the cows and the bulls, that bellowed as loud as roaring clouds.

Upon the summit of Govardhana, Kṛṣṇa presented himself, saying, “I am the mountain” and partook of much food presented by the Gopas; whilst in his own form as Kṛṣṇa he ascended the hill along with cowherds and worshipped his other self⁵. Having promised them many blessings, the mountain-person of Kṛṣṇa vanished; and the ceremony being completed, the cowherds returned to their station.

NOTES

1. A set of very poor quibbles upon the terms of the Prāṇāyāma : or, Purāṇa, drawing in the breath through one nostril; literally, ‘filling :’ Kumbhaka, closing the nostrils and suppressing the breath; keeping it stationary or confined, as it were in a Kumbha or water-pot : and Recaka, opening the other nostril and emitting the breath; literally, ‘purging’ or ‘depletion.’ The waters of the reservoirs replenished in the beginning of the autumnal season by the previous rains, remain for a while full, until they are drawn off for irrigation or reduced by evaporation : thus representing the three operations of Purāṇa, Kumbhaka and Recaka.

2. No public worship is offered to Indra at present; and the only festival in the Hindu calendar, the Śakradhvajoththāna, the erection of a flag in honour of Śakra or Indra, should be held on the twelfth or thirteenth of Bhādra, which is in the very middle of the rainy season; according to the Tithi Tatva, following the authority of the Kālikā and Bhaviṣyottara Purāṇas. The Śakradhvajoththāna is also a rite to be performed by kings and princes. It may be doubted, therefore, if the text intends any particular or appointed celebration.

3. Or, Ānvikṣikī (आन्वीक्षिकी), the science of inquiring by reasoning, Tarka (तर्क) or logic : Trayī (त्रयी), the three Vedas collectively or the doctrines they teach : Vārttā (वार्ता), rendered ‘practical,’ is the knowledge of the means of acquiring subsistence (वृत्तिः) : the fourth is Daṇḍanīti (दण्डनीतिः), the science of government, both domestic and foreign.

4. These nomadic habits are entirely lost sight of in the parallel passages of those Purāṇas in which the juvenile life of Kṛṣṇa is narrated. The text of the Hari Varīśa is in most of the other verses precisely the same as that of the Viṣṇu Purāṇa, putting however into the mouth of Kṛṣṇa a long additional eulogium on the season of autumn.

5. The Hari Varīśa says, ‘an illusory Kṛṣṇa, having become the mountain, ate the flesh that was offered,’ मांसचमायकृष्णोऽग्निर्भूत्वा समप्रते। Of course the ‘personified’ mountain is intended, as appears from several of the ensuing passages; as for instance, he says presently. ‘I am satisfied; and then in his divine form he smiled,’ संतुष्टोस्मीतिदिल्लेन रूपेण प्रजहास

ते। The Hari Varīśa affords here, as in so many other places, proofs of its Dakhini origin. It is very copious upon the homage paid to the cattle and their decoration with garlands and plumes of peacocks’ feathers, of which our text takes no notices. But in the south of India there is a very popular festival, that of the Punjab, scarcely known in the north, when cattle are decorated and worshipped; a celebration which has no doubt suggested to the compiler of the Hari Varīśa the details which he describes.

Indra, being thus disappointed of his offerings, was exceedingly angry and thus addressed a cohort of his attendant clouds, called Samvarttaka: "Ho, clouds" he said, "hear my words and without delay execute what I command. The insensate cowherd Nanda, assisted by his fellows, has withheld the usual offerings to us, relying upon the protection of Kṛṣṇa. Now, therefore, afflict the cattle, that are their sustenance and whence their occupation is derived, with rain and wind. Mounted upon my elephant, as vast as a mountain peak, I will give you aid in strengthening the tempest."

When Indra ceased, the clouds, obedient to his commands, came down, in a tearful storm of rain and wind, to destroy the cattle. In an instant the earth, the points of the horizon and the sky, were all blended into one by the heavy and incessant shower. The clouds roared aloud, as if in terror of the lightning's scourge, poured down uninterrupted torrents. The whole earth was enveloped in impenetrable darkness by the thick and volumed clouds; and above, below and on every side, the world was water. The cattle, pelted by the storm, shrunk cowering into the smallest size or gave up their breath : some covered their calves with their flanks and some beheld their young ones carried away by the flood. The calves, trembling in the wind, looked piteously at their mothers or implored in low moans, as it were, the succour of Kṛṣṇa. Hari, beholding all Gokula agitated with alarm, cowherds, cowherdesses and cattle all in a state of consternation, thus reflected :"This is the work of Mahendra, in resentment of the prevention of his sacrifice and it is incumbent on me to defend this station of herdsmen. I will lift up this spacious mountain from its stony base and hold it up, as a large umbrella, over the cow-pens."

Having thus determined, Kṛṣṇa immediately plucked up the mountain Govardhana and held it aloft with one hand in sport, saying to the herdsmen, "Lo the mountain is on high; enter beneath it quickly and it will shelter you from the storm; here you will be secure and at your ease in places defended from the wind : enter without delay and fear not that the mountain will fall." Upon this, all the people, with their herds and their wagons and goods and the Gopīs, distressed by the rain, repaired to the shelter of the mountain, which Kṛṣṇa held steadily over their heads; and Kṛṣṇa, as he supported the mountain, was contemplated by the dwellers of Vraja with joy and wonder; and, as their eyes opened wide with astonishment and pleasure, the Gopas and Gopīs sang his praise. For seven days and nights did the vast clouds sent by Indra rain upon the Gokula of Nanda to destroy its inhabitants, but they were protected by the elevation of the mountain; and the slayer of Bala, Indra, being foiled in his purpose, commanded the clouds to cease. The threats of Indra having been fruitless and the heavens clear, all Gokula came forth from its shelter and returned to its own abode. Then Kṛṣṇa, in the sight of the surprised inhabitants of the forests, restored the great mountain Govardhana to its original site.¹

1. It seems not unlikely that this legend has some reference to the caves or cavern temples in various parts of India. A remarkable representation of it occurs upon the sculptured rocks of Mahābalipura. It is related much to the same purport in the Bhāgavata. Śiśupāla, ridiculing the exploit, asserts that Govardhana was nothing more than an ant hill.

After Gokula had been saved by the elevation of the mountain, Indra became desirous of beholding Kṛṣṇa. The conqueror of his foes accordingly mounted his vast elephant Airāvata, and came to Govardhana, where the king of the gods beheld the mighty Dāmodara tending cattle, and assuming the person of a cow-boy, and, although the preserver of the whole world, surrounded by the sons of the herdsmen: above his head he saw Garuḍa, the king to birds, invisible to mortals, spreading out his wings to shade the head of Hari. Alighting from his elephant, and addressing him apart, Śakra, his eyes expanding with pleasure, thus spoke to Madhusūdana: "Hear, Kṛṣṇa, the reason why I have come hither; why I have approached you; for you could not otherwise conceive it. You, who are the supporter of all, have descended upon earth, to relieve her of her burden, in resentment of my obstructed rites I sent the clouds to deluge Gokula, and they have done this evil deed. You, by raising up the mountain, have preserved the cattle; and of a verity I am much pleased, O hero, with thy wondrous deed.

The object of the gods is now, methinks, accomplished, since with thy single hand you hast raised aloft this chief of mountains. I have now come by desire of the cattle¹, grateful for their preservation, in order to install you as Upendra; and, as the Indra of the cows, you shall be called Govinda.”² Having thus said, Mahendra took a ewer from his elephant Airāvata, and with the holy water it contained performed the regal ceremony of aspersion. The cattle, as the rite was celebrating, deluged the earth with their milk.

Now, illustrious being, hear what farther I propose, with a view to facilitate your task. He is to be cherished by you, Madhusūdana, like another self.”

To this Kṛṣṇa replied, “I know thy son, who has been born in the race of Bharata, and I will befriend him as long as I continue upon earth. As long as I am present, invincible Śakra, no one shall be able to subdue Arjuna in fight. When the great demon Kaṁsa has been slain, and Ariṣṭa, Keśin, Kuvalayāpīḍa, Naraka, and other fierce Daityas, shall have been put to death, there will take place a great war, in which the burden of the earth will be removed. Now therefore depart, and be not anxious on account of thy son : for no foe shall triumph over Arjuna whilst I am present. For his sake I will restore to Kuntī all her son, with Yudhiṣṭhira at their head, unharmed, when he Bhārata war is at an end.”

Upon Kṛṣṇa's ceasing to speak, he and Indra mutually embraced; and the latter, mounting his elephant Airāvata, returned to heaven. Kṛṣṇa, with the cattle and the herdsmen, went his way to Vraja, where the wives of the Gopas watched for his approach.

1. Gobhiacha chodita (गोभिश्च चोदितः); that is, ‘delegated,’ says the commentator, ‘by the cow of plenty. Kāmadhenu, and other celestial kine, inhabitants of Goloka, the heaven of cows.' but this is evidently unauthorized by the text, as celestial cattle could not be grateful for preservation upon earth; and the notion of Goloka, a heaven of cows and Kṛṣṇa, is a modern piece of mysticism, drawn from such sectarian works as the Brahma Vaivartta Purāṇa and Hari Vāṁśa.

2. The purport of Indra's speech is to explain the meaning of two of Kṛṣṇa's names, Upendra and Govinda. The commentators on the Amara Koṣa agree in explaining the first, the younger brother of Indra, इन्द्रानुजत्वादुपेन्द्रः। conformably to the synonym that immediately follows in the text of Amara, Indrāvaraṇa (इन्द्रावरणः); a name that occurs also in the Mahābhārata: Kṛṣṇa, as the son of Devakī, who is an incarnation of Aditi, being born of the latter subsequently to Indra, Govinda is he who knows, finds, or tends cattle; Gām vindati (गां विन्दति). The Paurāṇik etymology makes the latter the Indra (इन्द्र quasi इन्द्र) of cows; and in this capacity he may well be considered as a minor or inferior Indra, such being the proper sense of the term Upapurāṇa 'a minor Purāṇa,' &c. The proper import of the word Upendra has, however, been anxiously distorted by the sectarian followers of Kṛṣṇa. Thus the commentator on our text asserts that Upa is here synonymous with Upari (उपरि), and that Upendratwa, "the station of Upendra," means 'rule in the heaven of heavens, Goloka,' a new creation of this sect, above Satya-loka, which, in the uncorrupt Paurāṇik system, is the highest of the seven Lokas: see Bk. II. Ch. VII. So the Hari Vāṁśa makes Indra say, ममोपरि यथेन्द्रस्त्वं स्थापितो गोभिरोश्वरः उपेन्द्र इति कृष्ण त्वां गास्यन्ति दिवि देवताः। As you, Kṛṣṇa, are appointed, by the cows, Indra superior to me, therefore the deities in heaven shall call you Upendra.' The Bhāgavata does not introduce the name though it no doubt alludes to it in making the divine cow Surabhi, who is said to have come from Goloka with India, address Kṛṣṇa, and say, इन्द्रं नस्त्वाभिपेश्यामो ब्रह्मणा नोदितावयं। We, instructed by Brahmā, will crown you as our Indra' Accordingly Kṛṣṇa has the water of the Ganges thrown over him by the elephant of Indra, and India, the gods and sages praise him, and salute him by the appellation of Govinda. The Hari Vāṁśa assigns thus to Indra alone, who says, 'I am only the Indra of the gods; you have attained the rank of Indra of the kine, and they shall for ever celebrate you on earth as Govinda.' अहंकिलेद्वे देवानां त्वं गवामिद्रतां गतः। गोविन्द इति लोकास्त्वं स्तोष्यन्ति भुवि शाश्वतं॥ All this is very different from the sober account of our text, and is undoubtedly of comparatively recent origin.

किं वास्माकं विचारेण बास्यवोऽसि नमोऽसु ते ॥ ८ ॥

After Śakra had departed, the cowherds said to Kṛṣṇa, whom they had seen holding up Govarddhana, “We have been preserved, together with our cattle, from a great peril, by your supporting the mountain above us; but this is very astonishing child's play, unsuitable to the condition of a herdsman, and all thy actions are those of a god. Tell us what is the meaning of all this, Kāliya has been conquered in the lake; Pralamba has been killed; Govarddhana has been lifted up: our minds are filled with amazement. Assuredly we repose at the feet of Hari, O you of unbounded might!

for, having witnessed thy power, we cannot believe you to be a man. Thy affection, Keśava, for our women and children, and for Vraja; the deeds that you hast wrought, which all the gods would have attempted in vain; they boyhood, and thy prowess; thy humiliating birth amongst us; are contradictions that fill us with doubt, whenever we think of them. Yet reverence be to you whether you be a god, or a demon, or a Gandharva, or whatever we may deem you; for you are our friend."

When they had cndcd, Kṛṣṇa remained silent for some time, as if hurt and offended, and then replied to them,

Kṛṣṇa replied— 'Herdsmen, if you are not ashamed of my relationship; if I have merited your praise; what occasion is there for you to engage in any discussion concerning me? If you have any regard for me; if I have deserved your praise; then be satisfied to know that I am your kinsman. I am neither god, nor Yakṣa, nor Gandharva, nor Dānava; I have been born your relative, and you must not think differently of me.'

Upon receiving this answer, the Gopas held their peace, and went into the woods, leaving Kṛṣṇa apparently displeased.

But Kṛṣṇa, observing the clear sky bright with the autumnal moon, and the air perfumed with the fragrance of the wild water-lily, in whose buds the clustering bees were murmuring their songs, felt inclined to join with the Gopis in sport. Accordingly he and Rāma commenced singing sweet low strains in various measures, such as the women loved; and they, as soon as they heard the melody, quitted their homes, and hastened to meet the foe of Madhu.

One damsels gently sang an accompaniment to his song; another attentively listened to his melody: one calling out upon his name, then shrunk abashed; whilst another, more bold, and instigated by affection, pressed close to his side: one, as she sallied forth, beheld some of the seniors of the family, and dared not venture, contenting herself with meditating on Kṛṣṇa with closed eyes, and entire devotion, by which immediately all acts of merit were effaced by rapture, and all sin was expiated by regret at not beholding him: and others, again, reflecting upon the cause of the world, in the form of the supreme Brahma, obtained by their sighing final emancipation.

Thus surrounded by the Gopīs, Kṛṣṇa thought lovely moonlight night of autumn propitious to the Rāsa dance.¹ Many of the Gopīs imitated the different actions of Kṛṣṇa, and in his absence wandered through Vrindāvan, representing his person. "I am Kṛṣṇa," cries one; "behold the elegance of my movements. "I am Kṛṣṇa," exclaims another; "listen to my song." "Vile Kāliya, stay! for I am Kṛṣṇa," is repeated by a third, slapping her arms in defiance. A fourth calls out, "Herdsmen, fear nothing; the danger of the storm is over, for, lo I lift up Govarddhana for your shelter." And a fifth proclaims, "Now let the heads graze where they will, for I have destroyed Dhenuka."

Thus in various actions of Kṛṣṇa the Gopīs imitated him, whilst away, and beguiled their sorrow by mimicking his sports. Looking down upon the ground, one damsels call to her friend, as the light down upon her body stands erect with joy, and the lotuses of her eyes expand," See here are the marks of Kṛṣṇa's feet, as he has gone alone sprotively, and left the impressions of the banner, the thuodebolt, and the goad.² What lovely maiden has been his companion, inebriate with passion, as her irregular footmarks testify?

Here Dāmodara has gathered flowers from on high, for we see alone the impressions of the tips of his feet. Here a nymph has sat down with him, ornamented with flowers, fortunate in having propitiated Viṣṇu in a prior existence. Having left her in an arrogant mood, because he had offered her flowers, the son of Nanda has gone by this road; for see, unable to follow him with equal steps, his associate has here tripped along upon her toes and holding his hand the damsel has passed, as is evident from the uneven and intermingled footsteps. But the rogue has merely taken her hand, and left her neglected, for here the paces indicate the path of a person in despair.

Undoubtedly he promised that he would quickly come again, for here are his own footsteps returning with speed. Here he has entered the thick forest, impervious to the rays of the moon, and his steps can be traced no farther." Hopeless then of beholding Kṛṣṇa, the Gopīs returned, and repaired to the banks of the Yamunā, where they sang his songs; and presently they beheld the preserver of the three worlds, with a smiling aspect, hastening towards them: on which, one exclaimed, "Kṛṣṇa! Kṛṣṇa!" unable to articulate any thing else: another affected to contract her forehead with frowns, as drinking with the bees of her eyes the lotus of the face of Hari: another, closing her eyelids, contemplated internally his form, as if engaged in an act of devotion.

Then Mādhava, coming amongst them, conciliated some with soft speeches, some with gentle looks, and some he took by the hand; and the illustrious deity sported with them in the stations of the dance. As each of the Gopīs, however, attempted to keep in one place, close to the side of Kṛṣṇa, the circle of the dance could not be constructed, and he therefore took each by the hand, and when their eyelids were shut by the effects of such touch, the circle was formed³ Then proceeded the dance to the music of their clashing bracelets, and songs that celebrated in suitable strain the charms of the autumnal season. Kṛṣṇa sang the moon of autumn, a mine of gentle radiance! but the nymphs repeated the praises of Kṛṣṇa alone.

At times, one of them, wearied by the revolving dance, threw her arms, ornamented with tinkling bracelets, round the neck of the destroyer of Madhu: another, skilled in the art of singing his praises, embraced him. The drops of perspiration from the arms of Hari were like fertilizing rain, which produced a crop of down upon the temples of the Gopīs, Kṛṣṇa sang the strain that was appropriate to the dance. The Gopīs repeatedly exclaimed, "Bravo, Kṛṣṇa!" to his song.

इति श्रीविष्णुपुराणे पञ्चमांशे त्रयोदशः अध्यायः॥

When leading, they followed him, when returning, they encountered him; and, whether he went forwards or backwards, they ever attended on his steps. Whilst frolicking thus with the Gopis, they considered every instant without him a myriad of years; and, prohibited in vain by husbands, fathers, brothers, they went forth at night to sport with Kṛṣṇa, the object of their affection. Thus the illimitable being, the benevolent remover of all imperfections, assumed the character of youth amongst the females of the herdsmen of Vraja; pervading their natures, and that of their lords, by his own essence, all diffusive like the wind : for even as in all creatures the elements of ether, fire, earth, water, and air, are comprehended, so also is he every where present, and in all.

NOTES

1. The Rāsa dance is danced by men and women, holding each other's hands, and going round in a circle, singing the airs to which they dance. According to Bharata, the airs are various both in melody and time, and the number of persons should not exceed sixty-four : अनेकनर्तकीयोज्ञौ चित्ताललयान्तिं आत्मुः पृष्ठ्युपत्तादासकं मसृणोद्दत्तं।

2. The soles of the feet of a deity are usually marked by a variety of emblematical figures: this is carried to the greatest extravagance by the Buddhists, the mark on the feet of Gautama being 130: see Trans. R. As. Sac. III. 70.' It is a decoration very moderately employed by the Hindus.

3. This is a rather inexplicit statement, but the comment makes it clear, Kṛṣṇa, it is said, in order to form the circle, takes each damsel by the hand, and leads her to her place: there he quits her : but the effect of the contact is such, that it deprives her of the power of perception, and she contentedly takes the hand of her female neighbour, thinking it to be Kṛṣṇa's. The Bhāgavata is bolder, and asserts that Kṛṣṇa multiplied himself, and actually stood between each two damsels: 'रासोत्सवः सप्तवृत्तौ गोपीमण्डलमण्डतः। योगेश्वरेण कृष्णेन तासां मध्ये द्वयोर्द्वयो व्रिष्टेन इति॥' 'The Rāsa dance, formed of a circle graced by the Gopis, was then led off by the Lord of magic, Kṛṣṇa having placed himself in the midst of every two of the nymphs.' The Hari Vaṁśa intimates the same, though not very fully: तास्तुर्पक्तीकृता सर्वा रमयन्ति मनोरपम्। गायन्त्वा कृष्णचरितं द्वद्वयो गोपकन्यकाः॥ 'Then all the nymphs of the cowherds, placing themselves in couples in a row, engaged in pleasant diversion, singing the deeds of Kṛṣṇa,' The Pañkti, or row, is said by the commentator to mean here, the Maṇḍala, or ring; and the 'couples' to imply that Kṛṣṇa was between every two, He quotes a verse to this effect from some other Vaiśnava work: अङ्गनामङ्गनामन्तरे माधवे माधवः माधवं चान्तरे चाङ्गना संजगौ वेणुना देवकीनन्दनः॥ 'Between each two damsels was Mādhava, and between each two Mādhavas was a nymph : and the son of Dvivakī played on the flute:' for, in fact, Kṛṣṇa is not only dancing with each, but also by himself in the centre: for this the commentator on the Hari Vaṁśa cites a passage from the Vedas: वस्ते पुरुरुपो वप्युसि ऊर्ध्वा तस्यौ त्र्यविं रेतिहाणाः॥ Literally, The many formed being) assumes (various) bodies. One form stood apart, occupying triple observance'. Now if the verse be genuine, it probably refers to something that has little to do with Kṛṣṇa; but it is explained to apply to the Rāsa; the form of Kṛṣṇa being supposed to be meant as wholly distinct from the Gopis, and yet being beloved by everyone of them, on each side and in front of her. In the meditation upon Kṛṣṇa, which is enjoined in the Brahma Vaivartta, he is to be contemplated in the centre of the Rāsa Maṇḍala, in association with his favourite Rādhā; but the Maṇḍala described in that work is not a ring of dancers, but a circle of definite space at Vṛndāvana, within which Kṛṣṇa, Rādhā, and the Gopis divert themselves, not very decorously. This work has probably given the tone to the style in which the annual festival, the Rāsa Yātrā, is celebrated in various parts of India, in the month of Kārtika, upon the sun's entrance into Libra,' by nocturnal dances, and representations of the sports of Kṛṣṇa. A circular dance of men and women, however, does not form any prominent feature at these entertainments and it may be doubted if it is ever performed. Some of the earliest labourers in the field of Hindu mythology have thought this circular dance to typify the dance of the planets round the sun (Maurice, Ancient History of the Hindus I.108. II. 356); but there is no particular number assigned to the performers by any of the Hindu authorities, beyond its limitation to sixty-four. At the Rāsa Maṇḍala of the Brahma Vaivartta, Rādhā is accompanied by thirty-six of her most particular friends amongst the Gopīs, but they are each attended by thousands of inferior personages, and none of the crowd are left without male multiples of Kṛṣṇa. The only mysticism hinted at in that Purāṇa, is, that these are all one with Kṛṣṇa: the varied vital conditions of one spirit being represented by the Gopīs and the illusory manifestations of Kṛṣṇa; he himself being supreme unmodified soul.

One evening, whilst Kṛṣṇa and the Gopis were amusing themselves in the dance, the demon Ariṣṭa, disguised as a savage bull, came to the spot, after having spread alarm through the station. His colour was that of a cloud charged with rain; he had vase horns, and his eyes were like two fiery suns : as he moved, he ploughed up the ground with his hoofs: his tongue was repeatedly licking his lips ; his tail was erect; the sinews of his shoulders were firm, and between them rose a hump of enormous dimensions, his haunches were soiled with ordure, and he was a terror to the herds; his dewlap hung low, and his face was marked with scars from butting against the trees, Terrifying all the kine, the demon who perpetually haunts the forests in the shape of a bull, destroying hermits and ascetics, advanced. Beholding an animal of such a formidable aspect, the herdsmen and their women were exceedingly frightened, and called aloud on Kṛṣṇa, who came to their succour, shouting and slapping his arm in defiance. When the Daitya "heard the noise, he turned upon his challenger, and fixing his eyes and pointing his horns at the belly of Keśava, he ran furiously upon the youth, Kṛṣṇa stirred not from his post, but, smiling in sport and derision, awaited the near approach of the bull, when he seized him as an alligator would have done, and held him firmly by the horns, whilst he pressed his sides with his knees. Having thus humbled his pride, and held him captive by his horns, he wrung his throat, as if it had been a piece of wet cloth; and then tearing off one of the horns, he beat the fierce demon with it until he died, vomiting blood from his mouth. Seeing him slain, the herdsmen glorified Kṛṣṇa, as the companies of the celestials of old praised Indra, when he triumphed over the Asura Jambha.¹

After these things had come to pass, Arīṣṭa the bull-demon and Dhenuka and Pralamba had been slain, Govarddhana had been lifted up, the serpent Kāliya had been subdued, the two trees had been broken, the female fiend Pūtanā had been killed, and the waggon had been overturned, Nārada went to Kaṅsa, and related to him the whole, beginning with the transference of the child from Devaki to Yaśodā.

Hearing this from Nārada, Kaṅsa was highly incensed with Vāsudeva, and bitterly reproached him, and all the Yādavas, in an assembly of the tribe. Then reflecting what was to be done, he determined to destroy both Kṛṣṇa and Rāma whilst they were yet young, and before they had attained to manly vigour: for which purpose he resolved to invite them from Vraja, under pretext of the solemn rite of the lustration of arms, when he would engage them in a trial of strength with his chief boxers, Cāṇūra and Muṣṭika, by whom they would assuredly be killed. "I will send," he said, "the noble Yadu, Akrūra the son of Swaphalka, to Gokula, to bring them hither: I will order the fierce Keśin, who haunts the woods of Vṛndāban, to attack them, and he is of unequalled might, and will surely kill them; or if they arrive here, my elephant Kuvalayāpiḍa shall trample to death these two cow-boy sons of Vasudeva."

“Lord of liberal gifts,¹ attend to my words, and, out to friendship for me, perform my orders. Ascend your chariot and go hence to the station of the herdsman Nanda. Two vile boys, portions of Viśnu, have been born there, for the express object of effecting my destruction. On the fourteenth lunation I have to celebrate the festival of arms,² and I wish them to be brought here by you, to take part in the games, and that the people may see them engage in a boxing match with my two dexterous athletes, Chāṇūra and Muṣṭika; or haply my elephant Kuvalayāpīḍa, driven against them by his rider, shall kill these two iniquitous youngsters, sons of Vasudeva. When they are out of the way, I will put to death Vasudeva himself, the cowherd Nanda, and my foolish father, Ugrasena, and I will seize upon the herds and flocks, and all the possessions, of the rebellious Gopas, who have ever been my foes. Except you, lord of liberality, all the Yādavas are hostile to me; but I will devise schemes for their extirpation, and I shall then reign over my kingdom, in concert with you, without any annoyance. Through regard for me, therefore, do you go as I direct you; and you shall command the cowherds to bring in with speed their supplies of milk and butter and curds.”

Being thus instructed, the illustrious Akrūra readily undertook to visit Kṛṣṇa, and, ascending his stately chariot, he went forth from the city of Mathurā.

NOTES

1. Dānapati— The epithet refers to Akrūra's possession of the Syamantaka gem (see Bk. IV. Ch. XIII); although, as here used by Karisa, it is an anachronism, the gem not becoming his until after Kṛṣṇa's maturity.

2. Dhanurmaha (धनुर्महः): the same phrase occurs in the different authorities. In its ordinary acceptation it would imply any military festival. There is one of great celebrity, which, in the south of India, closes the Dasaharā, or festival of Durgā, when military exercises are performed and a field is ravaged, as typical of the opening of a campaign. Worship is paid to military implements. The proper day for this is the Vijaya daśamī or tenth of the light half of Āświn, falling about the end to September or beginning of October. Trans. Bombay Sac. III, 73; also Amara Koṣa, under the word लोहाभिसारः: (Lohābhīsāra). Both our text and that of the Bhāgavata however, intimate the celebration of the feast in question, on the fourteenth day of the fortnight (in what month is not specified), and an occasional 'passage of arms,' therefore is all that is intended. The fourteenth day of the light lunation of any month is commonly held appropriate for a holiday, or religious rite. It will be seen in the sequel, that the leading feature of the ceremonial was intended to have been a trial of archery, spoiled by Krṣṇa's breaking the bow that was to have been used on the occasion.

Keśin, confiding in his prowess, having received the commands of Kānsa, set off to the woods of Vṛndāvana, with the intention to destroying Kṛṣṇa. He came in the shape of a steed, spurning the earth with his hoofs, scattering the clouds with his mane, and springing in his paces beyond the orbits of the sun and moon. The cowherds and their females, hearing his neighings, were struck with terror, and fled to Govinda for protection, calling upon him to save them. In a voice deep as the roaring of the thundercloud, Kṛṣṇa replied to them,

Come on, wretch— I am Kṛṣṇa and I will knock all thy teeth down thy throat, as the wielder of the trident did to Pushan."¹ Thus defying him to combat, Govinda went to encounter Keśin. The demon ran upon him, with his mouth opened wide; but Kṛṣṇa enlarging the bulk of his arm, thrust it into his mouth, and wrenched out the teeth, which fell from his jaws like fragments of white clouds. Still the arm of Kṛṣṇa, in the throat of the demon, continued to enlarge, like a malady increasing from its commencement till it ends in dissolution. From his torn lips the demon vomited foam and blood; his eyes rolled in agony; his joints gave way; he beat the earth with his feet; his body was covered with perspiration; he became incapable of any effort. The formidable demon, having his mouth rent open by the arm of Kṛṣṇa, fell down, torn asunder like a tree struck by lightning: he lay separated into two portions, each having two legs, half a back, half a tail, one ear, one, eye, and one nostril. Kṛṣṇa stood, unharmed and smiling, after the destruction of the demon, surrounded by the cow-herds, who, together with their women, were filled with astonishment at the death of Keśin, and glorified the amiable god with the lotus eyes.

NOTES

1 As Virabhadra did to Pūṣī or Pūṣan, a form of Surya, at the sacrifice of Dakṣa: see Bk. I Ch. VIII. n. 6.

2. Or Keśi and va. 'who kills,' from vadhi or badhi, 'to kill.' but this is a Paurāṇik etymology, and less satisfactory than the usual grammatical one of Keśa, 'hair' and 'va' possessive affix: Kṛṣṇa corresponding in this respect to the Apollo Crinitus. It is also derived from the legend of his origin from 'a hair' (see Bk. V. Ch. X. a. 23): and again, Keśa is said to purport 'radiance' or 'rays.' whether of the sun or moon or fire : all which are the light of Kṛṣṇa: whence he is called Keśava, 'the rayed' or 'radianc.' Mahābhārata, Mokṣa Dharma.

3 The legend is told by all the other narrators of Kṛṣṇa's Juvenile exploits.

Akrūra, having set off in his quick travelling car, proceeded to visit Kṛṣṇa at the pastures of Nanda; and, as he went along, he congratulated himself on his superior good fortune, in having an opportunity of beholding a descended portion of the deity.

"Now," thought he, "has my life borne fruit; my night is followed by the dawn of day; since I shall see the countenance of Viṣṇu, whose eyes are like the expanded leaf of the lotus. I shall behold that lotus eyed aspect of Viṣṇu, which, when seen only in imagination, takes away the sins of men. I shall to-day behold that glory of glories, the mouth of Viṣṇu, whence proceeded the Vedas, and all their dependant sciences. I shall see the sovereign of the world, by whom the world is sustained; who is worshipped as the best of males, as the male of sacrifice in sacrificial rites. I shall see Keśava, who it without beginning or end; by worshipping whom with a hundred sacrifices, Indra obtained the sovereignty over the gods.

That Hari, whose nature is unknown to Brahmā, Indra, Rudra, the Asvins, the Vasus, Ādityas, and Maruts, will this day touch my body. The soul of all, the knower of all, he who is all, and is present in all, he who is permanent, undecaying, all-pervading, will converse with me. He, the unborn, who has preserved the world in the various forms of a fish, a tortoise, a bore, a horse,¹ a lion, will this day speak to me. Now the lord of the earth, who assumes shapes at will, has taken upon him the condition of humanity, to accomplish some object cherished in his heart. That Ananta, who holds the earth upon his crest, and who has descended upon earth for its protection, will this day call me by my name. Glory to that being, whose deceptive adoption of father, son, brother, friend, mother, and relative, the world is unable to penetrate. Glory to him, who is one with true knowledge, who is inscrutable, and through whom, seated in his heart, the Yogi crosses the wide expanse of worldly ignorance and illusion.

His mind thus animated by devout faith, and meditating in this manner, Akrūra proceeded on his road, and arrived at Gokula a little before sunset, at the time of the milking of the cows; and there he saw Kṛṣṇa amongst the cattle, dark as the leaf of the full blown lotus; his eyes of the same colour, and his breast decorated with the, Śrīvatsa mark; long armed, and broad chested; having a high nose, and a lovely countenance, brightened with mirthful smiles; treading firmly on the ground, with feet whose nails were tinted red; clad in yellow garments, and adorned with a garland of forest flowers; having a fresh-gathered creeper in his hand, and a chaplet of white lotus flowers on his head, Akrūra also beheld there Balabhadra, white as a jasmine, a swan, or the moon, and dressed in blue raiment; having large and powerful arms, and a countenance as radiant as a lotus in bloom; like another Kailāsa mountain, crested with a wreath of clouds.

When Akrūra sow these two youths, his countenance expanded with delight, and the down of his body stood erect with pleasure: for this he thought to be supreme happiness and glory; this, the double manifestation of the divine Vāsudeva; this was the twofold gratification of his sight, to behold the creator of the universe: now he hoped that his bodily form would yield fruit, as it would bring him in contact with the person of Kṛṣṇa; and that the wearer of infinite forms would place his hand on his back; the touch of whose finger alone is sufficient to dispel sin, and to secure imperishable felicity: that hand which launches the fierce irresistible discus, blazing with all the flames of fire, lightning, and the sun, and slaughtering the demon host washes the collyrium from the eyes of their brides: that hand into which Bali poured water, and thence obtained ineffable enjoyments below the earth, and immortality and dominion over the gods for a whole Manvantara, without peril from a foe.

“Alas! he will despise me, for my connexion with Kaṇsa, an associate with evil, though not contaminated by it. How vain is his birth, who is shunned by the virtuous? and yet what is there in this world unknown to him who resides in the hearts of all men, who is ever existent, exempt from imperfection, the aggregate of the quality of purity, and identical with true knowledge? With a heart wholly devoted to him, then, I will approach the lord of all lords, the descended portion of Puruṣoatama, of Viṣṇu, who is without beginning, middle, or end.”

NOTES

1. The commentator explains this to mean Hayagrīva, or Viṣṇu with the neck and head of a horse; who, it is said in the second book of the Bhāgavata, appeared at the end of a great sacrifice performed by Brahmā, and breathed from his nostrils the texts of the Vedas. The fourth Avatāra is always elsewhere said to be the Vāmana, or dwarf.

Thus meditating, the Yādava approached Govinda, and addressed him, and said, "I am Akrūra," and bowed his head down to the feet of Hari; bile Kṛṣṇa laid upon him his hand, which was marked with the flag, the thunderbolt, and the lotus, and drew him

Then Keśava and Rāma entered into conversation with him, and, having heard from him all that had occurred, were much pleased, and led him to their habitation: there they resumed their discourse, and gave him food to eat, and treated him with proper hospitality, Akrūra told them how their father Ānakadundubhi, the princess Devakī and even his own father, Ugrasena, had been insulted by the iniquitous, demon Kañsa: he also related to them the purpose for which he had been dispatched. When he had told them all these things, the destroyer of Keśin said to him, "I was aware of all that you have told me, lord of liberal gifts:

"If Govinda depart for Mathurā, how will he return to Gokula? His ears will there be regaled with the melodious and polished conversation of the women of the city. Accustomed to the language of the graceful females of Mathurā, he will never again endure the rustic expressions of the Gopīs. Hari, the pride of the station, is carried off, and a fatal blow is inflicted upon us by inexorable destiny. Expressive smiles, soft language, graceful airs, elegant gait, and significant glances, belong to the women of the city, Hari is of rustic breeding, and, captivated by their fascinations, what likelihood is there of his returning to the society of any one amongst us?

Keśava, who has mounted the car to go to Mathurā, has been deceived by the cruel, vile, and desperate Akrūra. Does not the unfeeling traitor know the affection that we all here feel for our Hari, the joy of our eyes, that he is taking him away ? Unkind that he is, Govinda is departing from us, along with Rāma: haste! let us stop him ! Why talk of telling our seniors that we cannot bear his loss? What can they do for us, when we are consumed by the fires of separation? The Gopas, with Nanda at their head, are themselves preparing to depart; no one makes any attempt to detain Govinda, Bright is the morning that succeeds to this night for the women of Mathurā, for the bees of their eyes will feed upon the lotus face of Acyuta.

Happy are they who may go hence without impediment, and behold, enraptured, Kṛṣṇa on his Journey. A great festival will give pleasure to-day to the eyes of the inhabitants of Mathurā, when they see the person of Govinda. What a blissful vision will be seen by the happy women of the city, whose brilliant eyes shall regard, unchecked, the countenance of Kṛṣṇa! Alas! the eyes of the Gopīs have been deprived of sight by the relentless Brahmā, after he had shown them this great treasure. In proportion as the affection of Hari for us decays, so do our limbs wither, and the bracelets slip from our arms : and now the cruel Akrūra urges on the horses: all conspire to treat unhappy females with unkindness. Alas ! alas! we see now only the dust of his chariot wheels! and now he is far away, for even that dust is no longer to be seen!"

Thus lamented by the women, Keśava and Rāma quitted the district of Vraja.¹ Travelling in a car drawn by fleet horses, they arrived at noon at the banks of the Yamunā, when Akrūra requested them to halt a little, whilst he performed the usual daily ceremonial in the river.² Accordingly the intelligent Akrūra bathed, and rinsed his mouth, and then entering the stream, he stood meditating upon the supreme being; but he beheld mentally³ Balabhadra, having thousand hooded heads, a garland of Jasmine flowers, and large red eyes, attended by Vāsuki. Rambhā and other mighty serpents, praised by the Gandharvas decorated with wild flowers, wearing dark coloured garments, crowned with a chaplet of lotuses, ornamented with brilliant earrings, Inebriate, and standing at the bottom of the river in the water.⁴ On his lap he also beheld, at his ease, Kṛṣṇa, of the complexion of a cloud,⁵ with full and coppery eyes, having an elegant form, and four hands, armed with the discus and other weapons, wearing yellow clothes, decorated with many coloured flowers, and appearing like a cloud embellished with streams of lightning and the bow of Indra; his breast was marked with the celestial sign, his arms were radiant with bracelets, a diadem shone on his brow, and he wore a white lotus for his crest: he was attended by Sanandana and other holy sages, who, fixing their eyes upon the tips of their noses, were absorbed in profound meditation.

When Akrūra beheld Balarāma and Kṛṣṇa in this situation, he was much amazed, and wondered how they could so quickly have got there from the chariot. He wished to ask them this, but Janārddana deprived him of the faculty of speech at the moment. Ascending then from the water, he repaired to the car, and there he found them both quietly seated in the same human persons as before. Plunging again into the water, there he again beheld them, hymned as before by the Gandharvas, saints, sages, and serpents. Apprehending, therefore, their real character, he thus eulogized the eternal deity, who consists of true knowledge :

"Salutation to you, who is uniform and manifold, all-pervading, supreme spirit, of inconceivable glory, and who are simple existence. Salutation to you, O inscrutable, who are truth, and the essence of oblations. Salutation to you, O lord, whose nature is unknown, who is beyond primeval matter, who exist in five forms, as one with the elements, with the faculties, with matter, with the living soul, with supreme spirit. Show favour to me, O soul of the universe, essence of all things, perishable or eternal, whether addressed by the designation of Brahmā, Viṣṇu, Śiva, or the like. I adore you, O god, whose nature is indescribable, whose purposes are inscrutable, whose name even is unknown; for the attributes of kind or appellation are not applicable to you, who is THAT⁶, the supreme Brahma, eternal, unchangeable, uncreated. But as the accomplishment of our object cannot be attained except through some specific form, you are termed by us Kṛṣṇa, Achyuta, Ananta, or Viṣṇu. You, unborn divinity, are all the objects of these impersonations; you are the gods, and all other beings; you are the whole world; you are all. Soul of the universe you are exempt from change, and there is nothing except you in all this existence. You are Brahmā, Paśupati, Aryaman, Dhātṛī, and Vidhātṛī; you are Indra, air, fire, the regent of the waters, the god of wealth, and judge of the dead; and you, although but one, preside over the world with various energies, addressed to various purposes. You, identical with the solar ray, create the universe; all elementary substance is composed of thy qualities; and thy supreme form is denoted by the imperishable term sat (existence). To him who is one with true knowledge, who is and is not perceptible, I bow. Glory be to him, the lord Vāsudeva, to Śaṅkarṣaṇa, to Pradyumna, and to Aniruddha.⁷

1 In the Bhāgavata, Hari Vaṁśa, etc. several adventures of Kṛṣṇa, during his residence at Vraja, are recorded, of which our text makes no mention. Of these, the two most popular are Kṛṣṇa's taking away the clothes of the Gopīs whilst bathing, and his liberating the Gopas from the mouth of Aghāsura, disguised as a vast serpent, into which they had entered, thinking it a cavern in a mountain. The omission of these two legends, or of any of the rest, is not much to be regretted.

2 The noonday prayer; or-Sandhyā.

3 By his Dhyāna, or force of meditation, in which it is attempted to bring before the mind's eye some definite form of the object of adoration, In this case Akrūra is compelled to see a form he did not anticipate. The Hari Vaṁśa very clumsily sets him to meditate upon the serpent Śesha, which spoils the story, intended as that is to exhibit the identity of Balarāma and Kṛṣṇa with the supreme.

4 Balarāma was thus visible in his real character of Śeṣa, the chief of serpents, the couch of Viṣṇu, and supporter or the world.

5 Or rather, he beheld Ghanaśyāma, an appellation of Kṛṣṇa, who is so called from being as black (śyama) as a cloud (ghana).

6 Tad, 'that'; all that is, or that can be conceived.

7 Akrūra's piety is here prophetic; the son and grandson of Kṛṣṇa (see Bk. IV. Ch. XV.) are not yet born; but this is the Vaiṣṇava style of addressing Kṛṣṇa or Viṣṇu, as identical with four Vyūhas, 'arrangements' or 'dispositions,' Kṛṣṇa, Balarāma, Pradyumna, and Aniruddha. See As. Res. XVI. 35. In this, as in several other places, the Viṣṇu PURĀṇA differs from some of the other narratives of Kṛṣṇa, by the length and character of the prayers addressed to Viṣṇu. The Hari Vaṁśa, for instance, here has no prayer or panegyric at all: the Bhāgavata inserts one.

Thus the Yādava Akrūra, standing in the river, praised Kṛṣṇa, and worshipped him with imaginary incense and flowers. Disregarding all other objects, he fixed his whole mind upon the deity; and having continued for a long time in spiritual contemplation, he at last desisted from his abstraction, conceiving he had effected the purposes of soul. Coming up from the water of the Yamunā, he went to the car, and there he beheld Rāma, and Kṛṣṇa seated as before. As his looks denoted surprise, Kṛṣṇa said to him, "Surely, Akrūra, you have seen some marvel in the stream of the Yamunā, for your eyes are staring as if with astonishment."

Akrūra replied, "The marvel that I have seen in the stream of the Yamunā I behold before me, even here, in a bodily shape; for he whom I have encountered in the water, Kṛṣṇa, is also your wondrous self, of whose illustrious person the whole world is the miraculous developement. But enough of this, let us proceed to Mathurā: I am afraid Kaṅsa will be angry at our delay: such is the wretched consequence of eating the bread of another." Thus speaking, he urged on the quick horses, and they arrived after sunset at Mathurā. When they came in sight of the city, Akrūra said to Kṛṣṇa and Rāma, "You must now journey on foot, whilst I proceed alone in the car; and you must not go to the house of Vāsudeva, for the elder has been banished by Kaṅsa on your account."

Akrūra having thus spoken, left them, and entered the city; whilst Rāma and Kṛṣṇa continued to walk along the royal road. Regarded with pleasure by men and women, they went along sportively, looking like two young elephants. As they roamed about, they saw a washerman colouring clothes, and with smiling countenances they went and threw down some of his fine linen. The washerman was the servant of Kañsa, made insolent by his master's favour; and he provoked the two lads with loud and scurrilous abuse, until Kṛṣṇa struck him down, with his head to the ground, and killed him. Then taking the clothes, they went their way, clad in yellow and blue raiment, until they came to a flower-seller's shop. The flower-seller looked at them with astonishment, and wondered who they could be, or whence they could have come. Seeing two youths so lovely, dressed in yellow and blue garments, he imagined them to be divinities descended upon earth. Being addressed by them with mouths budding like lotuses, and asked for some flowers, he placed his hands upon the ground, and touched it with his head, saying, "My lords have shown me great kindness in coming to my house, fortunate that I am; I will pay them homage."

Having thus spoken, the flower-seller, with a smiling aspect, gave them whatever choice-flowers they selected, to conciliate their favour. Repeatedly prostrating himself before them, he presented them with flowers beautiful, fragrant, and fresh. Kṛṣṇa then, being much pleased with him, gave him this blessing; "Fortune, good friend, who depends upon me, shall never forsake you: never shall you suffer loss of vigour, or loss of wealth: as long as time shall last your descendants shall not fail. Having long tasted various delights on earth, you shall finally obtain, by calling me to recollection, a heavenly region, the consequence of my favour. Your heart shall ever be intent on righteousness, and fulness of days shall be the portion of your posterity. Your descendants shall not be subject to natural infirmities, as long as the sun shall endure."

1 These incidents are told, with some unimportant differences, in the other accounts of Kṛṣṇa's youth.

As they proceeded along the high road, they saw coming towards them a young girl, who was crooked, carrying a pot of unguent, Kṛṣṇa addressed her sportively, and said, "For whom are you carrying that unguent? tell me, lovely maiden; tell me truly." Spoken to as it were through affection, Kubjā well disposed towards Hari, replied to him also mirthfully, being smitten by his appearance; "Know you not, beloved, that I am the servant of Kañsa, and appointed, crooked as I am, to prepare his perfumes. Unguent ground by any other he does not approve of: hence I am enriched through his liberal rewards."

"Take it," answered Kubjā; and she gave them as much of the unguent as was sufficient for their persons; and they rubbed it on various parts of their faces and bodies,¹ till they looked like two clouds, one white and one black, decorated by the many-tinted bow of Indra. Then Kṛṣṇa, skilled in the curative art, took hold of her, under the chin, with the thumb and two fingers, and lifted up her head, whilst with his feet he pressed down her feet; and in this way he made her straight. When she was thus relieved from her deformity, she was a most beautiful woman; and, filled with gratitude and affection, she took Govinda by the garment, and invited him to her house. Promising to come at some other time, Kṛṣṇa smilingly dismissed her, and then laughed aloud on beholding the countenance of Baladeva.²

was hung round with garlands: Inquiring of the warders which bow he was to try, and being directed to it, he took it, and bent it; but drawing it with violence, he snapped it in two,³ and all Mathurā resounded with the noise which its fracture occasioned. Abused by the warders for breaking the bow, Kṛṣṇa and Rāma retorted, and defied them, and left the hall.

“Two youths, cowherd boys, have arrived; you must kill them both, in a trial of strength, in my presence; for they practise against my life. I shall be well pleased if you kill them in the match, and will give you whatever you wish; not else. These two foes of mine must be killed by you fairly or unfairly. The kingdom shall be ours in common, when they have perished.’ Having given them these orders, he sent next for his elephant driver, and desired him to station his great elephant Kuvalayāpīda, who was as vast as a cloud charged with rain, near the gate of the arena, and drive him upon the two boys when they should attempt to enter. When Kañsa had issued these commands, and ascertained that the platforms were all ready for the spectators, he awaited the rising of the sun, unconscious of impending death.

In the morning the citizens assembled on the platforms set apart for them, and the princes, with the ministers and courtiers, occupied the royal, seats. Near the centre of the circle judges of the games were stationed by Kañsa, whilst he himself sat apart close by upon a lofty throne. Separate platforms were erected for the ladies of the palace, for the courtesans, and for the wives of the citizens.⁴ Nanda and the cowherds had places appropriated to them, at the end of which sat Akrūra and Vāsudeva. Amongst the wives of the citizens appeared Devakī, mourning for her son, whose lovely face she longed to behold even in the hour of his destruction. When the musical instruments sounded, Cāṇūra sprang forth, and the people cried, “Alas! I” and Muṣṭika slapped his arms in defiance. Covered with mud and blood from the elephant, whom, when goaded upon them by his driver, they had slain, and armed with his tusks, Balabhadra and Janārddana confidently entered the arena, like two lions amidst a herd of deer.

Exclamations of pity arose from all the spectators, along with expressions of astonishment. "This then," said the people, "is Kṛṣṇa! this is Balabhadra! This is he by whom the fierce night-walker Pūtanā was slain; by whom the waggon was overturned, and the two Arjuna trees felled! This is the boy who trampled and danced on the serpent Kāliya; who upheld the mountain Govarddhana for seven nights; who killed, as if in play, the iniquitous Ariṣṭa, Dhenuka, and Keśin! This whom we see is Acyuta! This is he who has been foretold by the wise, skilled in the sense to the Purāṇas, as Gopala, who shall exalt the the depressed Yādava race! This is a portion of the all-existing, all-generating Viśnu, descended upon earth, who will assuredly lighten her load!"

Thus did the citizens describe Rāma and Kṛṣṇa, as soon as they appeared; whilst the breast of Devakī glowed with maternal affection; and Vāsudeva, forgetting his infirmities, felt himself young again, on beholding the countenances to his sons as a season of rejoicing. The women to the palace, and the wives of the citizens, wide opened their eyes, and gazed intently upon Kṛṣṇa. "Look, friends," said they to their companions; "look at the face of Kṛṣṇa; his eyes are reddened by his conflict with the elephant, and the drops to perspiration stand upon his checks, outvieing a full blown lotus in autumn, Studded with glittering dew. Avail yourself now of the faculty of vision. Observe his breast, the seat of splendour, marked with the mystic sign; and his arms, menacing destruction to his foes.

Do you not notice Balabhadra, dressed in a blue garment; his countenance as fair as the jasmine, as the moon, as the fibres to the lotus seem? See how he gently smiles at the gestures to Muṣṭika and Cāṇūra, as they spring up. And now behold Hari advance to encounter Cāṇūra. What I are there no elders, judges of the field? How can the delicate form of Hari, only yet in the dawn of adolescence, be regarded as a match for the vast and adamantine bulk of the great demon? Two youths, of light and elegant persons, are in the arena, to oppose athletic fiends, headed by the cruel Cāṇūra. This is a great sin in the judges of the games, for the umpires to suffer a contest between boys and strong men."

As thus the women of the city conversed with one another, Hari, having tightened his girdle, danced in the ring, shaking the ground on which he told, Balabhadra also danced, slapping his arms in defiance. Where the ground was firm, the invincible Kṛṣṇa contended foot to foot with Cāṇūra. The practised demon Muṣṭika was opposed by Balabhadra. Mutually entwining, and pushing, and pulling, and beating each other with fists, arms, and elbows, pressing each other with their knees, interlacing their arms, kicking with their feet, pressing with their whole weight upon one another,⁵ fought Hari and Cāṇūra. Desperate was the struggle, though without weapons, and one for life and death, to the great gratification of the spectators. In proportion as the contest continued, so Cāṇūra was gradually losing something of his original vigour, and the wreath upon his head trembled from his fury and distress⁶; whilst the world-comprehending Kṛṣṇa wrestled with him as if but in sport. Beholding Cāṇūra losing, and Kṛṣṇa gaining strength, Kaṁsa, furious with rage, commanded the music to cease. As soon as the drums and trumpets were silenced, a numerous band of heavenly instruments was heard in the sky, and the gods invisibly exclaimed, "Victory to Govinda! Keśava, kill the demon Cāṇūra! Madhusūdana having for a long time dallied with his adversary, at last lifted him up, and whirled him round, with the intention of putting an end to him. Having whirled Cāṇūra round a hundred times, until his breath was expended in the air, Kṛṣṇa dashed him on the ground with such violence as to smash his body into a hundred fragments, and strew the earth with a hundred pools of gory mire. Whilst this took place, the mighty Baladeva was engaged in the same manner with the demon bruiser Muṣṭika. Striking him on the head with his fists, and on the breast with his knees, he stretched him on the ground, and pummelled him there till he was dead.

Again, Kṛṣṇa encountered the royal bruiser Tomalaka, and felled him to the earth with a blow to his left hand. When the other athlete saw Cāṇūra, Muṣṭika, and Tomalaka killed, they fled from the field; and Kṛṣṇa and Saṅkarṣaṇa danced victorious on the arena, dragging along with them by force the cowherds of their own age. Kaṇsa, his eyes reddening with wrath, called aloud to the surrounding people, "Drive those two cow" boys out of the assembly: seize the villain Nanda, and secure him with chains of iron: put Vasudeva to death with tortures intolerable to his years: and lay hands upon the cattle, and whatever else belongs to those cowherds who are the associates of Kṛṣṇa."

Upon hearing these orders, the destroyer of Madhu laughed at Kaṇsa, and, springing up to the place where he was seated, laid hold of him by the hair of his head, and struck his tiara to the ground: then casting him down upon the earth, Govinda threw himself upon him. Crushed by the weight of the upholder of the universe, the son of Ugrasena, Kaṇsa the king, gave up the ghost, Kṛṣṇa then dragged the dead body, by the hair of the head, into the centre of the arena, and a deep furrow' was made by the vast and heavy carcass of Kaṇsa, when it was dragged along, the ground by Kṛṣṇa, as if a torrent of water had ran through it.⁷ Seeing Kaṇsa thus treated, his brother Sumālin came to his succour; but he was encountered, and easily killed, by Balabhadra. Then arose a general cry of grief from the surrounding circle, as they beheld the king of Mathurā thus slain, and treated with such contumely, by Kṛṣṇa. Kṛṣṇa, accompanied by Balabhadra, embraced the feet to Vasudeva and of Devakī; but Vasudeva raised him up; and he and Devakī recalling to recollection what he had said to them at his birth, they bowed to Janārddana, and the former thus addressed him:

Have compassion therefore indeed, O supreme lord, and in thy descended portions protect the universe. You are no son of mine. This whole world, from Brahma to a tree, you are. Wherefore do you, who are one with the supreme, beguile us? Blinded by delusion, I thought you my son ; and for you, who are beyond all fear, I dreaded the anger of Kaṅsa, and therefore did I take you in my terror to Gokula, where you have grown up; but I no longer claim you as mine own. You, Viṣṇu, the sovereign lord of all, whose actions Rudra, the Maruts, the Aśvins, Indra, and the gods, cannot equal, although they behold them; you who has come amongst us for 'the benefit of the world, are recognised, and delusion is no more."

NOTES

1 They had their bodies smeared in the style called Bhaktichheda (भक्तिच्छेदानुलिपाङ्गे); that is, with the separating or distinguishing (cheda) marks of Vaiśṇava devotion (bhakti) : certain streaks on the forehead, nose, cheeks, breast, and arms, which denote a follower of Visnu. See As.Res.XVI.33.

2 The story is similarly told in the Bhāgavata, etc.

3 The bending or breaking of a bow is a favourite incident in Hindu heroic poetry, borrowed, no doubt, from the Rāmāyaṇa, where, however, it has an object: here it is quite gratuitous.

4 The Bhāgavata enters into even fewer particulars than our text of the place set apart for the games. The Hari Vamśa gives a much more detailed description, which is in some respects curious. The want of any technical glossary, and the general manner in which technical terms are explained in the ordinary dictionaries, reader it difficult to understand exactly what is intended, and any translation to the passages must be defective. The French version, however, probably represents a much more splendid and theatrical scene-than the text authorizes, and may therefore admit of correction. The general plan is nothing more than an enclosed space, surrounded by temporary structures of timber or bamboos, open or enclosed, and decorated with hangings and garlands. It may be doubted if the details described by the compiler of the Hari Vamśa were very familiar even to him; for his description is not always very consistent or precise. Of two commentators, one evidently knows nothing of what he attempts to explain; but with the assistance of the other the passages may be thus, though not always confidently, rendered:

"The king, Kānsa, meditating on these things, went forth from his palace to the place which had been prepared for the sight of the ceremonial (1). to inspect the scaffolds (2). which had been constructed. He found the place close set with the several platforms (3), of the different public bodies (4), strongly put together, and decorated with roofed pavilions of various sizes, supported by columns, and divided into commodious chambers (5). The edifice was extensive, well arranged, secured by strong rafters (6) spacious and lofty, and commodious and secure. Stairs led to the different galleries (7). Chairs to state (8) were placed in various parts of it. The avenues that conducted to it were narrow (9). It was covered with temporary stages and sheds (10), and was capable of sustaining the weight of a multitude.

Having seen the place to the festival thus adorned, Kama gave orders, and said, To-morrow let the platforms and terraces and pavilions (11) be decorated with pictures and garlands and flags and images (12), and let them be scented with fragrant odours, and covered over with awnings (13). Let there be ample heaps of dry, pounded cow-dung (14) provided on the ground, and suitable refreshment chambers be covered over, and decorated with bells and ornamented arches (15). Let large water-jars be securely fixed in order, capable of holding a copious supply, and provided with golden drinking-cups. Let apartments be prepared (16), and various kinds of beverage, in appropriate vessels, be ready. Let judges of the games be invited, and corporations with their chiefs. Let orders be issued to the wrestlers, and notice be given to the spectators; and let platforms for their accommodation be fitted up in the place of assembly" (17).

When the meeting takes place, the site of the games is thus described: "Upon the following day the amphitheatre (18) was filled by the citizens, anxious to behold the games. The place of assembly(19) was supported by octagonal painted pillars (20), fitted up with terraces and doors and bolts, with windows circular or crescent; shaped, and accommodated with seats with cushions (21). and it shone like the ocean whilst large clouds hang upon it, with spacious, substantial pavilions (22), fitted up for the sight of the combat; open to the front (23). but screen'd with beautiful and fine curtains (24), crowned with festoons of flowers, and glistening with radiance like autumnal clouds. The pavilions of the different companies and corporations, vast as mountains, were decorated with banners, bearing upon them the implements and emblems of the several crafts (25). The chambers of the inhabitants of the inner apartments shone near at hand, bright with gold and painting and net-work of gems: they were richly decorated with precious stones, were enclosed below with costly hanging, and ornamented above with spires and banners, and looked like mountains spreading their wings in the sky; while the rays of light reflected from the valuable of jewel were blended with the waving of white chowries, and the musical tinkling of female ornaments. The separate pavilions of the courtesans were graced by lovely women, attired in the most splendid dresses (27), and emulated the radiance of the cars of the gods, In the place of assembly there were excellent seats, couches made of gold, and hangings of various colours, intermixed with bunches of flowers: and there were golden vases of water, and handsome places for refreshment, filled with fruits of various kinds, and cooling juices, and sherbets fit for drinking (28). And there were many other stages and platforms, constructed of strong timber, and hangings by hundreds and thousands were displayed: and upon the tops of the houses, chambers fitted up with delicate jalousies, through which the women might behold the sports, appeared like swans flying through the air,

"In front stood the pavilion of Kañsa, surpassing all the rest in splendour, looking like mount Meru in radiance; its sides, its columns, being covered with burnished gold : fastened with coloured cords; and every way worthy the presence of a king."

In justification of the rendering of the above, an explanation of the technical terms, taken either from dictionaries or from the commentators, may be subjoined. (1) Kañsa went to the Prekṣāgāra (प्रेक्षागारं), literally 'house of seeing,' but it is evident, from its interior being visible to spectators on the tops of the houses, as subsequently mentioned, that it was not a theatre, or covered edifice. If a building at all, it was merely a sort of stockade. One commentator calls it, 'a place made for seeing the sacrifice; अनुर्भवेक्षणार्थं कृतं स्थानं.' (2) Mañchānām avalokaka (मञ्चानंमवलोककः). The Mañchā is commonly understood to signify a raised platform, with a floor and a roof, ascended by a ladder: see Dictionary, (3) Mañcha-vāta (मञ्चवातः). Vāta is either 'site' or 'inclosure,' and is used here without much affecting the sense of Mañcha. The compound is explained by the commentators, 'prepared places' (रचितभूमयः), or 'the sites of the platforms' (पञ्चभूमयः). (4) The Śrenīs (श्रेणीनि), associations of artificers practising the same art. One of the commentaries understands the term to be here used to denote, not their station, but their labours: 'The structure was the work of the artificers' (श्रेणीनां प्रयत्नः). (5) Several words occur here of technical import. The passage is, सोत्रमाणा रथुक्पिर्वलभिर्विभूषितं कुरीभिश्चप्रवृद्धिरेक स्तम्भैश्चभूषितं Valabhi is said by the commentator to mean a structure with a pent roof, supported by six columns, Kusī, a circular one, having seven roofs—something perhaps like a Chinese pagoda—and four columns. The Eka-stambha is a chamber, supported by one column: बलभीभिरुभयतो नमत्पक्षद्वयाभिः छदीभिः षट् स्तम्भामिः। कुटीभिश्चप्रवृद्धाभिः कोष्ठकैः ससङ्दिक्षतुस्तम्भैः॥ (6)

Sāraniryūham (सारनिर्यूहं)- It is difficult to understand the necessity of rafters in an inclosure in which the platforms and stages seem to have been erected independently of any floor or wall: but the commentary explains Niryyūha, strong brackets, projecting from a house: सारनिर्यूहं इडतागदत्ताः गृहत्रिप्रतादारूणि। (7) Aslisnta susliṣṭa manchārohanam. The first epithet is explained, 'not contracted' (असंकुचितं); the second, 'well constructed' (साधुचितं); and for the 'ascending' (Ārohanam) we have सोपानपंकिर्यत्र 'where was a line of steps,' or 'ladders'. There is another reading to the text, however, which may be rendered, 'Having steps well secured in their ascent above' (उदक् प्रवणसुश्लिलं मञ्चारोहणं). (8)

'Seats for king' (नृपसनानि). (9) Such is the literal purport of Sañcāra-patha-sankulam (संचारपथसंकुलं), implying, possibly, the formation of passages by fences on either side. (10) This is doubtful: the phrase is (उत्रं तद्विकाभिः) Channam-tad-vedikābhī. Channam means, literally, 'covered,' and can scarcely be used in the sense of 'overspread or filled with.' Vedikā means an elevated floor or terrace, with which a halt or edifice cannot well be 'covered ;' and therefore requires the sense here given to Channa. The commentators are silent. (11) The Mancavāṭas and Valabhis, as above : the other term is Vithi, "a shop." 'a terrace,' 'a road.' (12) Let them be Vapuṣmanta (वपुष्मन्तः); 'having painted or sculptured figures' (चित्रयुक्तादि युक्ताः). The other commentary render it merely 'pleasant' or 'agreeable' (सुहर्षीयाः). (13) 'Covered above with cloths' (उपनीतोत्तरच्छदाः). The use of the awning or Samiana is very common in India. (14) For the wrestlers to rub over their bodies to absorb the perspiration (मल्लानां स्वेदोन्मार्जनार्थं). (15) This is all rather questionable: the passage is most usually, चण्टस्तोरणशोभाश्च वलयशानुरूपतः। Vali or Ball in one sense means 'the edge of a thatch,' and may be put for some sort of temporary structure, a kind of retiring or refreshment room for the boxers and wrestlers. In some copies it is read, पटास्तरणशोभाः: 'beautiful with clothes spread,' on which the performers may sit when disengaged ; perhaps a sort of carpet on the ground. (16) The expression is again Vali (वलयशोपकल्पताः). Another sense of the word is.

offering of viands, or of the remains of a sacrifice, to all beings; but that cannot be its purport here; nor is it ever used in the sense of viands in general. The verb Kalpa or Kīrip also usually implies 'making.' (17) Mañcavāta ; 'in the Samāja,' or 'assembly.' (18) Mahāraṅga (महारङ्ग) 'the great place of the performance.' Raṅga is 'acting' or 'representation.' also the place or site of it (19) All the copies consulted, except one, offer an irregularity of construction, which, although defended by the commentators, is a license scarcely allowable. The epithets of the first verse are all in the plural number; they then occur in the singular, to agree with the only substantive in the description, Samājavāṭa. According to the commentaries, the plural term Mañcās (मंचः) understood is the substantive to the epithets of the first stanza, and Samājavāṭa the singular to those of the other verses. This awkwardness is however avoided by the reading of an old and very good copy, which puts it all in the singular; as, सचित्राणांश्चरणः सार्गलद्वारवेदिकः सगवासार्द्धचन्द्रश्च सत्त्वोत्तमभूषितः। (20) The expression is Charaṇa, literally 'foot ;' explained by the commentator, Stambha, 'post' or 'pillar.' (21) The reading of most of the copies is Śayanottama (शयनोत्तमः), which may be taken as the sense of Talottama. 'couches or benches with cushions.' (22) Mañcāgārais (मञ्चागारै), 'temporary houses.' (23) Or 'fronting to the east' (प्राङ् मुखैः). (24) Nirmuktais (निर्मुक्तैः): explained by the commentator to mean 'fine threads, "network," or 'gauze.' through which persons, females especially, may see without being seen. (25) स्वकर्मद्व व्युक्ताभिः पताकाभिः। (26) 'With ridges and projections' (सारुप्रगृहणि). The commentator explains this, 'with flags on the top of them (उपि देशे सप्तकानि). (27) This appears to be intended for an epithet of the women, although Āstaraṇa is not usually applied to dreas: आस्तरणाम्बरै शोभिता वारमुखाभिः। (21) फलावदराष्ट्राणीश चाङ्गेर्यः पानयोजिताः। Phala to course, is 'fruit' Avadānśa is explained in lexicons, 'what is eaten to excite thirst :' one comment gives it, 'what may be sucked,' as tamarinds, and the like. Chāngeri is explained, 'fluids for drinking, made with sorrel, or acid fruits; ' that is, sherbets. (29) उत्तमागारिका or उत्तरागारिका is an epithet of the Preksāgāra, or look-out house of the women (स्त्रीणां प्रेक्ष्यगृहाः), situated on the tops of their houses, according to the commentators; गृहोपरि गृहं यत् तदुत्तमागारं तत्रभवाः प्रेक्ष्यगृहाः। an arrangement very compatible with the form of Indian houses, which have flat roofs, commonly enclosed by a trellis work, or jalousie of masonry. It is observable, that in the Viśnu Purāṇa, and in the Mahābhārata, on various public occasions, the women take their places on the platforms, or in the pavilions, without curtains or screens.

5 The terms here used are technical, and refer to the established modes of wrestling amongst Hindu athlete. 1. Sannipāta (सन्निपातः) is described 'mutual laying hold of.' 2. Avadūta (अवदूतः), 'letting go of the adversary.' 3. Kṣepaṇa (क्षेपणं), 'pulling to, and casting back.' 4. Muṣṭinipāta (मुष्टिनिपातः), 'striking with fists.' 5. Kīlanipāta (कीलनिपातः), 'striking with the elbow.' 6. Vajranipāta (वज्रनिपातः), 'striking with the fore-arm.' 7. Jānunirghāta (जानुनिर्घातः), 'pressing or 'striking with the knees.' 8. Bāhuvighāṭana (बाहुविघटनं), "interlacing the arms." 9. Pādoddhūta (पादोद्धूत), 'kicking.' 10. Prasṛṣṭā (प्रसृष्टा) 'intertwining of the whole body.' In some copies another term occurs, Aśmaoirghāta (अश्मनिर्घातः). 'striking with stones,' or, striking blows as hard as with stones; for stones could scarcely be used in a contest specified as 'onc without weapons' (अशस्त्रं युद्धं)

6 Krṣṇa contended with Chānūra, 'who through distress and anger shook the flowers of his crest; खेदाच्चालयता कोपान्तिजशेखकेशः। The two last terms are explained. 'the flower of the wreath on his head:' स्वशीर्णीडभूतं युञ्जन्ते।

7. Et latus median sulcus diducit arenam. 'The yielding sand being furrowed into a ditch or water-course, by the dead bodies being dragged over it. The text is गौरवेणातिमहता परिखा तेन कृष्यता। कृता कंसस्य देहेन चेनेव महाभसः॥

Having permitted to Devakī and Vasudeva an interval of true knowledge, through the contemplation of his actions, Hari again spread the delusions of his power over them and the tribe of Yadu. He said to them, "Mother; venerable father; you have both been long observed by Sankarṣaṇa and myself with sorrow, and in fear of Kaṇṭha. He whose time passes not in respect to his father and mother, is a vile being, who descends in vain from virtuous parents. The lives of those produce good fruit, who reverence their parents, their spiritual guides, the Brāhmaṇas, and the gods. Pardon therefore, father, the impropriety of which we may have been culpable, in resenting without your orders, to which we acknowledge that we are subject, the oppression we suffered from the power and violence of Kaṇṭha."

Thus speaking, they offered homage to the elders of the Yadu tribe in order, and then in a suitable manner paid their respects to the citizens. The wives of Kaṇṭha, and those of his father, then surrounded the body to the king, lying on the ground, and bewailed his fate in deep affliction, Hari in various ways expressed his regret for what had chanced, and endeavoured to console them, his own eyes being suffused with tears. The foe of Madhu then liberated Ugrasena from confinement, and placed him on the throne, which the death of his son had left vacant. The chief of the Yādavas, being crowned, performed the funeral rites of Kaṇṭha, and of the rest of the slain. When the ceremony was over, and Ugrasena had resumed his royal seat, Kṛṣṇa addressed him, and said, "Sovereign lord, command boldly what else is to be done. The curse of Yayāti has pronounced our race unworthy of dominion:¹ but with me, for your servant, you may issue your orders to the gods. How should kings disobey them?"

The two excellent Yadu youths, versed in all knowledge, and possessed of all wisdom, then submitted to instruction, as the disciples of teacher.

Accocdingly they repaired to Śāndīpani—who, though born in Kāśī, resided at Avanti—to study the science of arms, and, becoming his pupils, were obedient and attentive to their master, exhibiting an example to all men of the observance of instituted rules. In the course to sixty-four days they had gone through the elements to military science, with the treatises on the use of arms, and directions for the mystic incantacions, which secure the aid of supernatural weapons,² Śāndīpani, astonished at such proficiency, and knowing that it exceeded human faculties, imagined that the sun and moon had become his scholars. When they had acquired all that he could teach, they said to him, "Now say what present shall be given to you, as the preceptor's fee." The prudent Śāndīpani, perceiving that they were endowed with more then mortal powers, requested them to give him his dead son, drowned in the sea of Prabhāsa.³ Taking up their arms, they marched against the ocean; but the all-comprehending sea said to them, " I have not killed the son of Śāndīpani; a demon named Panchajana, who lives in the form of a conch shell, seized the boy: he is still under my waters.

On hearing this, Kṛṣṇa plunged into the sea; and having slain the vile Panchajana, he took the conch shell, which was formed of his bones (and bore it as his horn), the sound of which fills the demon hosts with dismay, animates the vigour of the gods, and annihilates unrighteousness. The heroes also recovered the boy from the pains of death, and restored him in his former person to his father, Rāma and Janārddana then returned to Mathurā, which was well presided over by Ugrasena, and abounded in a happy population both of men and women.⁴

3 Prabhāṣa is a place of pilgrimage in the west of India, on the coast of Guzerat, near the temple of Somanāth, and town of Pattan Somanath. It is also known by the name of Soma-tīrtha; Soma, or the moon, having been here cured of the consumption brought upon him by the imprecation of Dakṣa, his father-in-law, Mahābhārata, Śalya Parva.

4 The incidents of the two last chapters are related in the Bhāgavata and Hari Vaṃśa, often in the words of the text, but with many embellishments and additions, especially in the latter. The Brahma Vaivartta, on the other hand, makes still shorter work of these occurrences than our text Parāśara said— The mighty Kānsa had married the two daughters of Jarāsandha, one named Astī, the other Prāptī, Jarāsandha was king of Magadha, and a very 'powerful prince;¹ who, when he heard that Krṣṇa had killed his son-in-law, was much incensed, and, collecting a large force, marched against Mathurā determined to put the Yādavas and krṣṇa to the sword. Accordingly he invested the city with three and twenty numerous divisions of his forces² Rāma and Janārddana sallied from the town with a slender, but resolute force, and fought bravely with the armies of Magadha. The two youthful leaders prudently resolved to have recourse to their ancient weapons, and accordingly the bow of Hari, with two quivers filled with exhaustless arrows, and the mace called Kaumodaki, and the ploughshare of Balabhadra, as well as the club Saunanda, descended at a wish from heaven. Armed with these weapons, they speedily discomfited the king of Magadha and his hosts, and re-entered the city in triumph.

Although the wicked king of Magadha, Jarāsandha, was defeated, yet Kṛṣṇa knew that whilst he escaped alive he was not subdued, and in fact he soon returned with a mighty force, and was again forced by Rāma and Kṛṣṇa to fly. Eighteen times³ did the haughty prince of Magadha renew his attack upon the Yādavas, headed by Kṛṣṇa; and was as often defeated and put to the rout by them, with very inferior numbers.

That the Yādavas were not overpowered by their foes, was owing to the present might of the portion of the discusarmed Viśṇu. It was the pastime of the lord of the universe, in his capacity of man, to launch various weapons against his enemies; for what effort of power to annihilate his foes could be necessary to him, whose fiat creates and destroys the world? but as subjecting himself to human customs, he formed alliances with the brave, and engaged in hostilities with the base. He had recourse to the four devices of policy, or negotiation, presents, sowing dissension, and chastisement; and sometimes even betook himself to flight. Thus imitating the conduct of human beings, the lord of the world pursued at will his sports.

Parāśara-Syāla having called Gārgya the Brahman, whilst at the cow-pens, impotent, in an assembly of the Yādavas, they all laughed; at which he was highly offended, and repaired to the shores of the western sea, where be engaged in arduous penance to obtain a son, who should be terror to the tribe of Yadu. Propitiating Mahādeva, and living upon iron sand for twelve years, the deity at last was pleased with him, and gave him the desired boon. The king of the Yavanas, who was childless, became the friend of Gārgya; and the latter begot a son by his wife, who was as black as a bee, and was thence called Kālayavana¹.

The Yavana king having placed his son, whose breast was as hard as the point of the thunderbolt, upon the throne, retired to the woods. Inflated with conceit of his prowess, Kālayavana demanded of Nārada who were the most mighty heroes on earth. To which the sage answered, "The Yādavas." Accordingly Kālayavana assembled many myriads of Mlechhas and barbarians², and with a vast armament of elephants, cavalry, chariot, and foot, advanced impatiently against Mathurā and the Yādavas, wearying every day the animals that carried him, but insensible of fatigue himself.

When Kṛṣṇa knew of his approach, he reflected that if the Yādavas encountered the Yavana, they would be so much weakened by the conflict, that they would then be overcome by the king of Magadha; that their force was much reduced by the war with Magadha, whilst that of Kālayavana was unbroken, and that the enemy might be therefore victorious. Thus the Yādavas were exposed to a double danger. He resolved therefore to construct a citadel for the Yadu tribe, that should not be easily taken; one 'that even women might defend, and in which therefore the heroes of the house of Vṛiṣṇi should be secure; one in which the male combatants of the Yādavas should dread no peril, though he himself should be drunk or careless, asleep or abroad, thus reflecting, Kṛṣṇa solicited a space of twelve furlongs from the ocean, and there he built the city of Dwārakā³, defended by high ramparts, and beautified with gardens and reservoirs of water, crowded with houses and buildings, and splendid as the capital of Indra, Amarāvatī. Thither Janārddana conducted the inhabitants of Mathurā, and then awaited at that city the approach of Kālayavana.

When the hostile army encamped round Mathurā Kṛṣṇa unarmed went forth, and beheld the Yavana king, Kālayavana, the strong-armed, recognizing Vāsudeva, pursued him; him whom the thoughts of perfect ascetics connot overtake. Thus pursued, Kṛṣṇa entered a large cavern, where Mucukunda, the king of men, was asleep. The rash Yavana entering the cave, and beholding a man lying asleep there, concluded it must be Kṛṣṇa and kicked him; at which Mucukunda awoke, and casting on him an angry glance, the Yavana was instantly consumed, and reduced to ashes. For in a battle between the gods and demons, Mucukunda had formerly contributed to the defeat of the latter; and, being overcome with sleep, he solicited of the gods as a boon that he should enjoy a long repose. "Sleep long and soundly," said the gods; "and whoever disturbs you shall be instantly burnt to ashes by fire emanating from your body⁴."

Having burnt up the iniquitous Yavana, and beholding the foe of Madhu, Mucukunda asked him who he was, "I am born," he replied, "in the lunar race, in the tribe of Yadu, and am the son of Vāsudeva." Muchukuda, recollecting the prophecy of old Garga fell down before the lord of all, Hari, saying, "You are known, supreme lord, to be a portion of Viśṇu; for it was said of old by Garga, that at the end of the twenty-eighth Dwāpara age Hari would be born in the family of Yadu. You are he, without doubt, the benefactor of mankind; for thy glory I am unable to endure. Thy words

You are the oceans, the mountains, the rivers, the forests: you are earth, sky, air, water, and fire: you are mind, intelligence, the unevolved principle, the vital airs, the lord of life—the soul; all that is beyond the soul; the all-pervading; exempt from the vicissitudes of birth; devoid of sensible properties, sound and the like: undecaying, illimitable, imperishable, subject neither to increase nor diminution: you are that which is Brahma, without beginning or end. From you the immortals, the progenitors, the Yakṣas, Gandharbas, and kinnaras, the Siddhas, the nymphs of heaven, men, animals, birds, deer, reptiles, and all the vegetable world, proceed; and all that has been, or will be, or is now, moveable or fixed. All that is amorphous or has form, all that is subtile, gross, stable, or moveable, you are, O

The gods themselves, though high in heaven, were in need of my alliance. Where then is everlasting repose? Who without adoring you, who are the origin of all worlds, shall attain, O supreme deity, that rest which endures for ever? Beguiled by thy delusions, and ignorant of thy nature, men, after suffering the various penalties of birth, death and infirmity, behold the countenance of the king of ghosts, and suffer in hell dreadful tortures, the reward of their own deeds. Addicted to sensual objects, through thy delusions I revolve in the whirlpool of selfishness and pride; and hence I come to you, as my final refuge, who are the lord deserving of all homage, than whom there is no other asylum; my mind afflicted with repentance for my trust in the world, and desiring the fulness of felicity, emancipation from all existence."

1. This legend of the origin of Kālayavana is given also by the Hari Vaṁśa. The Bhāgavata, like our text, comes at once to the siege of Mathurā by this chief; but the Hari Vaṁśa suspends the story, for more than thirty chapters, to narrate an origin of the Yādavas, and sundry adventures of Kṛṣṇa and Rāma to the south-west. Most of these have no other authority, and are no doubt inventions of the Dakhini compiler; and the others are misplaced.

2. So the Bhāgavata describes him as leading a host of Mlecchas, or barbarians, against Kṛṣṇa: but in the Mahābhārata, Sabhā Parvan, where Kṛṣṇa describes the power of Jarāsandha, he admits that he and the Yādavas fled from Mathurā to the west, through fear of that king, but no account is given of any siege of Mathurā, by Kālayavana. The only indication of such a person is the mention that Bhagadatta, the Yavana king, 'who rules over Muru and Naraka in the west and south, is one of his most attached feudatories. This king is in various other places called king to Prāgyotish, as he is in a subsequent passage of the same book, Sabhā P.; and this name is always applied to the west of Assam. His subjects are, however, still Yavanas and Mlecchas, and he presents horses, caps set with jewels, and swords with ivory hilts', articles scarcely to be found in Assam, which cannot well be the seat of his sovereignty. It seems most likely therefore that the story may have originated in some knowledge of the power and position of the Greek-Bactrian princes, or their Scythian successors, although in the latter compilations it has been mixed up with allusions to the first Mohammedan aggressions. See As, Res. V. 306. and XV 100.

3. According to the Mahābhārata, he only enlarged and fortified the ancient city of Kuśasthalī, founded by Raivata, Sabbā P.: see also Bk. IV. Ch. I of our text.

4. The name of Mucukunda, as one of the sons of Maṇḍhātri occurs in Bk. IV. Ch. II.; but no further notice is taken of him. The Bhāgavata specifies his being the son of that King, and relates the same story of his long sleep as the text. The same occurs in the Hari Vamṣa. The general character of the legends in this chapter is that of reference to something familiar, rather than its narration, In the Hari Vamṣa the opposite extreme is observable, and there the legends are as prolix as here they are concise. The Bhāgavata follows a middle course; but it seems unlikely that in either of the three we have the original fables.

you wish, lord of men, possessed of might irresistible, honoured by my favour. When you have fully enjoyed all heavenly pleasures, you shall be born in a distinguished family, retaining the recollection to your former births; and you shall finally obtain emancipation."

Kṛṣṇa having by this stratagem destroyed his enemy, returned to Mathurā, and took captive his army, rich in horses, elephants and cars, which he conducted to Dvārakā, and delivered to Ugrasena, and the Yadu race was relieved from all fear of invasion. Baladeva, when hostilities had entirely ceased, being desirous of seeing his kinsmen, went to Nanda's cow-pens, and there again conversed with the herdsmen and their females, with affection and respect. By some, the elders, he was embraced; others, the juniors, he embraced and with those of his own age, male or female, he talked and laughed. The cow herds made many kind speeches to Halayudha; but some of the Gopīs spoke to him with the affectation of anger, or with feelings of jealousy, as they inquired after the loves of Kṛṣṇa with the women of Mathurā. "Is all well with the fickle and inconstant Kṛṣṇa ?" said they: "Does the volatile swain, the friend of an instant, amuse the women of the city by laughing at our rustic efforts (to please him)? Does he ever think of us, singing in chorus to his songs ? Will he not come here once again to see his mother ? But why talk of these things? it is a different tale to tell for him without us, and for us without him.

With the cowherds he talked mirthfully, as he had been wont to do, and rambled along with them over the lands of Vraja.¹

1. This visit of Balarāma to Vraja is placed by the Hari Vaṁśa anterior to the fall of Mathurā; by the Bhāgavata, long subsequent to the establishment of the Yadus at Dvārakā.

Whilst the mighty Śeṣa¹ the upholder of the globe, was thus engaged in wandering amidst the forests with the herdsmen, in the disguise of a mortal—having rendered great services to earth, and still considering what more was to be achieved—Varuṇa, in order to provide for his recreation, said to his wife Vāruṇī (the goddess of wine). You, Madirā, are ever acceptable to the powerful Ananta; go therefore, auspicious and kind goddess, and promote his enjoyments." Obeying these commands, Vāruṇī went and established herself in the hollow of a Kadamba tree in the woods of Vṛndāvana, Baladeva, roaming about, came there, and smelling the pleasant fragrance of liquor, resumed his ancient passion for strong drink. The holder of the ploughshare observing the vinous drops distilling from the Kadamba tree, was much delighted, and gathered and quaffed them² along with the herdsmen and the Gopīs, whilst those who were skilful with voice and lute celebrated him in their songs. Being inebriated with the wine, and the drops of perspiration standing like pearls upon his limbs, he called out, not knowing what he said, "Come hither, Yamunā river, I want to bathe." The river, disregarding the words to a drunken man, came not at his bidding: on which Rāma in a rage took up his ploughshare, which he plunged into her bank, and dragged her to him, calling out, "Will you not come, You jade? Will you not come? Now go where you please (if you can)." Thus saying, he compelled the dark river to quit its ordinary course, and follow him whithersoever he wandered through the wood.

1 The great serpent, of whom Balarāma is an incarnation.

2 There is no vinous exudation from the Kadamba tree (Nauclea Kadamba), but its flowers are said to yield a spirit by distillation ; whence Kādambarī is one the synonyms of wine, or spirituous liquour. The grammarians, however, also derive the word from some legend, stating it to be so called because it was produced from the hollow of a Kadamba tree on the Gomantha mountain: गोमन्थपत्त्वं कदम्बकोटराज्ञाता। The Hari Vaṁśa, which alone makes the Gomantha mountain the scene of an exploit of Kṛṣṇa and Rāma, makes no mention of this origin of wine; and the Bhāgavata merely says that Vārunī took up her abode in the hollow of a tree. There must be some other authority therefore for this story.

3 The Bhāgavata and Hari Vaṁśa repeat this story; the latter very imperfectly : the former adds, that the Yamunā is still to be seen following the course along which she was dragged by Balarāma. The legend probably alludes to the construction of canals from the Jumna, for the purposes of irrigation; and the works of the Mohammedans in this way, which are well known, were no doubt preceded by similar canals dug by order of Hindu princes. 4 See Bk. IV. Ch. XIV.

Bhiṣmaka was king of Vidarbha, residing at Kuṇḍina.¹ He had a son named Rukmin, and a beautiful daughter named Rukmiṇī, Kṛṣṇa fell in love with the latter, and solicited her in marriage; but her brother who hated Kṛṣṇa, would not assent to the espousals. At the suggestion to Jarāsandha, and with the concurrence of his son, the powerful sovereign Bhiṣmaka affianced Rukmiṇī to Śiśupāla. In order to celebrate the nuptials, Jarāsandha and other princes, the friends of Śiśupāla, assembled in the capital of Vidarbha; and Kṛṣṇa, attended by Balabhadra and many other Yādavas, also went to Kuṇḍina to witness the wedding. When there, Hari contrived, on the eve of the unptials, to carry off the princess,² leaving Rāma and his kinsmen to sustain the weight of his enemies. Paundraka, the illustrious Dantavakra, Viduratha, Śīśupāla, demon Sambara carried him off, but he slew Jarāsandha, Śalya, and other kings, indignant at the insult, exerted themselves to kill Kṛṣṇa, but were repelled by Balarāma and the Yēdavas.

2 When she had gone forth from the city to worship Ambikā: Bhāgavata. Indrāṇī, the wife of Indra: Hari Vaṁśa. Our text tells the circumstance more concisely than the others.

3 After depriving him of his eyebrows and hair. In the Bhāgavata, Balarāma also interferes in favour of Rukmin, and reproves Kṛṣṇa for disfiguring him.

4 Of course this was somewhere in the neighbourhood of Kuṇḍina or Vidarbha, and usually supposed to be situated on the Narmadā.

5 That is, by violence: thus Manu: "The seizure of a maiden by force, whilst she weeps and calls for assistance, after her kinsmen and friends have been slain in battle, or wounded, and their houses broken open, is the marriage called Rākṣasa." III. 33. According to the Bhāgavata, Rukmini sends to invite Kṛṣṇa to carry her off, and instruct him how to proceed.

Maitreya said—How, Muni, happened it that the hero Pradyumna was carried away by Sambara? and in what manner was the mighty Sambara killed by Pradyumna?

Parāśara replied—When Pradyumna was but six days old, he was stolen from the lying-in chamber by Sambara, terrible as death; for the demon foreknew that Pradyumna, if he lived, would be his destroyer. Taking away the boy, Sambara cast him into the ocean, swarming with monsters, into a whirlpool of roaring waves, the haunt of the huge creatures of the deep. A large fish swallowed the child, but he died not, and was born anew from its belly:¹ for that fish, with others, was caught by the fishermen, and delivered by them to the great Asura Sambara.

His wife Māyādevī, the mistress of his household, superintended the operations of the cooks, and saw, when the fish was cut open, a beautiful child, looking like a new shoot of the blighted tree of love. Whilst wondering who this should be, and how he could have got into the belly of the fish, Nārada came to satisfy her curiosity, and said to the graceful dame, "This is the son of him by whom the whole world is created and destroyed, the son of Viṣṇu, who was stolen by Sambara from the lying-in chamber, and tossed by him into the sea, where he was swallowed by the fish. He is now in thy power; do you, beautiful woman, tenderly rear this jewel of mankind."

Thus counselled by Nārada, Māyādevī took charge of the boy, and carefully reared him from childhood, being fascinated by the beauty of his person. Her affection became still more impassioned when he was decorated with the bloom of adolescence. The gracefully-moving Māyavatī then, fixing her heart and eyes upon the high-minded Pradyumna, gave him, whom she regarded as herself, all her magic (and illusive) powers.

To which she replied, "You are not a son of mine; you are the son of Viṣṇu, whom Kāla Sambara carried away, and threw into the sea: you was swallowed by a fish, but was rescued by me from its belly. When the valiant Pradyumna heard this, he was filled with wrath, and defied Sambara to battle. In the conflict that ensued, the son of Mādhava slew the whole host of Sambara. Seven times, he foiled the delusions of the enchanter, and making himself master of the eighth, turned it against Sambara, and killed him. By the same faculty he ascended into the air, and proceeded to his father's house, where he alighted, along with Māyavatī, in the inner apartments. When the women beheld Pradyumna, they thought it was Kṛṣṇa himself. Rukmiṇī, her eyes dimmed with tears, spoke tenderly to him, and said, "Happy is she who has a son like this, in the bloom of youth. Such would be the age of my son Pradyumna, if he was alive. Who is the fortunate mother adorned by you? and yet from thy appearance, and from the affection I feel for you, you are assuredly the son of Hari."

At this moment Kṛṣṇa, accompanied by Nārada, arrived; and the latter said to the delighted Rukmiṇī, "This is your own son, who has come hither after killing Sambara, by whom, when an infant, he was stolen from the lying-in chamber. This is the virtuous Māyavatī, his wife, and not the wife of Sambara. Hear the reason. When Manmatha, the deity of love, had perished,² the goddess of beauty, desirous to secure his revival, assumed a delusive form, and by her charms fascinated the demon Sambara, and exhibited herself to him in various illusory enjoyments. This thy son is the descended Kāma; and this is the goddess Raṭī, his wife.³ There is no occasion for any uncertainty: this is thy daughter-in-law." Then Rukmiṇī was glad, and Keśava also; the whole city resounded with exclamations of joy, and all the people of Dvārakā were surprised at Rukmiṇī's recovering a son who had so long been lost.

1 The Bhāgavata tells the story in the same manner, but the Hari Vaṁśa omits the part of the fish.

2 When he was reduced to ashes by a fiery glance from Śiva, in resentment of his inflaming him with passion for Umā. This legend is a favourite with the Śaiva Purāṇas, and is told in the Linga and Kālikā, also in the Padma Purāṇa, and Kaśī Khanḍa of the Skānda PURĀṇA. They do not say much about his resuscitation however; Śiva, in pity of Rati's grief, restoring him only to a bodiless existence as Anaṅga, whose place is to be in the hearts of men. The Liṅga adds, that when Viṣṇu, in consequence of the curse of Bhṛgu, shall be born as the son of Vasudeva, Kāma shall be born as one of his sons.

3 The daughter of Dakṣa, but not enumerated amongst those formerly specified (Bk. I. Ch. VII.): she was born from his perspiration, according to the Kālika PURĀṇA

The heroic Pradyumna was chosen for her lord, at her public choice of a husband, by the daughter of Rukmin; and he had by her the powerful and gallant prince Aniruddha, who was fierce in fight, an ocean of prowess, and the tamer of his foes. Keśava demanded in marriage for him the granddaughter of Rukmin; and although the latter was inimical to Kṛṣṇa, he betrothed the maiden (who was his son's daughter) to the son of his own daughter (her cousin Aniruddha). Upon the occasion of the nuptials Rāma and other Yādavas attended Kṛṣṇa to Bhojakaṭa, the city of Rukmin.

After the wedding had been solemnized, several of the kings, headed by him of Kalinga, said to Rukmin, "This wielder of the ploughshare is ignorant of the dice, which may be converted into his misfortune: why may we not contend with him, and beat him, in play?"

Kṛṣṇa had seven other beautiful wives, Kālindī, Mitravīndā, the virtuous Nāgnajiti, the queen Jāmbavanti; Rohinī of beautiful form; the amiable and excellent daughter of the king of Madra, Mādrī; Satyabhāmā, the daughter of Śatrujit; and Lakṣmaṇā, of lovely smiles¹. Besides these, he had sixteen thousand other wives².

The potent Rukmin replied to them, and said, "So let it be;" and he engaged Balarāma at a game of dice in the palace,: Balarāma soon lost to Rukmin a thousand Niṣkas³; he then staked and lost another thousand; and then pledged ten thousand, which Rukmin, who was well skilled in gambling, also won. At this the king of Kaliṅga laughed aloud, and the weak and exulting Rukmin grinned, and said, "Baladeva is losing, for he knows nothing of the game; although, blinded by a vain passion for play, he thinks he understands the dice." Halayudha, galled by the broad laughter of the Kaliṅga prince, and the contemptuous speech of Rukmin, was exceedingly angry, and, overcome with passion, increased his stake to ten millions of Niṣkas. Rukmin accepted the challenge, and therefore threw the dice. Baladeva won, and cried aloud, "The stake is mine." But Rukmin called out as loudly, that he was the winner.

A deep voice was then heard in the sky, inflaming still more the anger of the high-spirited Baladeva, saying, "Bala has rightly won the whole sum, and Rukmin speaks falsely: although he did not accept the pledge in words, he did so by his acts (having cast the dice)." Balarāma thus excited, his eyes red with rage, started up, and struck Rukmin with the board on which the game was played, and killed him⁴. Taking hold of the trembling king of Kaliṅga, he knocked out the teeth which he had shown when he laughed. Laying hold of a golden column, he dragged it from its place, and used it as a weapon to kill those princes who had taken part with his adversaries.

Upon which the whole circle, crying out with terror, took to fight, and escaped from the wrath of Baladeva. When Kṛṣṇa heard that Rukmin had been killed by his brother, he made no remark, being afraid to Rukmini on the one hand, and of Bala on the other; but taking with him the newly wedded Aniruddha, and the Yādava tribe, he returned to Dvārakā.

1 The number specified, however, both in this place and in c. 32, is nine, instead of eight. The commentator endeavours to explain the difference by identifying Rohinī with Jāmbavatī: but in the notices of Kṛṣṇa's posterity, both in this work and in the Bhāgavata, she is distinct from Jāmbavatī.

She seems, however, to be an addition to the more usually specified eight, of whose several marriages the Bhāgavata gives the best account. In addition to the three first respecting whom particulars are found in all, Kālīndī, or the Yamunā, is the daughter of the sun, whom Kṛṣṇa meets on one of his visits to Indraprastha, and who claims him as the reward of her penance. His next wife, Mitravindā, is the daughter of his maternal aunt Rājādhidevī (Bk. IV. Ch. XIV.), and sister of Vinda and Anuvinda, kings of Avantī: she chooses him at her Svayamvara. The Hari Varmśa calls her Saudattā, daughter of Śivi; and she is subsequently termed Saivyā by our text. Nāgnajitī or Satyā, the next wife, was the daughter of Nagnajit, king of Kauśala, and was the prize of Kṛṣṇa's overcoming seven fierce bulls, whom no other hero had encountered with success, Bhadrā, princess of Kekaya, alsto Kṛṣṇa's cousin, the daughter of Śrutakirtti (Bk. IV. Ch. XV.), was his next: and his eighth wife was Mādri, the daughter of the king of Madra; named, according to the Bhāgavata, Lakṣaṇā; and to the Hari V., Saubhīmā; distinguishing, as does our text, clearly Lakṣmaṇa from Mādri, and like it having no satisfactory equivalent for Bhadrā. The Hari Varmśa does not name Rohinī, but specifies other names, as Vṛhatī etc. In the life of Kṛṣṇa, taken from the Bhāgavata through a Persian translation, published by Maurice, there is a curious instance of the barbarous distortion of Sanskrit names by the joint labours of the English and Persian translators: the wives of Kṛṣṇa are written. Rokemenee (Rukminī), Seteebhavani (Satyabhāmā), Jamoometee (Jāmbavati), Kalenderee (Kālīndī), Lechmeena (Lakṣmaṇā), Soeta (Satyā?), Bhedravatee (Bhadrā). Mihrbeoda (Mitravinda).

2 These, according to the Mahābhārata. Ādi P., were Apsarasas, or nymphs. In the Dāna Dharma they become Kṛṣṇa's wives through a boon given him by Umā.

3 The Niṣka is a weight of gold, but according to different authorities of very different amount. The commentator here terms it a weight of four Suvarṇas, each about 175 grains troy.

4 The Bhāgavata and Hari Varmśa, which both tell this story, agree in the death of Rukmin; but in the Mahābhārata he appears in the war, on the side of the Pañḍavas. The occurrence is a not very favourable picture of courtly manners; but scenes of violence have never been infrequent at the courts of Rajput princes.

Śakra, the lord of the three worlds, came mounted on his fierce elephant Airāvata to visit Śauri (Kṛṣṇa) at Dvārakā. Having entered the city, and been welcomed by Hari, he related to the hero the deeds of the demon Naraka. "By you, Madhusūdana, lord of the gods," said Indra, "in a mortal condition, all sufferings have been soothed. Ariṣṭa, Dhenuka, Chāṇūra, Muṣṭika, Keśin, who sought to injure helpless man, have all been slain by you, Kañsa, Kuvalayāpīda, the child-destroying Putanā, have been killed by you; and so have other oppressors to the world. By you valour and wisdom the three worlds have been preserved, and the gods, obtaining their share of the sacrifices offered by the devout, enjoy satisfaction. But now hear the occasion on which I have come to you, and which you are able to remedy. The son of the earth,¹ called Naraka, who rules over the city of Prāgjyotiṣa,² inflicts a great injury upon all creatures. Carrying off the maidens of gods, saints, demons, and kings, he shuts them up in his own palace. He has taken away the umbrella of Varuṇa, impermeable to water, the jewel mountain crest of Mandara, and the celestial nectar-dropping earings of my mother Aditi; and he now demands my elephant Airāvata. I have thus explained to you, Govinda, the tyranny of the Asura; you can best determine how it is to be prevented."

The environs of Prāgjyotiṣa were defended by nooses, constructed by the demon Muru, the edges of which were as sharp as razors; but Hari, throwing his discus Sudarśana amongst them, cut them to pieces. Then Muru started up, but Keśava slew him, and burnt his seven thousand sons, like moths, with the flame of the edge of his discus. Having slain Muru, Hayagrīva, and Pañchajana, the wise Hari rapidly reached the city of Prāgjyotiṣa: there a fierce conflict took place with the troops of Naraka in which Govinda destroyed thousands of demons; and when Naraka came into the field, showering upon the deity all sorts of weapons, the wielder of the discus, and annihilator of the demon tribe, cut him in two with his celestial missile. Naraka being slain, Earth, bearing the two earrings of Aditi, approached the lord of the world, and said,

The Earth said “When, O lord, I was upheld by you in the form of a boar, your contact then engendered this my son. He whom you gave me has now been killed by you: take therefore these two earrings, and cherish his progeny. You, lord, whose aspect is ever gracious, has come to this sphere, in a portion of yourself, to lighten my burden. You are the eternal creator, preserver, and descoverer of the universe; the origin of all worlds, and one with the universe: what praise can be worthily offered to you? You are the pervader, and that which is pervaded; the are, the agent, and the effect; the universal spirit of all beings; what praise can be worthily offered to you? You are the abstract soul, the sentient and the living soul of all beings, the imperishable: but since it is not possible to praise you worthily, then why should the hopeless attempt proceed? Have compassion, O universal soul, and forgive the sins which Naraka has committed. Verily it is for the sanctification of thy son that he has been killed by you.”

In the apartments of the women he found sixteen thousand and one hundred damsels³: he also beheld in the palace six thousand large elephants, each having four tusks; twenty-one lakhs of horses of Kāmboja and other excellent breeds: these Govinda dispatched to Dvārakā, in charge of the servants of Naraka. The umbrella of Varuṇa, the jewel mountain which he also recovered, he placed upon Garuḍa; and mounting him himself, and taking Satyabhāmā with him, he set off to the heaven of the gods, to restore the earrings of Aditi⁴.

3 These were captive princesses, according to the Bhāgavata; Aparasas, or celestial nymphs, according to the Kālikā Purāṇa; and these upon their rescue by Krṣṇa became his wives.

4 The legend of Naraka is related in more detail in the Bhāgavata and Hari Vaṁśa, but is still more fully narrated in the Kālikā Upapurana. It may be considered as one of the various intimations that occur in the Purāṇas of hostilities between the worshippers of Viṣṇu and Śiva; Naraka being in an especial degree favoured by the latter.

Garuḍa, laden with the umbrella of Varuṇa and the jewel mountain, and bearing Hṛṣikeśa on his back to the court of Indra, went lightly, as if in sport, along. When they arrived at the portals of Svarga, Hari blew his shell; on which the gods advanced to meet him, bearing respectful offerings. Having received the homage of the divinities, Kṛṣṇa went to the palace of the mother of the gods, whose turrets resembled white clouds; and on beholding Aditi, paid his respects to her, along with Śakra, and, presenting to her own earrings, informed her of the destruction of the demon Naraka. The mother of the world, well pleased, then fixed her whole thoughts upon Hari, the creator, and thus pronounced his praise:

Glory to you, O god with the lotus eyes, who removest all fear from those that worship you. You are the eternal, universal, and living soul; the origin of all beings; the instigator of the mental faculty, and faculties of sense; one with the three qualities; beyond the three qualities; exempt from contraries; pure; existing in the hearts of all; void of colour, extension, and every transient modification; unaffected by the vicissitudes of birth or death, sleep or walking. You are evening, night, and day; earth, sky, air, water, and fire; mind, intellect, and individuality. You are the agent of creation, duration, and dissolution; the master over the agent; in thy forms which are called Brāhmā, Viśnu, and Śiva. You are gods, Yakṣas, Daityas, Rākṣasas, Siddhas, Punnagas, Kuṣmāṅdas, Piśāchas, Gandharbas, men, animals, deer, elephants, reptiles, trees, shrubs, creepers, climbers, and grasses; all things, large, middling, small, immense, or minute; you are all bodies whatsoever, composed of aggregated atoms.

The notions that “I am—this is mine,” which influence mankind, are but the delusions of the mother of the world, originating in thy active agency. Those men who, attentive to their duties, diligently worship you, traverse all this illusion, and obtain spiritual freedom, Brahmā and all the gods, men and animals, are alike invested by the thick darkness of, fascination, in the gulf of the illusions of Viṣṇu.

That men, who having worshipped you, should seek the gratification of their desires, and their own preservation, this, O lord, is also thy delusion. It is the sport of thy fascinations, that induces men to glorify you, to obtain thereby the continuance of their race, or the annihilation of their enemies, instead of eternal liberation. It is the fault of the impure acts of the unrighteous (to proffer such idle requests to one able to confer much more important benefits), like asking for a rag to cover one's nakedness from the tree that bestows whatever is solicited. Be propitious then, imperishable author of all the error that deceives the world; and dispel, O lord of all creatures, the conceit of knowledge, which proceeds from ignorance.

With the assent of Aditi, Indra then respectfully saluted Janārddana in all due form, and conducted him and Satyabhāmā through Nandana and other pleasant gardens of the gods; where Keśava, the destroyer of Keśi, saw the Pārijāta tree, the favourite of Śaci, which was produced when the ocean was churned for ambrosia: the bark was of gold, and it was embellished with young sprouting leaves of a copper colour, and fruit-stalks bearing numerous clusters of fragrant fruit. When Satyabhāmā noticed this tree, she said to her beloved lord, Govinda, "Why should not this divine tree be transported to Dvārikā? If what you say is true, and I am really dear to you, then let this tree be taken away from hence, and planted in the gardens of my dwelling.

shine amidst my fellow queens, wearing the flowers of this tree in the braids of my hair."

Thus solicited by Satyabhāmā, Hari smiled upon her, and taking the Pārijāta plant, put it upon Garuda. The keepers of the garden remonstrated, and said, "This Pārijāta tree belongs to Śaci, the queen of the sovereign of the gods: it is not proper, Govinda, for you to remove it. At the time when the ocean was churned for the beverage of immortality, this tree was produced, for the purpose of providing Śaci with flowery ornaments. You cannot be suffered to depart with it. It is through ignorance that this is sought for by any one, as it is the especial property of her on whose countenance the king of the gods delights to look; and who shall go away with impunity, who attempts to carry it off ?

Satyabhāmā, on hearing these words, was exceedingly offended, and said, "What right has Śaci—what has Indra—to the Pārijāta tree? It was produced at the churning of the ocean as the common property of all worlds. Wherefore, gods, should Indra alone possess it? In the same manner, guardians of the grove, as nectar, as the moon, as the goddess Śri herself, so the Pārijāta tree is the common property of all the world: and since Śaci, confiding in the-strength of her husband's arm, would keep it to herself, away with submission to her: Satyā takes away the tree.

Go quickly, and let Paulomī be told what I have said: repeat to her this contemptuous message from Satyabhāmā; 'If you are the beloved wife of your lord, if your husband is obedient to your authority, let him prevent my husband from carrying off this tree. I know your husband Śakra : I know the sovereign of the divinities; and I, who am a mortal, take this Pārijāta tree away from you.'

Accordingly the warders of the garden went and reported to Śaci the message of Satyabhāmā, Śaci appealed to her husband, and excited the king of the gods to resent this affront: and Indra accordingly, attended by the army of the celestials, marched to attack Hari, in defence of the Pārijāta tree. The gods were armed with clubs, swords, maces, and darts; and Indra wielded the thunderbolt. As soon as Govinda saw the king of the gods advancing against him on his elephant, attended by the immortals, he blew his shell so that the sound filled all the regions, and he showered smilingly myriads of arrows upon his assailants. Beholding the air in all directions overspread with his darts, the celestials in return hurled innumerable missiles; but every one of these the destroyer of Madhu and lord of all worlds, cut playfully into a thousand pieces with his shafts.

The devourer of serpents, Garuḍa, laid hold of the noose of the sovereign of the waters, and tore it to fragments with his beak, as if it had been a little snake. The son of Devakī threw his mace at the club of Yama, and cast it broken upon the ground: he cut in bits the litter of the lord of wealth with his discus: a glance of his eye eclipsed the radiance of the sun: he severed Agni into a hundred parts with his arrows, and scattered the Vasus through the realms of space: with his discus he cut off the points of the tridents of the Rudras, and cast themselves upon the earth: and with the shafts shot from his bow he dispersed the Sēdhyas, Viśvas, Maruts, and Gandharbas, like fleeces of cotton from the pods of the Simul tree, through the sky, Garuḍa also diligently plied his beak and wings and nails, and bit and bruised and scratched the deities who opposed his lord.

Then the king of the gods and the foe of Madhu encountered and overwhelmed each other with countless shafts, like rain-drops falling from two heavy clouds, Garuḍa in the conflict engaged with Airāvata, and Janārddana was opposed to all the deities. When all the other weapons had been cut to pieces, Indra stood armed with his thunderbolt, and Kṛṣṇa with discus Sudarśana. Beholding them thus prepared for fight, all the people of the three spheres exclaimed, "Alas ! alas !" Indra launched his bolt, but in vain, for Hari caught and arrested it: he, forbore, however, to hurl his discus, and only called out to Indra to stay.

Of what use is the sovereignty of heaven, embellished with the Pārijāta tree, no longer beholding Śacī meet you with affection as of yore ? I am not ashamed of being vanquished by him who is the author of the creation, preservation, and destruction of the world; who is the substance of all things; in whom, without beginning or middle, the universe is comprised; and from whom, and by whom, identical with all things, it proceeds, and will cease to be. NOTES

1 The Bhāgavata merely says. “Incited by his wife, Kṛṣṇa took away the Pārijāta tree, having subdued the gods, and planted it in the garden of Satyabhāmā. The Hari V. makes a long story of it, and tells it with some variations, especially in the commencement; Satyabhāmā’s desire for the Pārijāta tree having been excited by Nārada’s presenting a flower from it to Kṛṣṇa’s other spouse. Indra answered and said. “You beguilest us, O lord, in calling thyself a mortal; but we know you to be the lord, although not

When Kṛṣṇa arrived over Dvārakā, he blew his shell, and delighted all the inhabitants with the sound. Then alighting from Garuḍa, he proceeded with Satyabhāmā to her garden, and there planted the great Pārijāta tree, the smell of which perfumed the earth for three furlongs, and an approach to which enabled every one to recollect the events of a prior existence; so that on beholding their faces in that tree, all the Yādavas contemplated themselves in their (original) celestial forms.

Parāśara said— I have enumerated to you Pradyumna and the other sons of Rukmiṇī. Satyabhāmā bore Bhānu and Bhairika. The sons of Rohinī were Dīptimat, Tēmapakṣi, and others. The powerful Śāmba and other sons were born of Jāmbavatī. Bhadravinda and other valiant youths were the sons of Nāgnajitī Saivyā (or Mitra-vindā) had several sons, of whom Saṅgrāmajit was the chief. Vṛka and others were begotten by Hari on Mādrī. Lakṣmanā had Gātravat and others: and Śruta and others were the sons of Kālīndī.¹ Kṛṣṇa had sons also by his other wives, in all one hundred and eighty thousand. The eldest of, the whole was Pradyumna, the son of Rukmiṇī: his son was Aniruddha, from whom Vraja was born: his mother was Uṣā, the daughter of Bāṇa, and grand-daughter of Balī, whom Aniruddha won in war. On that occasion a fierce battle took place between Hari and Śankara, in which the thousand arms of Bāṇa were lopped away by the discus of the former.

Parāśara said— Uṣā the daughter of Bāṇa, having seen Pārvatī sporting with her lord, Śambhu, was inspired with a wish for similar dalliance. The beautiful Gaurī, who knows the hearts of all, said to Uṣā, "Do not grieve; you shall have a husband." "But when will this be?" Thought Uṣā to herself, "or who will be my lord?" On which Pārvatī continued;

Accordingly, as the goddess had foretold, on that lunar day a youth appeared to Uṣā in a dream, of whose person she became enamoured. When she woke, and no longer perceived him, she was overcome with sorrow, and, unrestrained by modesty, demanded of her companion, whither he had gone.

The companion and friend of the princess was Chitralekhā, the daughter to Kubhāṇḍa, the minister of Bāṇa. "Of whom do you speak ?" Inquired she of Uṣā. But the princess, recollecting herself, was ashamed, and remained silent. At length, however, Chitralekhā conciliated her confidence, and she related to her what had passed, and what the goddess had foretold; and she requested her friend to devise some means of uniting her with the person whom she had beheld in her dream.

Citralekhā then delineated the most eminent gods, demons, spirits, and mortals, and showed them to Uṣā. Putting aside the portraits to gods, spirits, snake-gods, and demons, the princess selected those of mortals, and amongst them the heroes of the races of Andhaka and Vriṣṇi. When she came to the likenesses of Kṛṣṇa and Rāma, she was confused with shame; from the portrait of Pradyumna she modestly averted her eyes; but the moment she beheld the picture of his son, the object of her passion, her eyes wide expanded, and all her bashfulness was discarded. "This is he! this is he!" said she to Citralekhā; and her friend, who was endowed with magic power, bade her be of good cheer, and see off through the air to Dvārakā.

1 The Bhāgavata says, each of his eight queens had ten sons, and gives the ten names to each set, with one or two exceptions.

Before this took place, Bāṇa had been engaged in the adoration of the three-eyed god, and had thus prayed to him: "I am humiliated, O lord, by the possession of a thousand arms in a state of peace; let some hostilities ensue, in which I may derive some advantage from their possession. Without war, what is the use to these arms ? They are but a burden to me."

At that time the nymph Citralekhā returned from Dvārakā, and by the exercise of her magic power brought Aniruddha along with her. The guards of the inner apartments discovering him there with Uṣā, reported it to the king who immediately sent a body of his followers to seize the prince; but the valiant youth, taking up an iron club, slew his assailants: on which Bāṇa mounted his car, advanced against him, and endeavoured to put him to death. Finding however, that Aniruddha was not to be subdued by prowess, he followed the counsel of his minister, and brought his magical faculties into the conflict, by which he succeeded in capturing the Yadu prince, and binding him in serpent bonds.

When Aniruddha was missed from Dvāravatī, and Yādavas were inquiring of one another whither he had gone, Nārada came to them, and told them that he was the prisoner of Bāṇa, having been conveyed by a female, possessed of magic faculties, to Sonitapura.¹ When they heared this, they were satisfied; for they had imagined he had been taken away by the gods (in reprisal for the Pārijāta tree).

Kṛṣṇa therefore immediately summoned Garuḍa, who came with a wish; and mounting upon him, along with Bala and Pradyumna, he set off for the city of Bāṇa. On their approach to the city they were opposed by the spirits who attend on Rudra, but these were soon destroyed by Hari, and he and his companions reached the vicinity of the town. Here mighty Fever, an emanation from Maheśwara, having three feet and three heads,² fought desperately with Viṣṇu in defence of Bāṇa.

Baladeva, upon whom his ashes were scattered, was seized with burning heat, and his eyelids trembled: but he obtained relief by clinging to the body of Kṛṣṇa. Contending thus with the divine holder of the bow, the Fever emanating from Śiva was quickly expelled from the person of Kṛṣṇa by Fever which he himself engendered. Brahmā beholding the impersonated malady bewildered by the beating inflicted by the arms of the deity, entreated the latter to desist; and the foe of Madhu refrained, and absorbed into himself the fever he had created. The rival Fever then departed, saying to Kṛṣṇa, "Those men who call to memory the combat between us shall be ever exempt from febrile disease."

Next Viśṇu overcame and demolished the five fires,² and with perfect ease annihilated the army of the Dānavas. Then the son of Bail (Bāṇa), with the whole of the Daitya host, assisted by Śankara and Kārtikeya, fought with Śauri. A fierce combat took place between Hari and Śankara, all the regions shook, scorched by their flaming weapons, and the celestials felt assured that the end to the universe was at hand. Govinda, with the weapon of yawning set Śankara a gape; and then the demons and the demigods attendant upon Śiva were destroyed on every side; for Hara, overcome with incessant gaping, sat down in his car, and was unable longer to contend with Kṛṣṇa, whom no acts affect. The deity of war, Kārtikeya, wounded in the arm by Garuḍa, struck by the weapons of Pradyumna, and disarmed by the shout of Hari, took to flight, Bāṇa, when he saw Śankara disabled, the Daityas destroyed, Guha fled, and Śiva's followers slain, advanced on his vast car, the horses to which were harnessed by Nandiśa, to encounter Kṛṣṇa and his associates Bala and Pradyumna.

The valiant Balabhadra, attacking the host of Bāṇa, wounded them in many ways with his arrows, and put them to a shameful rout; and their sovereign beheld them dragged about by Rāma with his ploughshare, or beaten by him with his club, or pierced by Kṛṣṇa with his arrows: he therefore attacked Kṛṣṇa, and a fight took place between them: they cast at each other fiery shafts, that pierced through their armour; but Kṛṣṇa intercepted with his arrows those of Bāṇa, and cut them to pieces. Bāṇa nevertheless wounded Keśava, and the wielder of the discus wounded Bāṇa; and both desirous of victory, and seeking enraged the death of his antagonist, hurled various missiles at each other. When an infinite number of arrows had been cut to pieces, and the weapons began to be exhausted. Kṛṣṇa resolved to put Bāṇa to death.

The destroyer of the demon host therefore took up his discus Sudarśana, blazing with the radiance of a hundred suns. As he was in the act to casting it, the mystical goddess Koṭavī, the magic lore of the demons, stood naked before him.⁴ Seeing her before him, Kṛṣṇa, with unclosed eyes, cast Sudarśana, to cut off the arms of Bāṇa. The discus, dreaded in its flight by the whole of the weapons of the demons, lopped off successively the numerous arms of the Asura. Beholding Kṛṣṇa with the discus again in his hand, and preparing to launch it once more, for the total demolition of Bāṇa, the foe of Tripura (Śiva) respectfully addressed him. The husband of Umā, seeing the blood streaming from the 'dissevered arms of Bāṇa, approached Govinda, to solicit a suspension of hostilities, and said to him,

You are fit to apprehend that you are not distinct from me. That which I am, you are; and that also is this world, with its gods, demons, and mankind. Men contemplate distinctions, became they are scupified by ignorance." So saying, Kṛṣṇa went to the place where the son of Pradyumna was confined. The snakes that bound him were destroyed, being blasted by the breath of Garuḍa: and Kṛṣṇa, placing him, along with his wife, upon the celestial bird, returned with Pradyumna and Rāma to Dvārakā.⁵

1. The synonyms of Śoṇitapura in the Trikānda Śeṣa are Devikoṭa, Bānapur, Koṭivarṣam, and Uṣ āvana. The first is usually considered to be the modern Devicotta in the Karnatic, which is commonly believed to be the scene of Bāna's defeat. The name, however, occurs in other parts of India; in the Dekhin, on the banks of the Godāvarī, according to Wilford the capital of Muṇja (As. Res. IX. 199); and in Assam, near Goalpāra, as the city of the Daityas. As. Res. XIV. 443. Hamilton notices the remains of a city so called in Dinajpur. in the Kālikā Purāna Bāna is described as the friend, and apparently neighbour, of Naraka, king of Pragjyotiṣ or Assam.

2 Alluding to the three stages of febrile paroxysms, or to the recurrence of tertian ague. A contest with this enemy, in the course of military operations is an allegory which the British armies in India too often illustrate.

3 The Āhavaniya, Gārhapatya, Dakṣiṇa, Sabhya, and Āvasathya, are the five fires; of which the three first have a religious, and the other two a secular character. The first is a fire prepared for oblations at an occasional sacrifice : the second is the household fire, to be perpetually maintained: the third is a sacrificial fire, in the centre of the other two, and placed to the south: the Sabhya is a fire lighted to warm a party: and the Āvasathya the common domestic or culinary fire. Manu. III. 100,185, and Kullūka Bhaṭṭa's explanation.

4 Koṭavī (कोटवी) is said to be an eighth portion of Rudrāṇī, and the tutelary goddess of the Daityas, composed of incantations (मन्त्रमयी). The Hari V. calls her also Lambā and intimates her being the mother of Bāṇa, and as identical with Durgā. The word in the lexicons designates a naked woman, and is thence applicable to Durgā in some of her forms.

5 There can be little doubt that this legend describes a serious struggle between the Śaivas and Vaiśnavas, in which the latter, according to their own report, were victorious : and the Saivas, although they attempt to make out a sort of compromise between Rudra and Kṛṣṇa, are obliged to admit his having the worst of the conflict, and his inability to protect his votary. The Bhāgavata tells the story much as the text. The Hari V. amplifies even more than usual, the narrative occupying nearly seventy pages of the French translation. The legend is to be found to the same purport, but in various degrees of detail, in the Agni Purāṇa Karma Purāṇa, Padma Purāṇa (Uttara Khaṇḍa), Vāmana Purāṇa, and Brahma Vaivartta Purāṇa (Kṛṣṇa Janma Khaṇḍa).

There was a Vāsudeva who was called Pauṇḍraka¹, and who. Though not the Vāsudeva was flattered by ignorant people as the descended deity, until he fancied himself to be the Vāsudeva² who had come down upon earth. Losing all recollection of his real character, he assumed the emblems of Viṣṇu, and sent an ambassador to the magnanimous Kṛṣṇa with this message; "Relinquish, you foolish fellow, the discus; lay aside all my insignia, my name, and the character of Vāsudeva; and come and do me homage ; and I will vouchsafe you means of subsistence." At which Janārdana laughed, and replied, "Go messenger, back to Pauṇḍraka, and say to him from me, 'I will dispatch to you my emblem the discus without fail. You will rightly apprehend my meaning, and consider what is to be done, for I shall come to thy city, bringing the discus with me, and shall undoubtedly consign it to you. If you will command me to come, I will immediately obey, and be with you tomorrow; there shall be no delay: and, having sought thy asylum, I will so provide, O king that I shall never more have any thing to dread from you.' So saying, he dismissed the ambassador to report these words to his sovereign; and summoning Garuḍa, mounted him, and set off for the city of Pauṇḍraka³.

When the king of Kaśī heard of the preparations of Keśava, he sent his army (to the aid of Pauṇḍraka), himself bringing up the rear; and with the force of the king of Kaśī, and his own troops, Pauṇḍraka, the false Vāsudeva, marched to meet Kṛṣṇa. Hari beheld him afar off, standing in his car, holding a discus, a club, a mace, a scimitar, and a lotus, in his hands; ornamented with a garland of flowers ; beating a bow; and having his standard made of gold: he had also the Śrivatsa mark delineated on his breast; he was dressed to yellow garments, and decorated with earrings and a tiara. When the god whose standard is Garuda beheld him, he laughed with a deep laugh, and engaged in conflict with the hostile host of cavalry and elephants, fighting with swords, scimitars, maces, tridents, spears, and bows. Showering upon the enemy the shafts from his Śāraṅga bow, and hurling at them his mace and discus, he quickly destroyed both the army of Pauṇḍraka and that of the king of Kaśī.

The people, beholding this sight, exclaimed, "Alas! alas!" but the valiant king of Kaśī, adhering to the imposture of his friend, continued the conflict, till Śauri decapitated him with his arrows, shooting his head into the city of Kaśī, to the marvel of all the inhabitants. Having thus slain Paundraka and the king of Kaśī, with all their followers, Śauri returned to Dvārakā, where he lived in the enjoyment of heavenly delights.

When the inhabitants of Kaśī saw the head of their king shot into their city, they were much astonished, and wondered how it could have happened, and by whom the deed could have been done. Having ascertained that the king had been killed by Kṛṣṇa, the son of the monarch of Kaśī⁴ together with the priest of the family, propitiated Śankara; and that deity, well pleased to be adored in the sacred place Avimukta, desired the prince to demand a boon: on which he prayed, and said, "O lord, mighty god, through thy favour let thy mystic spirit arise to destroy Kṛṣṇa, the murderer of my father."

"It shall be so," answered Śankara; and from out of the southern fire upsprang a vast and formidable female,⁵ like flame out of fire, blazing with ruddy light, and with fiery radiance streaming amidst her hair. Angrily she called upon Kṛṣṇa, and departed to Dvārakā; where the people, beholding her, were struck with dismay, and fled for protection to Madhusūdana, the refuge of all worlds. The wielder of the discus knowing that the fiend had been produced by the son of the king of Kaśī, through his adoration of the deity whose emblem is a bull, and being engaged in sportive amusements, and playing at dice, said to the discus, "Kill this fierce creature, whose tresses are of plaited flame." Accordingly Sudarśana, the discus of Viṣṇu, immediately attacked the fiend, fearfully enwreathed with fire, and wearing tresses of plaited name. Terrified at the might of Sudarśana, the creation of Maheśvara awaited not his attack, but fled with speed, pursued by him with equal velocity, until she reached Varānāśī, repelled by the superior might of the discus of Viṣṇu.

The army of Kaśī, and the host of the demigods attendant upon Śiva, armed with all kinds of weapons, then sallied out to oppose the discus ; but, skilled in the use of arms, he consumed the whole of the forces by his radiance, and then set fire to the city, in which the magic power of Śiva had concealed herself.³ Thus was Varānāśī burnt, with all its princes and their followers, inhabitants, elephants, horses, and men, treasures and granaries, houses, palaces, and markets. The whole of a city, that was inaccessible to the gods, was thus wrapped in flames by the discus of Hari, and was totally destroyed. The discus then, with unmitigated wrath, and blazing fiercely, and far from satisfied with the accomplishment of so easy a task, returned to the hand of Viṣṇu.⁷

NOTES

1 From being, the commentator says king of Puṇḍra. The Bhāgavata calls him chief of the Kārūṣas; the Padma, king of Kāśī; but the Bhāgavata, as well as our text, makes the king of Kaśī his friend and ally.

2 According to the Padma Purāṇa, he propitiates Śiva, and obtains from him the insignia which constitute a Vāsudeva. The different authorities for this legend all use the term Vāsudeva in the sense to a title.

3 The Hari V. and Padma Purāṇa send Paundraka to Dvārakā. According to the latter, Nārada incites Paundraka to the aggression, telling him, he cannot be a Vāsudeva till he has overcome Krṣṇa: he goes, and is killed. The former work, as usual, enters into particulars of its own invention. Krṣṇa is absent on a visit to Śiva at Kailāśa, and during his absence Paundraka, assisted by Ekalavya, king of the Niṣādas, makes a night attack upon Dvārakā. They are resisted by the Yādavas under Sātyaki and Balarāma, by the former of whom Paundraka is repeatedly overthrown, and all but slain : he requires so much killing, however, that he is likely to obtain the victory, when Krṣṇa comes to the aid of his kinsmen, and after a protracted encounter, described in language employed a hundred times before, kills his competitor. The whole of the sections called the Kailāśa Yātrā, or Krṣṇa's journey to Kailāśa, must have been wanting in the copy used by M. Langlois, as they are not included in his translation. The chapters of the Hari V. according to his enumeration of them are 261: my copy has 316.

4. The Bhāgavata names him Sudakṣiṇa : the Padma, Dandapāṇi.

5. A personified Kṛtyā, a magical creation. The Padma has the same. The Bhāgavata makes the product of the sacrificial fire a male and sends him to Dvārakā, accompanied by a host of Bhūtas, Śiva's attendant goblins.

6. According to the Bhāgavata, the magical, being himself destroys Sudakṣiṇa and his priest; but Sudarśana consumes the people and the city. The Padma ascribes the destruction of the king and all his city to the discus. The Hari V. closes its narrative with the death of Paundraka, and makes no mention of the destruction of Benares. The circumstance is alluded to in a preceding section (S 159) by Nārada, when detailing the exploits of Kṛṣṇa.

7 In this legend, again, we have a contest between the followers of Viṣṇu and Śiva intimated, as, besides the assistance given by the latter to Paundraka. Benares—Varānasī or Atimukta—has been all time, as it is at present, the high place of the Śiva worship. There is also an indication of a Vaiṣṇava schism, in the competition between Paundra and Kṛṣṇa for the title of Vāsudeva, and the insignia of his divinity.

earth. At the choice of a husband by the daughter of Duryodhana, the princess was carried off by the hero Śāmba, the son of Jāmbavatī. Being pursued by Duryodhana, Karṇa, Bhīshma, Droṇa, and other celebrated chiefs, who were incensed at his audacity, he was defeated, and taken prisoner.

Having thus spoken, the Kuru chiefs, unanimously refusing to set the son of Hari at large, immediately returned into the city. Bala, rolling about with intoxication, and the wrath which their contemptuous language had excited, struck the ground furiously with his heel, so that it burst to pieces with a loud sound that reverberated through the regions of space. His eyes reddened with rage, and his brow was curved with frowns, as he exclaimed, "What arrogance is this, in such vile and pithless creatures! The sovereignty of the Kauravas, as well as our own, is the work of fate, whose decree it also is that they now disrespect or disobey the commands of Ugrasena. Indra may of right give his orders to the gods; and Ugrasena exercises equal authority with the lord to Sachi. Fie upon the pride that boasts a throne, the leavings of a hundred mortals! Is not he the sovereign of the earth, the wives of whose servants adorn themselves with the blossoms of the Pārijāta tree? Or, authorized by the king of the gods to remove the burdens of the earth. So saying, the wielder of the club, Baladeva, his eyes red with rage, plunged the blade of his ploughshare downwards, beneath the ramparts of the city, and drew them towards him. When the Kauravas beheld Hastināpura tottering, they were much alarmed, and called loudly on Rāma, saying, "Rāma, Rāma ! hold, hold ! suppress your wrath ! have mercy upon us! Here is Śāmba, and his wife also, delivered up to you. Forgive our sins. committed in ignorance of thy wondrous power."

Accordingly, issuing hurriedly from the city, the Kauravas delivered Śāmba and his bride to the mighty Balarāma, who, bowing to Bhīshma, Drona, and Kripa, who addressed him in conciliatory language, said, "I am satisfied ;" and so desisted. The city bears the marks of the shock it received, even to the present day—such was the might of Rāma—proving both his strength and prowess. The Kauravas then offering homage to Śāmba and to Bala, dismissed the former with his wife and a bridal portion.¹

1 This adventure is related in the Bhāgavata, and very briefly noticed in the Hari Vaṁśa; but I have not found any mention of it in the Mahābhārata. It may have been suggested originally by Hastināpura having sustained some injury either from an earthquake or from the encroachments of the river, which, as is recorded, compelled the removal of the capital to Kausāmbī (Bk. IV. Ch. XX.)

Hear also, Maitreya, another exploit performed by the mighty Balarāma. The great Asura, the foe of the friends of the gods, Naraka, had a friend of exceeding prowess in the monkey named Dvivida, who was animated by implacable hostility against the deities, and vowed to revenge on the whole of them the destruction of Naraka by Kṛṣṇa, at the instigation of the king of the celestials, by preventing sacrifices, and effecting the annihilation of the mortal sphere. Blinded by ignorance, he accordingly interrupted all religious rites, subverted all righteous observances, and occasioned the death of living beings: he set fire to the forests, to villages and to towns: sometimes he overwhelmed cities and hamlets with falling rocks; or lifting up mountains in the waters, he cast them into the ocean: then taking his place amidst the deep, he agitated the waves, until the foaming sea rose above its confines, and swept away the villages and cities situated upon its shores. Dvivida also, who could assume what shape he would, enlarged his bulk to an immense size, and rolling and tumbling and tramping amidst the corn fields, he crushed and spoiled the harvests. The whole world, disordered by this iniquitous monkey, was deprived of sacred study and religious rites, and was greatly afflicted.

On one occasion Halāyudha was drinking in the groves of Raivata, along with the illustrious Revatī and other beautiful females; and the distinguished Yadu, in whose praises songs were sung, and who was preminent amidst graceful and sportive women, resembled Kuvera, god of riches, in his palace. Whilst thus engaged, the monkey Dvivida came there, and stealing the ploughshare and the club of Baladeva, grinned at and mocked him, and laughed at the women, and threw over and broke the cups filled with wine. Balarāma, becoming angry at this, threatened the monkey; but the latter disregarded his menaces, and made a chattering noise: on which Bala, starting up, seized his club in wrath; and the monkey laid hold of a large rock, which he hurled at the hero. Bala casting his club at it, as it neared him, broke it into a thousand fragments, which, together with the club, fell upon the ground. Beholding the club prostrate, the monkey sprang over it, and struck the Yādava violently on the breast with his paws. Bala replied with a blow of his fist upon the forehead of Dvivida, which felled him, vomiting blood, and lifeless, to the earth. The crest of the mountain on which he fell was splintered into a hundred pieces by the weight of his body, as if the thunderer had shivered it with his thunderbolt.

O hero, of this vile ape, who was the ally of the enemy of the gods." Then they and their attendant spirits returned well pleased to heaven.

1 This exploit of Balarāma is also similarly, but more vulgarly, related in the Bhāgavata. It is simply laid in the Hari Vaṁśa. and erroneously. that Menḍa and Dvivida were conquered by Kṛṣṇa.

In this manner did Kṛṣṇa, assisted by Baladeva, destroy demons and iniquitous monarchs, for the good of the earth; and along with Phālguna¹ also did he relieve earth of her load, by the death of innumerable hosts. Having thus lightened the burdens of the earth, and slain many unrighteous princes, he exterminated, by the pretext of an imprecation denounced by Brāhmaṇas, his own Yādava race. Then quitting Dvārakā, and relinquishing his mortal being, the self-born reentered, with all his emanations, his own sphere of Viśnu.²

Parāśara said—At the holy place Piṇḍāraka,⁴ Visvāmitra, Kaṇva, and the great sage Nārada, were observed by some boys of the Yadu tribe. Giddy with youth, and influenced by predestined results, they dressed and adorned Śāmba, the son of Jāmbavatī as a damsel, and conducting her to the sages, they addressed them with the usual marks of reverence, and said. “What child this female, the wife of Babhru, who is anxious to have a son, give birth to ?” The sages, who were possessed of divine wisdom, were very angry to find themselves thus tricked by the boys, and said. “She will bring forth a club, that shall crush the whole of the Yādava race.”

The boys, thus spoken to by the sage, went and related all that had occurred to Ugrasena; and, as foretold, a club was produced from, the belly of Śāmba. Ugrasena had the club, which was of iron, ground to dust, and thrown into the sea, but the particles of dust there became rushes.⁵ There was one part of the iron club which was like the blade of a lance, and which the Andhakas could not break: this, when thrown into the sea, was swallowed by a fish; the fish was caught, the iron spike was extracted from its belly, and was taken by a hunter named Jarā. The all-wise and glorious Madhusūdana did not think fit to counteract what had been predetermined by fate.

Then there came to Kesiava, when he was private and alone, a messenger from the gods, who addressed him with reverence, and said, “I am sent to you. O lord, by the deities, and do you hear what Indra, together with the Viśvas, Maruts, Ādityas, Sādhyas, and Rudras, respectfully represents. “More than a hundred years have elapsed since you, in favour to the gods, has descended upon earth, for the purpose of relieving it of its load. The demons have been slain, and the burden of earth has been removed: now let the immortals once again behold their monarch in heaven. A period exceeding a century has passed: now, if it be thy pleasure, return to Svarga. This is the solicitation of the celestials. But should such not be thy will, then remain here as long as it may be desirable to thy dependants."⁶

To this Kṛṣṇa replied, "All that you have said I am well aware of the destruction of the Yādavas by me has commenced. The burdens of the earth are not removed until the Yādavas are extirpated. I will effect this also in my descent, and quickly; for it shall come to pass in seven nights. When I have restored the land of Dvārakā to the ocean, and annihilated the race of Yadu, I will proceed to the mansions of the immortals. Apprise the gods, that, having abandoned my human body, and accompanied by Saṅkarṣaṇa, I will then return to them. The tyrants that oppressed the earth, Jarāsandha and the rest, have been killed; and a youth, even of the race of Yadu, is, no less than they, an encumbrance. When therefore I have taken away this great weight upon earth, I will return to protect the sphere of the celestials. Say this to them."

The mighty Kṛṣṇa now beheld signs and portents both in earth and heaven, prognosticating, day and night, the ruin of Dvārakā.⁷ Showing these to the Yādavas, he said, "See; behold these fearful phenomena : let us hasten to Prabhāsa, to avert these omens."

As they drank, the destructive flame of dissension was kindled amongst them by mutual collision, and fed with the fuel of abuse. Infuriated by the divine influence, they fell upon one another with missile weapons, and when those were expended, they had recourse to the rushes growing nigh.

The rushes in their hands became like thunderbolt!, and they struck one another with their fatal blows. Pradyumna, Sāmba, Kritavarman, Sātyaki, Aniruddha, Prithu, Viprithu, Chatuvarman, Chāruka, Akrūra, and many others, struck one another with the rushes, which had assumed the hardness of thunderbolts.¹¹ Keśava interposed to prevent them, but they thought that he was taking part with each severally, and continued the conflict. Kṛṣṇa then enraged took up a handful of rushes to destroy them, and the rushes became a club of iron, and with this he slew many of the murderous Yādavas; whilst others, fighting fiercely, put an end to one another. The chariot of the holder of the discus, named Jaitra, was quickly carried off by the swift steeds, and swept away by the sea, in the sight of Dāruka the charioteer. The discus, the club, the bow, the quiver, the shell, and the sword of Keśava, having circumambulated their lord, flew along the path of the sun. In a short time there was not a single Yādava left alive, except the mighty Kṛṣṇa and Dāruka.¹² Going towards Rāma, who was sitting at the root of a tree. they beheld a large serpent coming out of his mouth. Having issued from his mouth, the mighty snake proceeded towards the ocean, hymned by saints and by other great serpents. Bringing an offering of respect. Ocean came to meet him; and then the majestic being, adored by attendant snakes, entered into the waters of the deep.

Do you also go to the son of Kuru, and tell him, that it is my request that he will grant what protection he can to all my family. Then came there a hunter, named Jarā¹⁶ whose arrow was tipped with a blade made of the piece of iron of the club, which had not been reduced to powder; and beholding from a distance the foot of Kṛṣṇa, he mistook it for part of a deer, and shooting his arrow, lodged it in the sole.¹⁷ Approaching his mark, he saw the four-armed king, and falling at his feet, repeatedly besought his forgiveness, exclaiming, "I have done this deed unwittingly, thinking I was aiming at the deer! Have pity upon me, who am consumed by my crime; for you are to consume me!"

Bhagavat replied, "Fear not you in the least." Go, hunter, through my favour, to heaven the abode of the gods. As soon as he held thus spoken, a celestial car appeared, and the hunter, ascending it, forthwith proceeded to heaven. Then the illustrious Kṛṣṇa having united himself with his own pure spiritual, inexhaustible, inconceivable, unborn, undecaying, imperishable, and universal spirit, which is one with Vāsudeva, abandoned his mortal body and the condition of the threefold qualities.¹⁸

1. A name of Arjuna, the great friend of Kṛṣṇa, to whom the latter served as charioteer in the war between the Pāṇḍus and Kurus.

2. With Balarāma, Pradyumna, Aniruddha, and the rest.

3. The legend of the destruction of the Yādava race, and the death of Kṛṣṇa, appears probably in its Mauśala Parva of the Mahābhārata. It forms the narrative portion of the eleventh book of the Bhāgavata, having been previously briefly adverted to in the first and third books; and it is summarily told in the Uttara Khanḍa of the Padma Purāṇa.

4. The village of Piñḍāraka, still held in veneration, is situated in Gujarat, about twenty miles from the north-west extremity of the Peninsula, Hamilton. II 664.

5. The term is Erakā (एरका), which is explained in some medical lexicons, 'a kind of grass.' The commentator also calls it a kind of grass : and in the text of the Mahābhārata the term subsequently used, and as synonymous with it, is Trīṇa (त्रीण), 'grass.' The Mahābhārata, describing the affray which follows, mentions that the grass or rushes, on being plucked by Kṛṣṇa and the Yādavas, turn to clubs. The text, and that of the Bhāgavata, here say, that the powdered particle, floating on the sea, became rushes : or the latter may imply, that they fastened upon grass or weeds. The commentator, however, explains that the particles of iron being borne to land, they were so transformed. The Mahābhārata says nothing of the piece which could not be pounded, and this seems to be an embellishment either of our text or the Bhāgavata. The Mahābhārata, however, adds another precaution, which the two others have left unnoticed. Ugrasena causes a proclamation to be made, that none of the inhabitants of Dvārakā shall thenceforth drink wine, on pain of being impaled alive; and the people for some time observe the prohibition.

6. Nothing of this kind occurs in the Mahābhārata our text therefore offers an embellishment. The Bhāgavata, again improves upon the text; for, not content with a messenger, it makes Brahmā with the Prajāpatis, Śiva with the Bhūtas, Indra with the other divinities, all come in person : indicating evidently a later date, as plainly as the addition of the text shows it to be subsequent to the date of the legend in the Mahābhārata.

7. The Mahābhārata, which delights in describing portents and signs, does not fail to detail them here. A dreadful figure, death personified, haunts every house, coming and going no one knows how, and being invulnerable to the weapons by which he is assailed. Strong hurricanes blow; large rats multiply, and infest the roads and houses, and attack persons in their sleep; Sārikās, or starlings, utter inauspicious screams in their cages; storks imitate the hooting of owls, and goats the howling of jackals; cows bring-forth foals, and camels mules ; food, in the moment of being eaten, is filled with worms; fire burns with discoloured flames; and at sunset and sunrise the air is traversed by headless and hideous spirits. There is more to the same effect, which neither our text nor the Bhāgavata has ventured to detail. The whole passage has been published in Maurice's Ancient History of Hindustan, 11. 463; translated apparently by the late Sir Charles Wilkins. The names have been much disfigured either by the 'copyist or compositor.'

8. In the Mahābhārata it is said merely that Uddhava, who was versed in Yoga, foreseeing the destruction of the Yādavas, went away : that is, according to the commentator, he practised penance, and went to heaven: जाप्य योगमास्याय परलोकं। The Bhāgavata, taking the hint makes much more of it than our text, and expands it into a long course of instruction given by Kṛṣṇa to Uddhava, occupying 150 leaves.

9. See Bk. V. Ch. XXI. n. 3. By sending the Yādavas to Prabhāsa, the commentator asserts, Kṛṣṇa prevented purposely the Yādavas from obtaining Mukti, 'final liberation,' which would have been the consequence of dying at Dvārakā. Death at Prabhāsa conferred only Indra's heaven.

10. The Mahābhārata describes them as going forth with horses, elephants, and car, and their women and abundance of good cheer, and varieties of wine and meat: बहु नानाविधि चक्रुमद्य मांसप्रेकशः।

11. The Bhāgavata, like the text, adverts only in this general manner to the conflict; but the Mahābhārata gives the particulars. Yuyudhāna reproaches Kṛtavarman with having aided Aśvatthāman in his night attack on the Pāndu camp, and killing warriors in their sleep. Pradyumna joins in the abuse. Kṛtavarman retorts. Kṛṣṇa looks at him angrily. Sātyaki repeats the story of the Śyamantaka gem, by which he accuses Kṛtavarman of being an accomplice in the murder of Satrajit (Bk. IV. Ch. XIII). Satyabhāmā, the daughter of the latter, then mixes in the quarrel, and incites Kṛṣṇa to avenge her : but Sātyaki anticipates him, and murders Kṛtavarman. Saineya and the Bhojas attack Sātyaki; the Andhakas defend him : and the affray becomes general. Kṛṣṇa attempts to part the combatants, until Pradyumna is killed; and then taking up a handful of rushes, which become an iron club, he kills indiscriminately all that come in his way. The conflict continues until the greater part of the combatants have fallen, including all Kṛṣṇa's sons, and he then in wrath sweeps off all the survivors, except Babhru and Dāruka with his discus.

12. The Mahābhārata, as observed at the end of the last note, adds Babhru, but it presently gets rid of him, Kṛṣṇa sends him to take care of the old people, the women, and children, in Dvārakā, whilst Dāruka goes to bring Arjuna to their aid: but as he goes along, overcome with grief for the loss of his kindred, and approaching separation from Kṛṣṇa, he is killed by a club that is cast from a snare or trap set by a hunter. Kṛṣṇa then goes to Dvārakā, and desires Vasudeva to await the coming of Arjuna, after which he returns to Rāma, and sees the phenomenon described in the text; the serpent being Śeṣa, of whom Balarāma was the incarnation. The Bhāgavata does not mention this incident, merely observing that Rāma, by the power of Yoga, returned into himself ; that is, into Viṣṇu.

13. The women, the elders, and the children, amongst whom, as we shall presently see, was Vajra, the son of Aniruddha, who was established as chief of the Yādavas at Indraprastha, and who therefore escaped the destruction which overwhelmed their kinsmen, the Vṛṣnis. Kukkuras, and Andhakas, of Dvārakā. This was a fortunate reservation for the tribes which in various parts of India, both on the Ganges and in the Dakhin, profess to derive their origin from the Yādavas.

14. The process is explained by the commentator : 'By the force of Dhyāna or abstraction. Kṛṣṇa satisfies himself that he is Brahma (ब्रह्मैवाहमिति ध्यात्वा), or universal spirit: and is next convinced that he is therefore all things (सर्वभूतान्यप्यहमेव); by which his individuality ceases.'

15. The story is told in the Mahābhārata. Durvāsas was on one occasion hospitably entertained by Kṛṣṇa, but the latter omitted to wipe away the fragments of the meal which had fallen on the foot of the irascible sage, who thereupon foretold that Kṛṣṇa should be killed as in the text.

16. This is an allegorical personage, however, for Jara signifies 'infirmity,' 'old age,' 'decay.'

17. The Bhāgavata explains how this part of the foot became exposed. Kṛṣṇa had assumed one of the postures in which abstraction is practised : he had laid his left leg across his right thigh, by which the sole of the foot was turned outwards.

18. He became Nirguna, 'devoid of all qualities.'

Arjuna having found the bodies of Kṛṣṇa and of Rāma, performed for them, and the rest of the slain, the obsequial rites. The eight queens of Kṛṣṇa, who have been named, with Rukmiṇī at their head, embraced the body of Hari, and entered the funeral fire¹. Revatī also embracing the corpse of Rāma, entered the blazing pile, which was cool to her, happy in contact with her lord. Hearing these events, Ugrasena and Ānakadundubhi, with Devakī and Rohinī, committed themselves to the flames². The last ceremonies were performed for all these by Arjuna, who then made all the people leave the city, and took Vajra with him. The son of Kuntī conducted the thousands of the wives of Kṛṣṇa, with Vajra, and all the people, from Dvārakā, with tenderness and care, and travelled slowly away. The Sudharman palace and the Pārijāta tree, which had been brought to earth by Kṛṣṇa, both proceeded to heaven; and on the same day that Hari departed from the earth the powerful dark-bodied Kali age descended³. The ocean rose, and submerged the whole of Dvārakā except alone the dwelling of the deity of the race of Yadu. The sea has not yet been able to wash that temple away, and there Keśava constantly abides, even in the present day. Whoever visits that holy shrine, the place where Kṛṣṇa pursued his sports, is liberated from all his sins⁴.

The son of Pr̥thā, Arjuna, halted the people he had brought from Dvārakā in the Pañcanaḍa country⁵, in a rich and fertile spot; but the desires of the robbers (of the neighbourhood) were excited, when they observed so many widowed females, also such great riches, in the possession of Arjuna alone. Inflamed by their cupidity, they assembled the villainous Ābhīra⁶, and said to them, "Here is this Arjuna, immensely rich, and having numerous women, whose husbands have been slain, passing confidently amongst us; a disgrace to all brave men. His pride is raised by the death of Bhīṣma, Drona, Jayadratha, Karṇa, and others, whom he has slain: he does not know the prowess of simple villagers. Up, up; take you long thick staves: this stupid fellow despises us. Why should we not lift up our arms?" So saying, they rushed, armed with cudgels and clods of earth, upon the people, who were without their lord. Arjuna encountered them, and said to them in derision, "Retire, wretches, ignorant of what is right, unless you are desirous of dying." But they disregarded his menaces, and seized his treasures and his women, the wives of Visvakṣena. Thereupon Arjuna began to brace his heavenly bow Gāndīva, irresistible in battle; but it was in vain; for, in spite of all his efforts to tighten it, it continued flaccid: neither could he call to recollection the incantations of the superhuman weapons. Losing all patience, he launched, as best he might, his shafts upon the enemy; but those shot from Gāndīva merely scratched the skin. The arrows given him by Agni to carry certain destruction now were themselves destroyed, and were fatal to Arjuna in his contest with herdsmen. He endeavoured to recall the might to Kṛṣṇa; animated by which, his numerous arrows had overthrown mighty kings; but he tried in vain, for now they were put aside by the peasants, or they flew at random, wide of their aim. His arrows being expended, he beat the banditti with the horn of his bow; but they only laughed at his blows: and the barbarians, in the sight of Arjuna, carried off all the women of the Vṛṣṇi and Andhaka tribes, and went their way⁷.

Then Jishnu was sorely distressed, and lamented bitterly, exclaiming, "Alas! alas! I am deserted by my lord!" and he wept: and in that instant the bow and heavenly arms, his car and steeds, perished entirely, like a donation to an unlearned Brahman. "Resistless," said he, "are the decrees of fate, by whom feebleness has been inflicted upon me, deprived of my illustrious friend, and victory given to the base. These two arms are mine; mine is this fist; this is my place; I am Arjuna: but without that righteous aid all these are pityless. The valour of Arjuna, the strength of Bhîma, was all his work; and without him I am overcome by peasants: it cannot be from any other cause." So saying, Arjuna went to the city of Mathurâ and there installed and Yâdava prince, Vajra, as its king. There he beheld Vyâsa, who was living in a wood, and he approached the sage, and saluted him respectfully. The Muni surveyed him for some time, as he lay prostrate at his feet, and said to him, "How is it that I see you thus shorn of your lustre? Have you been guilty of illicit intercourse with women, or of the death of Brahman? Or have you suffered some grievous disappointment? that you are so dejected. Have your prayers for progeny, or other goods gifts, proved fruitless? Or have you indulged improper passions? that your lustre is so dim. Or are you one that devours the meal he has given to the Brahmans? Say, Arjuna, have you seized upon the substance of the poor? Has the wind of winnowing basket lighted upon you? or has an evil eye gazed upon you, Arjuna? that you look thus miserable. Have you been touched by the water of a fingernail? or has the water of a water-jar sprinkled you? or, what is most probably the case, have you been beaten by your inferiors in battle?"

Arjuna, having sighed deeply, related to Vyâsa all the circumstances of his discomfiture, and continued : "Hari, who was our strength, our might, our heroism, our prowess, our prosperity, our brightness, has left us, and departed. Deprived of him, our friend, illustrious, and ever kindly speaking, we have become as feeble as if made of straw. Puruṣottama, who was the living vigour of my weapons, my arrows and my bow, is gone. As long as we looked upon him, fortune, fame, wealth, dignity never abandoned us: but Govinda is gone from amongst us. That Kṛṣṇa has quitted earth, through whose power Bhîma, Drona, the king do Āṅga, Duryodhana, and the rest, were consumed. Not I alone, but Earth, has grown old, miserable and lustreless, in the absence of the holder of the discus. Kṛṣṇa, through devotion to whom Bhīṣma and other mighty men perished like moths in the flame of my valour, is gone; and I am now overcome by cowherds.

That I am shorn of my lustre I do not marvel: it is wonderful that I live. Surely, grandsire, I alone am so shameless as to survive the stain of indignity inflicted by the vile."

Vyāsa replied to Arjuna, and said, "Think no more, my son, of your disgrace: it does not become you to grieve. Know that time subjects all beings to similar vicissitude. Time effects the production and dissolution of all creatures. All that exists is founded on time. Know this, Arjuna, and retain your fortitude. Rivers, seas, mountains, the whole earth, gods, men, animals, trees, insects, are all created, and all will be destroyed by time. Knowing that all that is, is the effect of time, be tranquillized. These mighty works of Kṛṣṇa, whatever they have been performed to relieve earth of its burdens: for this he has come down. Earth, oppressed by her load, has had recourse to the assembly of the immortals; and Janārddna, who is one with time, has descended on that account. This object has been now accomplished: all the kings of the earth are slain; the race of Vṛṣṇi and Andhaka is destroyed: no more remained for him to accomplish.

Therefore has the lord departed whither he pleased, his ends being all fulfilled. At the period of creation the god of gods creates; in that duration he preserves; and at the end of all is mighty to annihilate. Now all is done. Therefore, Arjuna, be not afflicted by the defeat: the prowess of mortals is the gift of time. Bhīṣma, Karna and other kings, have been slain by you alone; this was the work of time; and why, therefore, should not your discomfiture, by those less than you are, occur? In like manner as through your devotion to Viṣṇu these were overthrown by you, so at last has your defeat by miserable thieves been wrought by time. That divinity, assuming various bodies, preserves the world; and in the end the lord of creatures destroys it. In the birth of thy fortunes Janārdana was thy friend; in their decline, they enemies have been favoured by Keśava. Who would have believed that you should slay all the descendants of Kuru, and kindred of Gangā? Who would have believed that peasants should triumph over you? Be assured, son of Prithā, that it is but the sport of the universal Hari that the Kauravas have been destroyed by you, and that you have been defeated by herdsmen. With respect to the women whom you lament, and who have been carried off by the thieves, hear from me an ancient story, which will explain why this has happened.

"In former times a Brāhmaṇa, named Aṣṭāvakra⁹, was pursuing his religious penances, standing in water, and meditating on the eternal spirit, for many years. In consequences of the overthrow of the Asuras, there was a great festival on the summit of Meru: on their way to which, Rambhā, Tilottamā, and hundreds and thousands of beautiful nymphs, saw the ascetic Aṣṭāvakra, and they praised and hymned him for his devotions. They bowed down before him, and eulogized him, as he was immersed up to his throat in water, his hair twisted in a braid. So they sang in honour of him whatever they thought would be most agreeable to that most eminent of Brāhmaṇas.

Aṣṭāvakra at last said to them, 'I am well pleased with you, illustrious damsels; whatever you wish for, ask of me, and I will give it you, however, difficult it may be of attainment.' Then all those nymphs, Rambhā, Tilottamā, and others, recorded in the Vedas, replied, 'It is enough for us that you are pleased; what need we aught else, venerable Brahman?' But some amongst them said, 'If, exalted sir, you are indeed pleased with us, then grant us a husband, the best of men, and sovereign of the Brahmans.'

'So be it,' replied Aṣṭāvakra, and thereupon came up from the waters. When the nymphs beheld him coming out of the water, and saw that he was very ugly, and crooked in eight places, they could not restrain their merriment, but laughed aloud. The Muni was very angry, and cursed them, and said, 'Since you have been so impertinent as to laugh at my deformity, I denounce upon you this imprecation : through the grace I have shown unto you, you shall obtain the first of males for your husband; but in consequence of my curse, you shall afterwards fall into the hands of thieves.' When the nymphs heard this uttered by the Muni, they endeavoured to appease him; and they so far succeeded, that he announced to them they should finally return to the sphere of the gods. It is in consequence, then, of the curse of the Muni Aṣṭāvakra that these females, who were at first the wives of Keśava, have now fallen into the hands of the barbarians; and there is no occasion, Arjuna, for you to regret it in the least. All this destruction has been effected by the lord of all; and your end is also nigh at hand, since he has withdrawn from you strength, splendour, valour, and pre-eminence.

Death is the doom of every one who is born; fall is the end of exaltation: union terminates in separation; and growth tends but to decay. Knowing all this, wise men are susceptible of neither grief nor joy; and those who learn their ways are even as they are (equally free from pleasure or pain). Do you therefore, most excellent prince, understand this truth and, along with your brothers, relinquish every thing, and repair to the holy forest. Go now, and say from me to Yudhiṣṭhīra, that he to-morrow, with his brethren, tread the path of heroes."

I have thus narrated to you, Maitreya, in detail, the action of Vāsudeva, when he was born in the race of Yadu.

NOTES

1. The Mahābhārata takes the wives of Kṛṣṇa first to Indraprasthā, and there Rukmiṇī and four others burn; but Satyabhāmā and others become ascetics, going to perform Tapasyā in the forest.

2. It is merely said in the Mahābhārata that Vasudeva expired; on which four of his wives burnt themselves.

3. The Kali age commenced from the death of Kṛṣṇa, according to the usual notions; but it is commonly supposed to commence a little later, or with the reign of Parīkṣit.

4. The Bhāgavata agrees with the text in excepting the temple of Dvārakā, and asserting that it still remains, in direct contradiction of the Mahābhārata, which declares that the sea did not spare any part whatever. It is clear, therefore, that when the latter was compiled the temple was not standing, and that it was erected between the date of the compilation and that of the two Purāṇas. The present shrine, which is held in great repute, stands at the extremity of the peninsula of Guzerat. It is still an object of pilgrimage; it was so in the reign of Akbar (Ayin Akbari); and has been so, on doubt, from a remote period. The image formerly worshipped there was carried off 600 years ago, and this was most probably subsequent to the date of both the Purāṇas; for the idol was a form of Kṛṣṇa, called Raṇa chor, a popular divinity, unknown in the Paurāṇik pantheon. Another image was substituted in place of that which was taken away. Notwithstanding the testimony of our text. and that of the Bhāgavata, the originality of the temple is disputed, and a place thirty miles south from Porbandar is said to be the spot where Dvārakā was swallowed up by the ocean. Hamilton, from Macmurdo, &c. 1.662.

5. The country of the five rivers. the Punjab: rather an out of the way route from Dvārakā to Delhi.

6. Abhīras mean 'herds', and they are afterwards called by Arjuna, Gopālas, 'Herdsmen'. The pastoral tribes of the west of India, and particularly those of Afghanistan, almost always combine the character of freebooter with that of shepherd.

7. The Principal wives of Kṛṣṇa, however, according to the Mahābhārata, escaped. The occurrence is described there much in the same way, but more briefly. It is not detailed in the Bhāgavata.

8. A name of Vyāsa.

9. The story of Ashtāvakra is related in the Mahābhārata. He was the son of Kahora, who neglecting his wife, was rebuked for it by his yet unborn son. The father angrily cursed him, that he should be born bent in every part; and he was accordingly brought forth crooked (vakra) in eight limbs (ashṭa). He became nevertheless a celebrated sage. Maitreya said— You have narrated to me, illustrious sage, the creation of the world, the genealogies of the patriarchs, the duration of the Manvantaras, and the dynastics of princes, in detail. I am now desirous to hear from you an account of the dissolution of the world, the season of total destruction, and that which occurs at the expiration of the Kalpa¹.

Parāśara said— Hear from me, Maitreya, exactly the circumstances of the end of all things, and the dissolution that occurs either at the expiration of a Kalpa, or that which takes place at the close of the life of Brahmā. A month of mortals is a day and night of the progenitors: a year of mortals is a day and night of the gods. Twice a thousand aggregates of the four ages is a day and night of Brahmā². The four ages are the Kṛta, Tretā, Dvāpara, and Kali; comprehending together twelve thousand years of the gods. There are infinite successions of these four ages, of a similar description, the first of which is always called the Kṛta, and the last the Kali. In the first, the Kṛta, is that age which is created by Brahmā; in the last, which is the Kali age, a dissolution of the world occurs.

The observance of caste, order, and institutes will not prevail in the Kali age, nor will that of the ceremonial enjoined by the Sāma, Ṛk, and Yajur Vedas. Marriages in this age will not be conformable to the ritual, nor will the rules that connect the spiritual preceptor and his disciple be in force. The laws that regulate the conduct of husband and wife will be disregarded, and oblations to the gods with fire no longer be offered. In whatever family he may be born, a powerful and rich man will be held entitled to espouse maidens of every tribe. A regenerate man will be initiated in any way whatever and such acts of penance as may be performed will be unattended by any results⁴. Every text will be scripture that people choose to think so⁵: all gods will be gods to them that worship them; and all orders of life will be common alike to all persons. In the Kali age, fasting austerity, liberality, practised according to the pleasure of those by whom they are observed, will constitute righteousness. Pride of wealth will be inspired by very insignificant possessions.

Pride of beauty will be prompted by (on other personal charm than fine) hair. Gold, jewels, diamonds, clothes, will all have perished, and then hair will be the only ornament with which women can decorate themselves. Wives will desert their husbands, when they lose their property; and they only who are wealthy will be considered by women as their lords.

He who gives away much money will be master of men; and family descent will no longer be a title of supremacy. Accumulated treasures will be expended on (ostentatious) dwellings. The minds of men will be wholly occupied in acquiring wealth; and wealth will be spent solely on selfish gratifications. Women will follow their inclinations, and be ever fond of pleasure. Men will fix their desires upon riches, even though dishonestly acquired.

No man will part with the smallest fraction of the smallest coin⁶, though entreated by a friend. Men of all degrees will conceit themselves to be equal with Brahmans. Cows will be held in esteem only as they supply milk⁷. The people will be almost always in dread of dearth, and apprehensive of scarcity; and will hence ever be watching the appearances of the sky: they will all live, like anchorites, upon leaves and roots and fruit, and put a period to their lives through fear of famine and want.

In truth there will never be abundance in the Kali age, and men will never enjoy pleasure and happiness. They will take their food without previous ablution, and without worshipping fire, gods, or offering obsequial libations to their progenitors. The women will be fickle, short of stature, gluttonous: they will have many children, and little means: scratching their heads with both hands, they will pay no attention to the commands of their husbands or parents: they will be selfish, abject, and slatternly: they will be scolds and liars: they will be indecent and immoral in their conduct, and will ever attach themselves to dissolute men. Youths, although disregarding the rules of studentship, will study the Vedas. Householders will neither sacrifice nor practise becoming liberality. Anchorets will subsist upon food accepted from rustics; and mendicants will be influenced by regard for friends and associates⁸. Princes, instead of protecting will plunder their subjects; and, under the pretext of levying customs, will rob merchants of their property.

In the Kali age every one who has cars and elephants and steeds will be a Rājā⁹: every one who is feeble will be a slave. Vaiśyas will abandon agriculture and commerce, and gain a livelihood by servitude or the exercise of mechanical arts. Sūdras, seeking a subsistence by begging, and assuming, the outward marks of religious mendicants, will become the impure followers of impious and heretical doctrines¹⁰.

Oppressed by famine and taxation, men will desert their native lands, and go to those countries which are fit for coarser grains.¹¹ The path of the Vedas being obliterated, and men having deviated into heresy, iniquity will flourish, and the duration of life will therefore decrease. In consequence of horrible penances not enjoined by scripture, and of the vices of the rulers, children will die in their infancy.

Women will bear children at the age of Vedas? what are gods or Brahmans? what five, six, or seven years; and men beget them when they are eight, nine, or ten. A man will be grey when he is twelve; and no one will exceed twenty years of life.¹² Men will possess little sense, vigour, or virtue, and will therefore perish in a very brief period. In proportion as heresy extends, so, Maitreya, shall the progress of the Kali age be estimated by the wise.

In proportion as the number of the pious, who adhere to the lessons of the Vedas, diminishes—as the efforts of individuals who cultivate virtue relax—as the first of males becomes no longer the object of sacrifices—as respect for the teachers of the Vedas declines—and as regard is acknowledged for the disseminators of heresy—so may wise men note the augmented influence of the Kali age.¹³

In the Kali age, Maitreya, men, corrupted by unbelievers, will refrain from adoring Viṣṇu, the lord of sacrifice, the creator and lord of all; and will say, “Of what authority are the need is there of purification with water?” Then will the clouds yield scanty rain: then will the corn be light in ear, and the grain will be poor, and of little sap: garments will be mostly made of the fibres, of the San:¹⁴ the principal of trees will be the Sami¹⁵: the prevailing caste will be the Sūdra: millet will be the more common grain: the milk in use will be chiefly that of goats: unguents will be made of Usīra grass.

The mother and father-in-law will be venerated in place of parents; and a man’s friends will be his brother-in-law, or one who has a wanton wife. Men will say, “Who has a father? who has a mother? each one is born according to his deeds;” and therefore they will look upon a wife’s or husband’s parents as their own. Endowed with little sense, men, subject to all the infirmities of mind, speech, and body, will daily commit sins; and everything that is calculated to afflict beings, vicious, impure, and wretched, will be generated in the Kali age.

Then shall some places follow a separate duty,¹⁶ devoid of holy study, oblations of fire, and invocations of the gods.¹⁷ Then, in the Kali age, shall a man acquire by a trifling exertion as much eminence in virtue as is the result of arduous penance in the Kṛta age, of purity.¹⁸

1. Two kinds of great or universal dissolution are here intimated; one occurring at the end of a Kalpa, or day of Brahmā, to which the term Upasanhriti is applied in the text, and Ātyantika laya by the commentator; and the other taking place at the end of the life of Brahmā, which is termed a great or elemental dissolution: Mahā pralaya and Prākṛta pralaya.

2. These measures of time are more fully detailed in the first book: see Bk. I. Ch. III.

3. This is an allusion to a popular notion, originating probably with Manu: "In the Kṛta age the genius of truth and right stands firm on his four feet; but in the following ages he is deprived successively of one foot," etc. I. 81, 82.

4. 'Such an act is just what it is;' यासैव प्रायश्चित्क्रिया कलौ। that is, it may be attended by inconvenience to the individual, but is utterly inefficacious for the expiation of sin.

5. Whether it is conformable or contradictory to the Vedas and the law. The passage may be rendered also, 'The doctrine or dogma of any one soever will be scripture.'

6. He will not part with the half of the half of half a Pāṇa; that is, with ten Cowries; a Pana being equal to eighty Cowries, or small shells. Five Panas are equal to one Ānā, or the sixteenth of a Rupee; and, at two shillings the Rupee, ten Cowries are equal to about one-seventh of a farthing.

7. They will be valued for their individual use only, not from any notion of their generic sanctity.

8. The Bhāgavata has, "Religious students will be regardless of vows and purification; householders will beg, not give alms; anchorets will dwell in villages; and mendicants will be desirous of riches."

9. That is, princes and warriors will be so on longer by virtue of their birth and caste.

10. Most of the mendicant orders admit members without distinction of caste; but probably Buddhists especially are here intended. The Bhāgavata repeatedly alludes to the diffusion of heretical doctrines and practices, the substitution of outward signs and marks for devotion, and the abandonment of the worship of Viśnu. The Śaiva mendicant orders are probably those especially in view. The same probably are intended by our text in the subsequent allusion to unauthorized austerities, and sectarian marks.

11. 'Gavedhuka (Coix barbata) and other bad sorts of grain.' गवेधुकाकदनादान् देशान्। Another reading is, गोधूमान् यवानादान्। 'Countries growing wheat, barley and the like.' But to place wheat and barley amongst inferior grains, and to rank them lower than rice, is a classification that could have occurred to a native of Bengal alone.

12. The Vāyu says three and twenty; the Bhāgavata, from twenty to thirty.

13. The complaints of the prevalence of heterodox doctrines, and neglect of the practices of the Vedas, which recur in the Bhāgavata and our text, indicate a period of change in the condition of the Hindu religion, which it would be important to verify. If reference is made to Buddhism, to which in some respects the allusions especially apply, it would probably denote a period not long subsequent to the Christian era; but it is more likely to be of a later date, or in the eighth and ninth centuries, when Śankara is said to have reformed a variety of corrupt practices, and given rise to others, See As. Res. vol. XVI. p. 12.

14. Crotalaria juncea.

15. The silk cotton, Bambax heptaphylla.

16. The expression Kvacit-lokah (क्वचिलोकः), 'a certain place', is explained by the commentator, Kīkaṭa, etc. (कीकटादी); confirming the inference that Buddhism is especially aimed at in the previous passages; for Kīkaṭa, or south Behar, is the sense of Śākyā's earliest and most successful labours.

17. Several of the Purāṇas contain allusions to the degeneracy of the Kali age, but none afford more copious details. The description in the Bhāgavata is much shorter; that of the Vāyu is much the same, and employs many of the same verses and illustrations.

18. This might be suspected of being said ironically, referring to what had been just observed of places where a religion prevailed that required neither study nor sacrifice. The commentator, however, understands it literally, and asserts that allusion is here made to the Vaiṣṇava faith, in which devotion to Viśnu or Kṛṣṇa, and the mere repetition of his names, are equally efficacious in the Kali age with the penances and sacrifices of the preceding ages: therefore he concludes the Kali, by this one property, is the best of all the ages: अनेनैकेन युणेन कलि: सर्वश्रेष्ठः इत्यर्थः। This interpretation is confirmed by the following chapter.

It was once a matter of dispute amongst the sages, at what season the least moral merit obtained the greatest reward, and by whom it was most easily displayed. In order to terminate the discussion, they went to Veda Vyāsa to remove their doubts. They found the illustrious Muni, my son, half immersed in the water of the Ganges; and awaiting the close of his ablutions, the sages remained on the banks of the sacred stream, under shelter of a grove of trees. As my son plunged down into the water, and again rose up from it, the Munis heard him exclaim, "Excellent, is the Kali age!" Again he dived, and again rising, said in their hearing, "Well done, well done Śūdra; you are happy!" Again he sand down, and as he once more emerged they heard him say, "Well done, well done, women; they are happy! who are more fortunate than they?" After this, my son finished his bathing, and the sages met him as he approached to welcome them. After he had given them seats, and they had proffered their respects, the son of Satyavatī said to them, "On what account have you come to me?" They replied, "We came to you to consult you on a subject on which we entertain some doubt; but that may be at present suspended: explained to us something else. We heard you say, 'Excellent is the Kali age! Well done, Śūdra! Well done, women!' Now we are desirous to know why this was said, why you called them repeatedly happy. Tell us the meaning of it, if it be not a mystery. We will then propose to you the question that occupies our thoughts."

Being thus addressed by the Munis, Vyāsa smiled, and said to them, "Hear excellent sages, why I uttered the words 'Well done, well done.' The fruit of penance, of continence, of silent prayer, and the like, practised in the Kṛta age for ten years, in the Treta for one year, in the Dvāpara for a month, is obtained in the Kali age in a day and night: therefore did I exclaim, 'Excellent, excellent, is the Kali age!' That reward which a man obtains in the Kṛta by abstract meditation, in the Treta by sacrifice, in the Dvāpara by adoration, he receives in the Kali by merely reciting the name of Keśava. In the Kali age a man displays the most exalted virtue by every little exertion; therefore, pious sages, who know what virtue is, I was pleased with the Kali age. Formerly the Vedas were to be acquired by the twice-born through the diligent observances of self-denial; and it was their duty to celebrate sacrifices conformably to the ritual, Then idle prayers, idle feasts, and fruitless ceremonies, were practised but to mislead the twice-born; for although observed by them devoutly, yet, in consequence of some irregularity in their celebration, sin was incurred in all their works, and what they ate, or what they drank, did not effect the fulfilment of their desires. In all their objects the twice-born enjoyed no independence, and they attained their respective spheres only with exceeding pain. The Śūdra, on the contrary, more fortunate than they, reaches his assigned station by rendering them service, and performing merely the sacrifice of preparing food, in which no rules determine what may or may not be eaten, what may or may not be drunk. Therefore, most excellent sages, is the Śūdra fortunate.

"Riches are accumulated by men in modes not incompatible with their peculiar duties, and they are then to be bestowed upon the worthy, and expended in constant sacrifice. There is great trouble in their acquisition; and great grief for their loss. Thus, eminent Brāhmaṇas, through these and other sources of anxiety, men attain their allotted spheres of Prajāpati and the rest only by exceeding labour and suffering. This is not the case with women: a woman has only to honour her husband, in act, thought, and speech, to reach the same region to which he is elevated; and she thus accomplishes her object without any great exertion. This was the purport of my exclamation, 'Well done!' the third time. I have thus related to you what you asked. Now demand the question you came to put to me, in any way you please, and I will make you a distinct reply."

The Munis then said to Vyāsa, "The question we intended to have asked you has been already answered by you in your reply to our subsequent inquiry." On hearing which Kṛṣṇa Dvaipāyana laughed, and said to the holy persons who had come to see him, whose eyes were wide open with astonishment, "I perceived, with the eye of divine knowledge, the question you intended to ask, and in allusion to it I uttered the expressions, 'Well done, well done.' In truth, in the Kali age duty is discharged with very little trouble by mortals, whose faults are all washed away by the water of their individual merits; by Śūdras, through diligent attendance only upon the twice-born; and by women, through the slight effort of obedience to their husbands. Therefore, Brāhmaṇas, did I thrice express my admiration of their happiness; for in the Kṛta and other ages great were the toils of the regenerate to perform their duty. I waited not for your inquiry, but replied at once to the question you purposed to ask. Now, ye who know what virtue is, what else do you wish me to tell you?"

The Munis then saluted and praised Vyāsa, and, being freed by him from uncertainty, departed as they came. To you also, excellent Maitreya, have I imparted this secret, this one great virtue of the otherwise vicious Kali age. The dissolution of the world, and the aggregation of the elements, I will now describe to you.¹

1. The illustration of the efficacy of devotion to Viṣṇu given in this chapter is peculiar to this Purāṇa, but the doctrine is common to it and the Bhāgavata. It is repeatedly inculcated in that work. The paralleled passage in the twelfth book is the following. "Puruṣottama, abiding in the hearts of men, takes away all the sins of the Kali age, produced by place or property. Bhagavān, abiding in the heart, the heard, repeated, read of, worshipped, or honoured, dissipates the ills of men for ten thousand births. As fire, entering into the substance of gold, purifies it from the allows with which it is debased in the mine, so Viṣṇu, united with the devotee, is the refiner from all that is evil. By learning, penance, suppression of breath, friendship, pilgrimage, ablution, mortification, gifts, prayer, the soul attains not that exceeding purity which it derives from the presence of Viṣṇu. Therefore, with all your soul, O king, hold Keśava ever present in your heart. Let one about to die be most careful in this; for so he goes to supreme felicity. Let the name of the supreme god, Viṣṇu, be repeated diligently by all in their last moments; for he who desires liberation shall attain it by the frequent repetition of the name of Kṛṣṇa. Final felicity is derived in the Kṛta age from holy study; in the Treta, from religious rites. In the Dvāpara it is attained by pious services; but in the Kali age it is secured by repeating the name of Hari." Similar doctrines are taught in the Giṭa, and other Vaiṣṇava works. See As. Res. vol. XVI. p. 116.

Parāśara continued— A Parārddha, Maitreya, is that number which occurs in the eighteenth place of figures, enumerated according to the rule of decimal notation³. At the end of twice that period elemental dissolution occurs, when all the discrete products of nature are withdrawn into their indiscrete source. The shortest period of time is a Mātrā, which is equal to the twinkling of the human eye. Fifteen Mātrās make a Kāṣṭhā; thirty Kāṣṭhās, one Kalā; fifteen Kalās, one Nāḍikā. A Nāḍikā is ascertained by a measure of water, with a vessel made of twelve Palas and a half of copper, in the bottom of which there is to be a hole made with a tube of gold, of the weight of four Māṣas, and four inches long⁴. According to the Māgadha measure, the vessel should hold a Prastha (or sixteen Palas) of water. Two of these Nādīs make one Muhūrtta; thirty of which are one day and night. Thirty such periods form a month; twelve months make a year, or a day and night of the gods; and three hundred and sixty such days constitute a year of the celestials. An aggregate of four ages contains twelve thousand divine years; and a thousand periods of four ages complete a day of Brahmā. That period is also termed a Kalpa, during which fourteen Manus preside; and at the end of it occurs the incidental or Brahmā dissolution.

The dissolution of existing beings is of three kinds, incidental, elemental and absolute¹. The incidental is that which relates to Brahmā, and occurs at the end of a Kalpa: the elemental is that which takes place after two Parārddhas: the absolute is final liberation from existence.

At the end of a thousand periods of four ages the earth is for the most part exhausted. A total dearth then ensues, which lasts a hundred years; and, in consequence of the failure of food, all beings become languid and exanimate, and at last entirely perish. The eternal Viṣṇu then assumes the character of Rudra, the destroyer, and descends to reunite all his creatures with himself. He enters into the seven rays of the sun,⁵ drinks up all the waters of the globe, and causes all moisture whatever, in living bodies or in the soil, to evaporate; thus drying up the whole earth. The seas, the rivers, the mountain torrents, and springs, are all exhaled; and so are all the waters of Pātāla, the regions below the earth.

Thus fed, through his intervention, with abundant moisture, the seven solar rays dilate to seven suns⁶, whose radiance glows above, below and on every side, and sets the three worlds and Pātāla on fire. The three worlds, consumed by these suns, become rugged and deformed throughout the whole extent of their mountains, rivers, and seas; and the earth, bare of verdure, and destitute of moisture, alone remains, resembling in appearance the bank of a tortoise.

The destroyer of all things, Hari, in the form of Rudra, who is the flame of time, becomes the scorching breath of the serpent Śeṣa, and thereby reduces Pātāla to ashes. The great fire, when it has burnt all the divisions of Pātāla, proceeds to the earth, and consumes it also. A vast whirlpool of eddying flame then spreads to the region of the atmosphere, and the sphere of the gods, and wraps them in ruin. The three spheres show like a frying-pan amidst the surrounding flames, that prey upon all moveable or stationary things. The inhabitants of the two upper spheres, having discharged their functions, and being annoyed by the heat, remove to the sphere above, or Maharloka. When that becomes heated, its tenants, who after the full period of their stay are desirous of ascending to higher regions, depart for the Janaloka⁷.

Janārddana, in the person of Rudra, having consumed the whole world, breathes forth heavy clouds; and those called Samvartta, resembling vast elephants in bulk, overspread the sky, roaring, and darting lightening. Such are these massy clouds in hue: in form some resemble towns, some mountains, some are like houses and hovels, and some are like columns. Mighty in size, and loud in thunder, they fill all space. Showering down torrents of water, these clouds quench the dreadful fires which involve the three worlds, and then they rain uninterruptedly for a hundred years, and delug the whole world. Pouring down in drops as large as dice, these rains overspread the earth, and fill the middle region, and inundate heaven. The world is now enveloped in darkness, and all things, animate or inanimate, having perished, the clouds continue to pour down their waters for more than a hundred years.

1. The first is called Naimittaka, 'occasional' or 'incidental' or Brähmya, as occasioned by the intervals of Brahmā's days; the destruction of creatures, though not of the substance of the world, occurring during his night. The general resolution of the elements into their primitive source, or Prakṛti, is the Prākṛtika destruction, and occurs at the end of Brahmā's life. The third, the absolute or final. Ātyantika, is individual annihilation; Mokṣa, exemption for ever from future existence. The Bhāgavata here notices the fourth kind, of which mention occurred in a preceding passage (Bk. I. Ch. III). Nitya or constant dissolution; explaining it to be the imperceptible change that all things suffer in the various stages of growth and decay, life and death. The various conditions of beings subject to change are occasioned by that constant dissolution of life which is rapidly produced by the resistless stream of time, taking every thing perpetually aways: कालसोत्सोजवेनाशु हियमाणस्य नित्यदा परिणामिनामवस्थास्ता: जन्मप्रलयहेतवः। The Vāyu describes but three kinds of Pralaya, omitting the Nitya.

2. Maitreya has a rather indifferent memory (see Bk. I. Ch. III); but the periods specified in the two places do not agree. In the first book two Parārddhas, as equal to one hundred years of Brahmā, are 311,040, 000,000,000 years of mortals.

3. Counting according to this mode of Vāyu Purāṇa more details are specified. Those enumeration, a Parārdha is represented by sainted mortals who have diligently worshipped Viṣṇu, 100,000,000,000,000,000. The Vāyu Purāṇa has a ṣaḍa, time of dissolution, in Maharloka, with the Pitṛs, 10; Śatam (शतं), 100; Sahasram (सहस्रं), 1000; Ayutam (अयुतं), 10,000; Niyutam (नियुतं), 100,000; Prayutam (प्रयुतं), 1,000,000; Arvudam (अर्वुदं), 10,000,000; Nyurvudam (न्युर्वुदं), 100,000,000; Vrindam (वृन्दं), 1000,000,000; Param (परं), 10,000,000,000; Kharvam (खर्वं), 100,000,000,000; Nikharvam (निखर्वं), 1000,000,000,000; Śankham (शंखं), 10,000,000,000,000; Padmam (पद्मं), 100,000,000,000,000; Samudram (समुद्रं), 1000,000,000,000; Madhyamam (मध्यमं), 10,000,000,000,000,000; Parārddham (परार्द्धं), 100,000,000,000,000,000. In the first book the Parārddham, as the half of Brahmā's life, it but 155,520,000,000,000 fifteen instead of eighteen places of figures.

4. The description of the Clepsydra is very brief, and wanting in precision. One of the commentaries is more explicit: 'A vessel made of twelve Palas and half of copper, and holding a Prastha, Māgadha measure, of water, broad at top, and having at bottom a tube of gold of four Māshas weight, four fingers long, is placed in water, and the time in which the vessel is filled by the whole in the bottom is called a Nāḍika:' सार्ड्धादशपलताम्नमयं मागधप्रस्थसमितं ऊर्ध्वायतं पात्रं चतुर्माष्टुरुलहेम शलाकया कृतापच्छिद्रं जलेस्थापितं तेनच्छिद्रेण यावता कालेन युर्ध्वे तावत्कालो नाडिकेति! The term Śalākā generally means a needle or stake, but it must here denote a pipe. The common measure of the Nāḍi is a thin shallow brass cup, with a small hole in the bottom. It is placed on the surface of water, in a large vessel, where nothing can disturb it, and where the water gradually fills the cup, and sinks it. As. Res. vol. V. p. 87.

5. See Bk. II. Ch. XI. n. 3.

6. These also have their several appellations: the commentator quotes the Vedas as the authority; Ārāga, Bhrāja, Paṭala, Pataṅga, Svamābhāk, Jyotiṣmat, and Savibhāsa.

7. The passage may also be understood. 'Those go to Janaloka who are desirous of obtaining Brahma, or final liberation, through the ten stages of perfection— devotion, penance, truth, etc.' In the time of dissolution, in Maharloka, with the Manus, the seven Rṣis, the various orders of celestial spirits, and the gods. These, when the heat of the flames that destroy the worlds reaches to Maharloka, repair to Janaloka in their subtle forms, destined to become re-embodied, in similar capacities as their former, when the world is renewed, at the beginning of the succeeding Kalpa. This continues throughout the life of Brahmā; at the expiration of his life all are destroyed: but those who have then attained a residence in the Brahmaloka, by having identified themselves in spirit with the supreme, are finally resolved into the sole-existing Brahma.

When the waters have reached the region of the seven Ṛsis, and the whole of the three worlds is one ocean, they stop. The breath of Viṣṇu becomes a strong wind, which blows for more than a hundred years, until all the clouds are dispersed. The wind is then reabsorbed, and he of whom all things are made, the lord by whom all things exist, he who is inconceivable, without beginning of the universe, reposes, sleeping upon Sesha, in the midst of the deep.

The creator, Hari, sleeps upon the ocean, in the form of Brahma—glorified by Sanaka and the saints who had gone to the Janaloka, and contemplated by the holy inhabitants of Brahmaloka, anxious for final liberation—involved in mystic slumber, the celestial personification of his own illusions, and meditating on his own ineffable spirit, which is called Vāsudeva. This, Maitreya, is the dissolution termed incidental, because Hari, in the form of Brahmā, sleep there, as its incidental cause.

When the universal spirit wakes, the world revives; when he closes his eyes, all things fall upon the bed of mystic slumber. In like manner as a thousand great ages constitute a day of Brahmā, so his night consists of the same period; during which the world is submerged by a vast ocean. Awaking at the end of his night, the unborn, Viśnu, in the character of Brahmā, creates the universe anew, in the manner formerly related to you!

I have thus described to you the intermediate dissolution of the world, occurring at the end of every Kalpa. I will now, Maitreya, describe to you elemental dissolution. When by dearth and fire all the worlds and Pātālas are withered up and the modifications of Mahat and other products of nature are by all the will of Kṛṣṇa destroyed, the progress of elemental dissolution is begun.

आपो ग्रसन्ति वै पूर्वं भूमेर्गस्यात्मकं गुणम्।

 प्रलीने च ततस्समिन् वायुभूतेऽखिलात्मनि।।

Then, first, the waters swallow up the property of earth, which is the rudiment of smell; and earth, deprived of its property, proceeds to destruction. Devoid of the rudiment of odour, the earth becomes one with water. The waters then being much augmented, roaring, and rushing along, fill up all space, whether agitated or still. When the universe is thus pervaded by the waves of the watery element, its rudimental flavour is licked up by the element of fire, and, in consequence of the destruction of their rudiments, the waters themselves are destroyed. Deprived of the essential rudiment of flavour, they become one with fire, and the universe is therefore entirely filled with flame, which drinks up the water on every side, and gradually overspreads the whole of the world. While space is enveloped in flame, above, below, and all around, the element of wind seizes upon the rudimental property, or form, which is the cause of light; and that being withdrawn, all becomes of the nature of air.

The rudiment of form being destroyed, and fire deprived of its rudiment, air extinguishes fire, and spreads resistlessly over space, which is deprived of light when fire merges into air. Air then, accompanied by sound, which is the source of ether, extends every where throughout the ten regions of space, until ether seizes upon contact, its rudimental property; by the loss of which, air is destroyed, and ether remains unmodified: devoid of form, flavour, touch, and smell, it exists unembodied and vast, and pervades the whole of space. Ether, whose characteristic property and rudiment is sound, exists alone, occupying all the vacuity of space. But then the radical elements egotism devours sound, and all the elements and faculties are at once merged into their original.

 प्रत्याहारे तु ताः सर्वा प्रविशन्ति परस्परम्॥ ३०॥

This primary element is consciousness, combined with the property of darkness, and is itself swallowed up by Mahat, whose characteristic property is intelligence; and earth and Mahat are the inner and outer boundaries of the universe. In this manner, as in the creation were the seven forms of nature (Prakṛti), reckoned from Mahat to earth², so, at the time of elemental dissolution, these seven successively re-enter into each other.

 प्रोच्यते प्रकृतिर्हेतुं प्रधानं कारणं परम्॥ ३४॥

The egg of Brahmā is dissolved in the waters that surround it, with its seven zones, seven oceans, seven regions, and their mountains. The investure of water is drunk up by fire; the stratum of fire is absorbed by that of air: air blends itself with ether: the primary element of egotism devours the ether, and is itself taken up by intellect, which, along with all these, is seized upon by nature (Prakṛti). Equilibrium of the three properties, without excess or deficiency, is called nature Prakṛti, origin (Hetu), the chief principle (Pradhāna), cause (Kāraṇa), supreme (Param).

इत्येषा प्रकृतिः सर्वा व्यक्ताव्यक्तस्वरूपिणी।
 व्यक्तस्वरूपमव्यक्ते तस्मिन् भैत्रेय! लीयते॥ ३५॥
 एकः शुद्धेऽक्षरो नित्यः सर्वव्यापी तथा पुमान्।

 स ब्रह्म तत् परं धाम परमात्मा स च ॥
 स विष्णुः सर्वमेवेदं यतो नावर्तते यतिः॥ ३८॥

This Prakṛti is essentially the same, whether discrete or indiscrete; only that which is discrete is finally lost or absorbed in the indiscrete. Spirit also, which is one, pure, imperishable, eternal, all-pervading, is a portion of that supreme spirit which is all things. That spirit which is other than (embodied) spirit, in which there are no attributes of name, species, or the like— which is one with all wisdom, and is to be understood as sole existence— that is Brahma, infinite glory, supreme spirit, supreme power, Viṣṇu, all that is; from whence the perfect sage returns no more.

प्रकृतिर्या मया ख्याता व्यक्ताव्यक्तस्वरूपिणी।
पुरुषश्चाप्युभावेतौ लीयते परमात्मनि॥ ३१॥
परमात्मा च सर्वेषामाद्यारः परमेश्वरः।
विष्णुर्नामा स वेदेषु वेदान्तेषु च गीयते॥ ४०॥

Nature (Prakṛti), which I have described to you as being essentially both discrete and indiscrete, and spirit (which is united with body), both resolve into supreme spirit. Supreme spirit is the upholder of all things, and the ruler of all things, and is glorified in the Vedas and in the Vcdanta by the name of Viṣṇu.

प्रवृत्तच्छ निवृत्तच्छ द्विविधं कर्म वैदिकम्।
ताभ्यामुभाभ्यां पुरुषैः सर्वमूर्तिः स इज्यते॥ ४१॥
ऋग्-यजुः सामभिर्मार्गैः प्रवृत्तैरिज्यते ह्यसौ।

ज्ञानात्मा ज्ञानयोगेन ज्ञानमूर्तिः स चेज्यते।
निवृते योगिभिर्मार्गे विष्णुर्मुक्तिफलप्रदः॥ ४३॥

Works, as enjoined by the Vedas, are of two kinds, active (Pravritta) and quiescent (Nivṛitta); by both of which the universal person is worshipped by mankind. He, the lord of sacrifice, the male of sacrifice, the most excellent male, is worshipped by men in the active mode by rites enjoined in the Ṛk, Yajur and Sāma Vedas. The soul of wisdom, the person of wisdom, Viṣṇu, and giver of emancipation, is worshipped by sages in the quiescent form, through meditative devotion.

हस्त-दीर्घलुतैर्यनु किञ्चद्वस्त्वभियुज्यते।
यद्य वाचामविषये तत्सर्वं विष्णुरव्ययः॥ ४४॥
व्यक्तं स एव चाव्यक्तं स एव पुरुषोऽव्ययः।

व्यक्ताव्यक्तात्मिका तस्मिन् प्रकृतिः सम्प्रलीयते।
पुरुषश्चापि मैत्रेय! व्यापिच्यव्याहतात्मनि॥ ४६॥

The exhaustless Viṣṇu is whatever thing that is designated by long, short, or prolated syllables, or that which is without a name. He is that which is discrete, and that which is indiscrete: he is exhaustless spirit, supreme spirit, universal spirit, Hari, the wearer of universal forms. Nature, whether discrete or indiscrete, is absorbed into him, and (detached) spirit also merges into the all-diffusive and unobstructed spirit.

द्विपरार्द्धात्मकः कालः कथितो यो मया तव।
तदहस्तस्य मैत्रेय! विष्णोरीशस्य कल्यते॥ ४७॥

तत्र स्थिते निशा चान्या तत्प्रमाणा महामुने॥ ४८॥
नैवाहस्तस्य न निशा नित्यस्य परमात्मनः।
उपचारस्तथाप्येष तस्येशस्य द्विजोच्यते॥ ४९॥

The period of two Parārddhas, as I have described it to you, Maitreya, is called a day of that potent Viṣṇu; and whilst the products of nature are merged into their source, nature into spirit, and that into the supreme, that period is termed his night, and is of equal duration with his day. But, in fact, to that eternal supreme spirit there is neither day nor night, and these distinctions are only figuratively applied to the almighty.

इत्येष तव मैत्रेय! कथितः प्राकृतो लयः।
आत्मनिकमितो ब्रह्मनिबोधं प्रतिसञ्चरम्॥ ५०॥
इति श्रीविष्णुपुराणे षष्ठांशे चतुर्थ्यः अध्यायः॥

I have thus explained to you the nature of elemental dissolution, and will now expound to you which is final³.

NOTES

1. The Naimittika Pralaya is described in the Vāyu, Bhāgavata, Kūrma, and other Purāṇas, to the same effect, and very commonly in precisely the same words.
2. See Bk. I. Ch. II.
3. The Bhāgavata notices the Prākṛta pralaya much more briefly, and it is omitted in the Vāyu.

The wise man having investigated the three kinds of worldly pain, or mental and bodily affliction and the like¹, and having acquired true wisdom, and detachment from human objects, obtains final dissolution. The first to the three pains, or Ādhyātmika, is of two kinds, bodily and mental. Bodily pain is of many kinds, as you shall hear. Affections of the head, catarrh, fever, cholic, fistula, spleen, haemorrhoids, intumescence, sickness, ophthalmia, dysentery, leprosy, and many other diseases, constitute bodily affliction. Mental sufferings are love, anger, fear, hate, covetousness, stupefaction, despair, sorrow, malice, disdain, jealousy, envy, and many other passions which are engendered in the mind. These and various other afflictions, mental or corporeal, are comprised under the class of worldly sufferings, which is called Ādhyātmika (natural and inseparable). That pain to which excellent Brahman, the term Ādhībhautika (natural, but incidental) is applied, is every kind of evil which is inflicted (from without) upon men by beasts, birds, men, goblins, snakes, fiends, or reptiles; and the pain that is termed Ādhidaivika (or superhuman) is the work of cold, heat, wind, rain, lightning and other (atmospherical phenomena). Affliction, Maitreya, is multiplied in thousands of shapes in the progress of conception, birth, decay, disease, death and hell.

The tender (and subtle) animal exists in the embryo, surrounded by abundant filth, floating in water, and distorted in its back, neck, and bones; enduring severe pain even in the course of its development, as disordered by the acid, acrid, bitter, pungent, and saline articles of its mother's food; incapable of extending or contracting its limbs; reposing amidst the slime of ordure and urine; every way incommoded; unable to breathe; endowed with consciousness, and calling to memory many hundred previous births. Thus exists the embryo in profound affliction, bound to the world by its former works.

When the child is about to be born, its face is besmeared by excrement, urine, blood, mucus, and semen; its attachment to the uterus is ruptured by the Prājāpati wind; it is turned head downwards, and violently expelled from the womb by the powerful and painful winds of parturition; and the infant losing for a time all sensation, when brought in contact with the external air, is immediately deprived of its intellectual knowledge. Thus born, the child is tortured in every limb, as if pierced with thorns, or cut to pieces with a saw, and falls from its fetid lodgment, as from a sore, like a crawling thing upon the earth. Unable to feel itself, unable to turn itself, it is dependent upon the will of others for being bathed and nourished.

Laid upon a dirty bed, it is bitten by insects and mosquitoes, and has not power to drive them away. Many are the pangs attending birth, and many are those which succeed to birth; and many are the sufferings which are inflicted by elemental and superhuman agency in the state of childhood.

अज्ञानतमसाच्छज्ञो मूढान्तःकरणो नरः।

कोऽधर्मः कश्च वै धर्मः कस्मिन् वर्तते वा कथम्।
किं कर्तव्यकर्तव्यं किं वा किं गुणदोषवत्॥ २३॥

Enveloped by the gloom of ignorance, and internally bewildered, man knows not whence he is, who he is, whither he goes, nor what is his nature; by what bonds he is bound; what is cause, and what is not cause; what is to be done and what is to be left undone; what is to be said, and what is to be kept silent; what is righteousness, what is iniquity; in what it consists, or how; what is right, what is wrong, what is virtue, what is vice.

नरकं कर्मणां लोपात् फलमाहुर्महर्षयः।
तस्मादज्ञानिनां दुःखमिह चामुत्र चोत्तमम्॥ २६॥

Thus man, like a brute beast, addicted only to animal gratifications, suffers the pain that ignorance occasions. Ignorance, darkness, inactivity, influence those devoid of knowledge, so that pious works are neglected; but hell is the consequence of neglect of religious acts, according to the great sages, and the ignorant therefore suffer affliction both in this world and in the next.

When old age arrives, the body is infirm; the limbs are relaxed; the face is emaciate and shrivelled; the skin is wrinkled, and scantily covers the veins and sinews; the eye discerns not afar off, and the pupil gazes on vacuity; the nostrils are stuffed with hair; the trunk trembles as it moves; the bones appear beneath the surface, the back is bowed, and the joints are bent; the digestive fire is extinct, and here is little appetite and little vigour; walking, rising, sleeping, sitting, are all painful efforts; the ear is dull; the eye is dim; the mouth is disgusting with dribbling saliva; the senses no longer are obedient to the will; and as death approaches, the things that are perceived even are immediately forgotten.

The utterance of a single sentence is fatiguing, the wakefulness is perpetuated by difficult breathing, coughing, and painful exhaustion. The old man is lifted up by somebody else; he is clothed by somebody else; he is an object of contempt to his servants, his children, and his wife. Incapable of cleanliness, of amusement, or food, or desire, he is laughed at by his dependants, and disregarded by his kin; and dwelling on the exploits of his youth, as on the actions of a past life, he sighs deeply, and is sorely distressed. Such are some of the pains which old age is condemned to suffer. I will now describe to you the agonies of death.

The neck droops; the feet and hands are relaxed; the body trembles; the man is repeatedly exhausted, subdued, and visited with interrupted knowledge; the principle of selfishness afflicts him, and he thinks what will become of my wealth, my lands, my children, my wife, my servants, my house? The joints of his limbs are tortured with severe pains, as if cut by a saw, or as if they were pierced by the sharp arrows of the destroyer; he rolls his eyes, and tosses about his hands and feet; his lips and palate are parched and dry, and his throat, obstructed by foul humours and deranged vital airs, emits a rattling sound; he is afflicted with burning heat, and with thirst, and with hunger; and he at last passes away, tortured by the servants of the judge of the dead, to undergo a renewal of his sufferings in another body. These are the agonies which men have to endure when they die. I will now describe to you the tortures which they suffer in hell.

Men are bound, when they die, by the servants of the king of Tartarus with cords, and beaten with sticks, and have then to encounter the fierce aspect of Yama, and the horrors of their terrible route. In the different hells there are various intolerable tortures with burning sand, fire, machines, and weapons; some are served with saws, some roasted in forges, some arc chopped with axes, some buried in the ground, some are mounted on stakes, some cast to wild beasts to be devoured, some are gnawed by vultures, some torn by tigers, some are boiled in oil, some rolled in caustic slime, some are precipitated from great heights, some tossed upwards by engines. The number of punishments inflicted in hell, which are the consequences of sin, is infinite².

But not in hell alone do the souls of the deceased undergo pain: there is no cessation even in heaven; for its temporary inhabitant is ever tormented with the prospect of descending again to earth. Again is he liable to conception and to birth; he is merged again into the embryo, and repairs to it when about to be born; then he dies, as soon as born, or in infancy, or in youth, or in manhood, or in old age. Death, sooner or later, is inevitable.

As long as he lives he is immersed in manifold afflictions, like the seed of the cotton amidst the down that is to be spun into thread. In acquiring, losing, and preserving wealth there are many griefs; and so there are in the misfortunes of our friends. Whatever is produced that is cost acceptable to man, that, Maitreya, becomes a seed whence springs the tree of sorrow.

Wife, children, servants, house, lands, riches, contribute much more to the misery than to the happiness of mankind. Where could man, scorched by the fires of the sun of this world, look for felicity, were it not for the shade afforded by the tree of emancipation? Attainment of the divine being is considered by the wise as the remedy of the threefold class of ills that beset the different stages of life, conception, birth, and decay, as characterized by that only happiness which effects all other kinds of felicity, however abundant, and as being absolute and final³.

It should therefore be the assiduous endeavour of wise men to attain unto god⁴. The means of such attainment are said, great Muni, to be knowledge and works. Knowledge is of two kinds, that which is derived from scripture, and that which is derived from reflection. Brahma that is the word is composed of scripture; Brahma that is supreme is produced of reflection⁴. Ignorance is utter darkness, in which knowledge, obtained through any sense (as that of hearing), shines like a lamp; but the knowledge that is derived from reflection breaks upon the obscurity like the sun.

What has been said by Manu, when appealing to the meaning of the Vedas with respect to this subject, I will repeat to you. There are two (forms of) spirit (or god), the spirit which is the word, and the spirit which is supreme. He who is thoroughly imbued with the word of god obtains supreme spirit⁵. The Atharva Veda also states that there are two kinds of knowledge; by the one, which is the supreme, god is attained; the other is that which consists of the Rk and other Vedas⁶.

That which is imperceptible, undecaying, inconceivable, unborn, inexhaustible, indescribable; which has neither form, nor hands, nor feet; which is almighty, omnipresent, eternal; the cause of all things, and without cause; permeating all, itself unpenetrated and from which all things proceed; that is the object which the wise behold, that is Brahma, that is the supreme state, that is the subject of contemplation to those who desire liberation, that is the thing spoken of by the Vedas, the infinitely subtle, supreme condition of Viṣṇu.

ज्ञायते येन तज्ज्ञानं परमन्यत् त्रयीमयम्॥ ७०॥

That essence of the supreme is defined by the term Bhagavat⁷: the word Bhagavat is the denomination of that primeval and eternal god: and he who fully understands the meaning of that expression, is possessed of holy wisdom, the sum and substance of the three Vedas.

अशब्दगोचरस्यापि तस्य वै ब्रह्मणो द्विज।

सम्पर्तेति तथा भर्ता भकारोऽर्थद्वयाच्चितः।
नेता गमयिता सष्ठा गकारार्थस्तथा मुनि॥ ७३॥

The word Bhagavat is a convenient form to be used in the adoration of that supreme being, to whom no term is applicable; and therefore Bhagavat expresses that supreme spirit, which is individual, almighty, and the cause of causes of all things. The letter Bh implies the cherishes and supporter of the universe. By ga is understood the leader, impeller, or creator.

 ज्ञान-शक्ति-बलैश्वर्य-वीर्यमेजांस्यशेषतः।
 भगवच्छब्दवाच्यानि विना हेयैर्गुणादिभिः॥ ७९॥

The dissyllable Bhaga indicates the six properties, dominion, might, glory, splendour, wisdom and dispassion. The purport of the letter va is that elemental spirit in which all beings exist, and which exists in all beings⁹. And thus this great word Bhagavan is the name of Vāsudeva, who is one with the supreme Brahma, and of no one else. This word therefore, which is the general denomination of an adorable object, is not used in reference to the supreme in a general, but a special signification. When applied to any other (thing or person) it is used in its customary or general import. In the latter case it may purport one who knows the origin and end and revolutions of beings, and what is wisdom, what ignorance. In the former it denotes wisdom, energy, power, dominion, might, glory, without end, and without defect.

The term Vāsudeva means that all beings abide in that supreme beings, and that he abides in all beings¹⁰, as was formerly explained by Keśidhvaja to Khāṇḍikya, called Janaka, when he inquired of him an explanation of the name of the immortal, Vāsudeva, He said, “He dwells internally in all beings, and all things dwell in him; and thence the lord Vāsudeva is the creator and preserver of the world. He, though one with all beings, is beyond and separate from material nature (Prakṛti), from its products, from properties, from imperfections: he is beyond all investing substance: he is universal soul; all the interstices of the universe are filled up by him: he is one with all good qualities; and all created beings are endowed with but a small portion of his individuality. Assuming at will various forms, he bestows benefits on the whole world, which was his work.

Glory, might, dominion, wisdom, energy, power, and other attributes, are collected in him. Supreme of the supreme, in whom no imperfections abide, lord over finite and infinite, god in individuals and universals, visible and invisible, omnipotent, omnipresent, omniscient, almighty. The wisdom, perfect, pure, supreme, undefiled, and one only, by which he is conceived contemplated, and known, that is wisdom; all else is ignorance."

NOTES

1. The three kinds of affliction, inseparable, incidental and superhuman, are fully described in the commentary on the first verse of the Sāṅkhya Kārikā in a similar strain as that which is adopted in the text.

2. Some further particulars of the different hells, and the punishments inflicted in them, have been given before : see Bk. I. Ch. XIV.

3. All this is conformable to the Sāṅkhya doctrines in particular, although the same spirit pervades all Hindu metaphysics.

4. Tasmāt Tat prāptaye yatna kartavya panditairnarah (तस्मात् तत्प्राप्त्ये यत्नः कर्तव्यः पण्डितैरनैः). The expression Tat Prāptaye, 'for the obtaining of that,' refers to the phrase immediately preceding, Bhagavatprāpti, 'obtaining of,' or 'attaining to, Bhagavat,' the lord.

5. Brahma is of two kinds; Sabda-Brahma, spirit or god to be attained through the word, that is, the Vedas and the duties they prescribe; and Para-Brahma, spirit or god to be attained through reflection, by which the difference between soul and matter is ascertained.

6. This seems intended as a quotation from Manu, but it has not been found in the code; it is हे ब्रह्माणि वेदितव्ये शब्दब्रह्मं परचं यत्। शब्दं ब्रह्माणि निष्णातः परं ब्रह्माधिगच्छति।

7. The commentator quotes other passages from the Vedas of a similar tendency, intimating, however, the necessity of performing acts prior to attaining knowledge; as, कषाये कर्मधिः पक्वे ततो ज्ञानं तु परमागतिः। 'The decoction (preparatory process) being digested by rites, thereafter knowledge is the supreme resource.' अविद्यामृत्युं तीर्त्वा विद्यामृतमश्नुते। 'Having crossed the gulf of death by ignorance (ceremonial acts), man obtains immortality by (holy) knowledge.'

8. According to the comment, allusion is here made to the twelve syllable Mantra, or mystic formula addressed to Viṣṇu: "Om! Bhagavate Vāsudevāya namah; 'Om! salutation to Bhagavat Vāsudeva.' the repetition of which, by those devoted (bhakta) to Viṣṇu, is the easy mode of securing their liberation." The mysticism is, however, no doubt older than the worship of Viṣṇu; and the term Bhagavat is defined in the text according to the interpretation of the Vedas.

9. The commentator says these interpretations are from the Nirukta, the glossary of the Vedas. The more etymological derivation of the term is, Bhaga, 'power,' 'authority,' and vat possessive affix.

10. From the root Vas (वस), 'abiding,' 'dwelling.' See Bk. I. Chs. I and II.

CHAPTER 6षष्ठोऽध्यायः

Parāśara said— He, Puruṣottama, is also known by holy study and devout meditation; and either, as the cause of attaining him, is entitled Brahma. From study let a man proceed to meditation, and from meditation to study'; by perfection in both supreme spirit becomes manifest. Study is one eye wherewith to behold it, and meditation is the other: he who is one with Brahma sees not with the eye of flesh.

Parāśara said— There was Janaka, named Dharmadhwaja, who had two sons, Amitadhwaja and Kṛtadhwaja; and the latter was a king ever intent upon existent supreme spirit: his son was the celebrated Keśidhwaja. The son of Amitadhwaja was Janaka, called Khāṇḍikya². Khāṇḍikya was diligent in the way of works, and was renewed on earth for religious rites. Keśidhwaja, on the other hand, was endowed with spiritual knowledge. These two were engaged in hostilities, and Khāṇḍikya was driven from his principality by Keśidhwaja. Expelled from his dominions, he wandered with a few followers, his priest and his counsellors, amidst woods and mountains, where, destitute of true wisdom, he performed many sacrifices, expecting thereby to obtain divine truth, and to escape from death by ignorance³.

Once whilst the best of those who are skilled in devotion, Keśidhwaja, was engaged in devout exercises, a fierce tiger slew his milch cow⁴ in the lonely forest. When the Rājā heard that the cow had been killed, he asked the ministering priests what form of penance would expiate the crime.

They replied that they did not know, and referred him to Kaśeru. Kaśeru when the Rājā consulted him, told him that he knew not, but that Śunaka would be able to tell him. Accordingly the Rājā went to Śunaka, but he replied, “I am as unable, great king, to answer your question as Kaśeru has been; and there is no one now upon earth who can give you the information except your enemy Khāṇḍikya, whom you have conquered.”

Upon receiving this answer, Keśidwaja said, "I will go, then, and pay a visit to my foe: if he kill me, no matter, for then I shall obtain the reward that attends being killed in a holy cause; if, on the contrary, he tell me that penance to perform, then my sacrifice will be unimpaired in efficacy."

Parāśara said— Thus spoken to, Khāṇḍikya retired a while with his counsellors and his priest, and consulted with them what course to pursue. They strongly urged him to slay Keśidhwaja, who was now in his power, and by whose death he would again become the monarch of the whole earth. Khāṇḍikya replied to them, "It is no doubt true that by such an act I should become the monarch of the whole earth: he, however, would thereby conquer the world to come; whilst the earth would be mine. Now if I do not kill him, I shall subdue the next world, and leave him this earth. It seems to me that this world is not of more value than the next; for the subjugation of the next world endures for ever; the conquest over this is but for a brief season. I will therefore not kill him, but tell him what he wishes to know."

Returning then to Keśidhwaja, Khāṇḍikya desired him to propose his question, which he promised to answer; and Keśidhwaja related to him what had happened, the death of the cow, and demanded to know what penance he should perform. Khāṇḍikya, in reply, explained to him fully the expiation that was suited to the occasion; and Keśidhwaja then, with his permission, returned to the place of sacrifice, and regularly fulfilled every necessary act. Having completed the ceremony, with its supplementary rites, Keśidhwaja accomplished all his objects: but he then reflected thus: The priests whom I invited to attend have all been duly honoured; all those who had any request to make have been gratified by compliance with their desires; all that is proper for this world has been effected by me: why then should my mind feel as if my duty had been unfulfilled?" So meditating, he remembered that he had not presented to Khāṇḍikya the gift that it is becoming to offer to a spiritual preceptor, and, mounting his chariot, he immediately set off to the thick forest where that sage abode. Khāṇḍikya, upon his reappearance, assumed his weapons to kill him; but Keśidhwaja exclaimed, "Forbear, venerable sage. I not here to injure you, Khāṇḍikya: dismiss your wrath, and know that I have come hither to offer you that remuneration which is due to you as my instructor. Through your lessons I have fully completed my sacrifice, and I am therefore desirous to give you a gift. Demand what it shall be."

Khāṇḍikya having once more commenced with his counsellors, told them the purpose of his rival's visit, and asked them what he should demand. His friends recommended him to require his whole kingdom back again, as kingdoms are obtained by prudent men without conflicting hosts. The reflecting king Khāṇḍikya laughed, and replied to them, "Why should a person such as I be desirous of a temporary earthly kingdom? Of a truth you are able counsellors in the concerns of this life, but of those of the life to come you are assuredly ignorant."

So speaking, he went back to Keśidhwaja, and said to him, "Is it true that you wish to make me a gift, as to your preceptor?" "Indeed I do," answered Keśidhwaja. "Then," rejoined Khāṇḍikya, "as it is known that you are learned in the spiritual learning that teaches the doctrine of the soul, if you will communicate that knowledge to me, you will have discharged your debt to your instructor. Declare to me what acts are efficacious for the alleviation of human affliction."

NOTES

1. Both study of the Vedas (Svādhyāya) and abstraction (Yoga) are to be practised : when a man is weary of one, he may apply to the other. The Yoga, however, limits the practical part of silent prayer. जपाच्छन्नतः पुनर्ध्यायेद् ध्यानाच्छन्नतः पुनर्जपेत्। 'Wearied of meditation, let him pray inaudibly: weary of prayer, let him repeat meditation.' जपध्यानाभियोगेन पश्येदात्मानमात्मनि। 'By the union of prayer and meditation let him behold soul in himself.'

2. No such names occur amongst the Maithila kings of the Viṣṇu Purāṇa (see Bk. IV. Ch. V.); but, as there noticed (note 6), the Bhāgavata inserts them. Janaka is used as a title. Kṛtadhvaja, in some of the copies, is read Ritadhvaja.

3. The performance of rites as a means of salvation is called ignorance in the Vedas (see Bk. VI. Ch. V. n. 7). Works are recommended as introductory to the acquirement of knowledge: it is ignorance to consider them as finite.

4. Tasya-dhenum (तस्यधेनुं). Once copy has Homa-dhenu, 'cow of sacrifice,' another, Dharma-dhenu, 'cow of righteousness.' The commentator explains the terms as importing the same thing, a cow yielding milk for holy purposes, or for the butter which is poured in oblations upon the sacrificial fire.

“I will tell you,” replied Khāṇḍikya, “why I did not make such a demand, nor require that territory which is an object of ignorant ambition. It is the duty of the warrior to protect his subjects in peace, and to kill in fight the enemies of his sway. It is no fault that you should have taken my kingdom from one who was unable to defend it, to whom it was a bondage, and who was thus freed from the encumbrance of ignorance. My desire of dominion originated in my being born to possess it: the ambition of others, which proceeds from human frailties, is not compatible with virtue. To solicit gifts is not the duty of a prince and warrior: and for these reasons I have not asked for your kingdom, nor made a demand which ignorance alone would have suggested. Those only who are destitute of knowledge, whose minds are engrossed by selfishness, who are intoxicated with the inebriating beverage of self-sufficiency, desire kingdoms; not such as I am.

पराशर उवाच

प्रहृष्टः साध्विति प्राह ततः केशिष्वजो नुपः।

When king Keśidhvaja heard these words, he was much pleased, and exclaimed, "It is well spoken!"

अहन्त्वविद्यापृत्युञ्ज तर्तुकामः करोमि वै।
राज्यं यागांश्च विविधान् भोगैः पुण्यक्षयं तथा॥ ९॥

Then addressing Khāndikya affectionately, he said, "Listen to my words. Through desire of escaping death by the ignorance of works I exercise the regal power, celebrate various sacrifices, and enjoy pleasures subversive of purity.

Fortunate is it for you that your mind has attached itself to the dominion of discrimination. Pride of your race! now listen to the real nature of ignorance. The (erroneous) notion that self consists in what is not self, and the opinion that property consists in what is not one's own, constitute the double seed of the tree of ignorance.

पञ्चभूतात्मके देहे देही मोहतभोवृतः।

आकाश-वाय्वनि-जल-पृथिवीभ्यः पृथक् स्थिते।
आत्मन्यात्ममयं भावं कः करोति कलेवरे॥ १३॥

The ill-judging embodied being, bewildered by the darkness of fascination, situated in a body composed of the five elements, loudly asserts, 'This is I': but who would ascribe spiritual individuality to a body in which soul is distinct from the ether, air, fire, water, and earth (of which that body is composed)?

कलेवरोपभोगयं हि गृहस्त्रादिकञ्च कः।
अदेहे ह्यात्मनि प्राज्ञो ममेदमिति मन्यते॥ १४॥
इत्यञ्च पुनः पौत्रैषु तदेहोत्यादितेषु कः।
करोति पण्डितः स्वाम्यमनात्मनि कलेवरे॥ १५॥

What man of understanding assigns to disembodied spirit corporeal fruition, or lands, houses, and the like, that it should say, 'These are mine?' What wise man entertains the idea of property in sons or grandsons begotten of the body after the spirit has abandoned it?

सर्वं देहोपभोगाय कुसले कर्म मानवः।
देहश्चान्यो यदा पुंसस्तदा बन्धाय तत्परम्॥ १६॥

Man performs all acts for purpose of bodily fruition, and the consequence of such acts is another body; so that their result is nothing but confinement to bodily existence.

मृन्यञ्च यथा गेहं लिघ्यते च मृदन्भसा।
पर्यिवोऽयं तथा देहो मृदन्नालेपनस्थितिः॥ १७॥

In the same manner as a mansion of clay is plastered with clay and water, so the body, which is of earth, is perpetuated by earth and water (or by eating and drinking).

पञ्चभूतात्मकैर्भोगैः पञ्चभूतात्मकं वपुः।

अनेकजन्मसाहस्रीं संसारपदवीं व्रजन्।
मोहश्रमं प्रयातोऽसौ वासनारेणुगुणितः॥ १९॥

The body, consisting of the five elements, is nourished by substance equally composed of those elements; but since this is the case, what is there in this life that man should be proud of? Travelling the path of the world for many thousands of births, man attains only the weariness of bewilderment, and is smothered by the dust of imagination.

प्रक्षाल्यते यदा सोऽस्य रेणुर्ज्ञानोष्णावारिणा।

मोहश्रमे शमं याते स्वस्थानः करणः पुमान्।

अनन्यातिशयाबाधं परं निर्वाणमृच्छति॥ २१॥

When that dust is washed away by the bland water of real knowledge, then the weariness of bewilderment sustained by the wayfarer through repeated births is removed. When that weariness is relieved, the internal man is at peace, and he obtains that supreme felicity which is unequalled and undisturbed.

निर्वाणमय एवायमात्मा ज्ञानमयोऽमलः।

जलस्य नाग्निसंसर्गः स्थालीसङ्घातश्चापि हि।

शब्दोद्रेकादिकान् धर्मास्तत् करोति यथा मुने॥ २३॥

This soul is (of its own nature) pure, and composed of happiness and wisdom. The properties of pain, ignorance, and impurity, are those of nature (Prakṛti), not of soul. There is no affinity between fire and water, but when the latter is placed over the former in a caldron it bubbles and boils, and exhibits the properties of fire.

तथात्मा प्रकृते: सङ्घादहम्मानादिदूषितः।

कलेशानाङ्ग क्षयकरं योगादन्यत्र विद्यते॥ २५॥

In like manner, when soul is associated with Prakṛti it is vitiated by egotism and the rest, and assumes the qualities of grosser nature, although essentially distinct from them, and incorruptible. Such is the seed of ignorance, as I have explained it to you. There is but one cure of worldly sorrows, the practice of devotion; no other is known."

खण्डिक्य उवाच

तनु दूहि महाभाग! योगं योगविदुत्तम!

"Then," said Khāṇḍikya, "do you, who are the chief of those versed in contemplative devotion, explain to me what that is; for in the race of the descendants of Nimi² you are best acquainted with the sacred writings in which it is taught."

केशिद्वज उवाच

बन्धाय विषयासङ्गं मुक्त्वै निर्विषयं तथा॥ २८॥

"Hear," replied Keśidhvaja, "the account of the nature of contemplative devotion³, which I impart to you, and by perfection in which the sage attains resolution into Brahma, and never suffers birth again. The mind of man is the cause both of his bondage and his liberation: its addiction to the objects of sense is the means of his bondage; its separation from objects of sense is the means of his freedom.

The sage who is capable of discriminative knowledge must therefore restrain his mind from all the objects of sense, and therewith meditate upon the supreme being, who is one with spirit, in order to attain liberation; for that supreme spirit attracts to itself him who meditates upon it, and who is of the same nature, as the load stone attracts the iron by the virtue which is common to itself and to its products⁴.

यस्य योगस्य वै योगो मुमुक्षुरभिधीयते॥ ३२॥

Contemplative devotion is the union with Brahma, effected by that condition of mind which has attained perfection through those exercise which complete the control of self: and he whose contemplative devotion is characterized by the property of such absolute perfection, is in truth a sage, expectant of final liberation from the world.

"The sage, or Yogi, when first applying himself to contemplative devotion is called the novice or practitioner (Yoga yuj); when he has attained spiritual union he is termed the adept, or he whose meditations are accomplished⁶. Should the thoughts of the former be uninitiated by any obstructing imperfection, he will obtain freedom, after practising devotion through several lives⁷. The latter speedily obtains liberation in that existence (in which he reaches perfection), all his acts being consumed by the fire of contemplative devotion. The sage who would bring his mind into a fit state for the performance of devout contemplation must be devoid of desire, and observe invariably continence, compassion, truth, honesty, and disinterestedness: he must fix his mind intently on the supreme Brahma, practising holy study, purification, contentment, penance and self-control.

These virtues, respectively termed the five acts of restraint (Yama), and five of obligation (Niyama), bestow excellent rewards when practised for the sake of reward, and eternal liberation when they are not prompted by desire (of transient benefits). Endowed with these merits, the sage self-restrained should sit in one of the modes termed Bhadrāsana, etc., and engage in contemplation⁸. Bringing his vital airs, called Prāṇa, under subjection, by frequent repetition, is thence called Prāṇāyāma, which is as it were a seed with a seed⁹. In this the breath of expiration and that of inspiration are alternately obstructed, constituting the act twofold; and the suppression of both modes of breathing produces a third¹⁰. The exercise of the Yogi, whilst endeavouring to bring before his thoughts the gross form of the eternal, is denominated Ālambana¹¹.

He is then to perform the Pratyāhāra, which consists in restraining his organs of sense from susceptibility to outward impressions, and directing them entirely to mental perceptions. By these means the entire subjugation of the unsteady senses is effected; and if they are not controlled, the sage will not accomplish his devotions.

प्राणायामेन पवनैः प्रत्याहारेण चेन्द्रियैः।
 वशीकृतैस्ततः कुर्यात् स्थिरं चेतः शुभाश्रये॥ ४५॥

When by the Prāṇāyāma the vital airs are restrained, and the senses are subjugated by the Pratyāhāra, then the sage will be able to keep his mind steady in its perfect asylum."

खण्डिक्य उवाच

कथ्यतां मे महाभाग! चेतसो यः शुभाश्रयः।
 यदाधारमशेषं तद्वन्ति दोषसमुद्धवम्॥ ४६॥

Khāndikya then said to Keśidhvaja. "Illustrious sage, inform me what is that perfect asylum of the mind, resting on which it destroys all the products of (human) infirmity."

To this, Keśidhvaja replied: "The asylum of mind in spirit (Brahma), which of its own nature is twofold, as being with or without form; and each of these is supreme and secondary¹². Apprehension of spirit¹³, again, is threefold. I will explain the different kinds to you: they are, that which is called Brahman, that which is named from works, and that which comprehends both. The mental apprehension which consists of Brahman is one; that which is formed of works is another; and that which comprehends both is the third: so that mental apprehension (of the object or asylum of the thoughts) is threefold. Sanandana and other (perfect sages) were endowed with apprehension of the nature of Brahman. The gods and others, whether animate or inanimate, are possessed of that which regards acts.

The apprehension that comprehends both works and spirit exists in Hiranyagarbha and others, who are possessed of contemplative knowledge of their own nature, and who also exercise certain active functions, as creation and the rest. Until all acts, which are the causes of notions of individuality, are discontinued, spirit is one thing, and the universe of another, to those who contemplate objects distinct and various; but that is called true knowledge, or knowledge of Brahman, which recognises no distinctions, which contemplates only simple existence, which is indefinable by words, and is to be discovered solely in one's own spirit.

That is the supreme, imperishable form of Viṣṇu, who is without (sensible) form, and is characterised as a condition of the supreme soul, which is variously modified from the condition of universal form. But this condition cannot be contemplated by sages in their (early) devotions, and they must therefore direct their minds to the gross form of Hari, which is of universal perceptibility. They must meditate upon him as Hiranyagarbha, as the glorious Vāsava, as Prajāpati, as the winds, the Vasus, the Rudras, the suns, stars, planets, Gandharvas, Yakṣas, Daityas, all the gods and their progenitors, men, animals, mountains, oceans, rivers, trees, all beings, and all sources of beings, all modification whatever of nature and its products, whether sentient or unconscious, one-footed, two-footed, or many-footed; all these are the sensible form of Hari, to be apprehended by the three kinds of apprehension.

All this universal world, this world of moving and stationary beings, is pervaded by the energy of Viśnu, who is of the nature of the supreme Brahma. This energy is either supreme, or, when it is that of conscious embodied spirit, it is secondary. Ignorance, or that which is denominated from works, is a third energy;¹⁴ by which the omnipresent energy of embodied spirit is ever excited, and whence it suffers all the pains of repeated worldly existence. Obscured by that energy (of ignorance or illusion), the energy that is denominated from embodied spirit is characterised by different degrees of perfection in all created beings.

In things without life it exists in a very small degree: it is more in things that have life, but are (without motion): in insects it is still more abundant, and still more in birds; it is more in wild animals, and in domestic animals the faculty is still greater: men have more of this (spiritual) faculty than animals, and thence arises their authority over them: the faculty exists in an ascending degree in Nāgas, Gandharvas, Yakṣas, gods, Śakra, Prajāpati, and Hiranyaśarman: and is above all predominant in that male (Viśnu) of whom all these various creatures are but the diversified forms, penetrated universally by his energy, as all-pervading as the ether.

"The second¹⁵ state of him who is called Viśnu, and which is to be meditated upon by the (advanced) sage, is that imperceptible, shapeless form of Brahma, which is called by the wise, 'That which is'¹⁶, and in which all the before described energies reside. Thence proceeds the form of the universal form, the other great form of Hari, which is the origin of those manifested forms (or incarnations) that are endowed with every kind of energy, and which, whether the forms of gods, animals, or men, are assumed by him (Hari) in his sport. This active interposition of the indefinable god, all-comprehending and irresistible, is for the purpose of benefiting the world, and is not the necessary consequence of works.

This form of the universal form is to be meditated upon by the sage for the object of purification, as it destroys all sin. In the same manner as fire, blazing in the wind, burns dry grass, so Viṣṇu, seated in the heart, consumes the sins of the sage; and therefore let him resolutely effect the fixation of his mind upon that receptacle of all the three energies (Viṣṇu), for that is the operation of the mind which is called perfect Dhāranā:¹⁷ and thus the perfect asylum of individual as well as universal spirit, that which is beyond the three modes of apprehension, is attained, for the eternal emancipation of the sage.

The minds of other beings, which are not fixed upon that asylum, are altogether impure, and are all the gods and the rest, who spring from acts. The retention or apprehension by the mind of that visible form of Viṣṇu, without regard to subsidiary forms, is thence called Dhāranā; and I will describe to you the perceptible form of Hari, which no mental retention will manifest, except in a mind that is fit to become the receptacle of the idea.¹⁸

The meditating sage must think (he beholds internally the figure) of Viṣṇu as having a pleased and lovely countenance, with eyes like the leaf of the lotus, smooth cheeks, and a broad and brilliant forehead; ears of equal size, the lobes of which are decorated with splendid pendants; a painted neck, and a broad breast, on which shines the Śrīvatsa mark; a belly falling in graceful folds, with a deep-seated navel; eight long arms, or else four; and firm and well-knit thighs and legs, with well-formed feet and toes.

Let him, with well-governed thoughts, contemplate, as long as he can persevere in unremitting attention, Hari as clad in a yellow robe, wearing a rich diadem on his head, and brilliant armlets and bracelets on his arms, and bearing in his hands the bow, the shell, the mace, the sword, the discus, the rosary, the lotus, and the arrow¹⁹.

ततः शङ्ख-गदा-चक्र-शार्ङ्गदिरहितं बुधः।
चिन्तयेद्वगवदरूपं प्रशान्तं साक्षसूत्रकम्॥८६॥

When this image never departs from his mind, whether he be going or standing, or be engaged in any other voluntary act, then he may believe his retention to be perfect. The sage may then meditate upon the form of Viṣṇu without his arms, as the shell, mace, discus, and bow; and as placid, and bearing only his rosary.

When the idea of this image is firmly retained, then he may meditate on Viśnu without his diadem, bracelets, or other ornaments. He may next contemplate him as having but one single limb, and may then fix his whole thoughts upon the body to which the limbs belong. This process of forming a lively image in the mind, exclusive of all other objects, constitutes Dhyāna, or meditation, which is perfected by six stages:²⁰ and when an accurate knowledge of self, free from all distinction, is attained by this mental meditation, that is termed Samādhi.²¹

"(When the Yogi has accomplished this stage, he acquires) discriminative knowledge, which is the means of enabling living soul, when all the three kinds of apprehension are destroyed, to attain the attainable supreme Brahma²². Embodied spirit is the user of the instrument, which instrument is true knowledge; and by it that (identification) of the former (with Brahma) is attained²³. Liberation, which is the object to be effected, being accomplished, discriminative knowledge ceases. When endowed with the apprehension of the nature of the object of inquiry, then, there is no difference between it (individual and) supreme spirit: difference is the consequence of the absence of (true) knowledge. When that ignorance which is the cause of the difference between individual and universal spirit is destroyed finally and forever, who shall ever make that distinction between them which does not exist? Thus have I, Khāṇḍikya, in reply to your question, explained to you what is meant by contemplative devotion, both fully and summarily. What else do you wish to hear?"

Khāṇḍikya replied to Keśidhvaja, and said, "The explanation which you have given me of the real nature of contemplative devotion has fulfilled all my wishes, and removed all impurity from my mind. The expression 'mine,' which I have been accustomed to use, is untruth, and cannot be otherwise declared by those who know what is to be known. The words 'I' and 'mine' constitute ignorance; but practice is influenced by ignorance. Supreme truth cannot be defined, for it is not to be explained by words. Depart therefore, Keśidhvaja; you have done all that is necessary for my real happiness, in teaching me contemplative devotion, the inexhaustible bestower of liberation from existence."

Accordingly king Keśidhvaja, after receiving suitable homage from Khāndikya, returned to his city. Khāndikya, having nominated his son Rājā²⁴, retired to the woods to accomplish his devotions, his whole mind being intent upon Govinda: there his entire thoughts being engrossed upon one only object, and being purified by practices of restraint, self-control, and the rest, he obtained absorption into the pure and perfect spirit which is termed Viṣṇu. Keśidhvaja also, in order to attain liberation, became averse from his own perishable works, and lived amidst objects of sense (without regarding them,) and instituted religious rites without expecting therefrom any advantages to himself. Thus by pure and auspicious fruition, being cleansed from all sin, he also obtained that perfection which assuages all affliction for ever.

NOTES

1. The text is somewhat obscure, but it is in some degree cleared up by the illustration. No one would think of applying the property of self—the idea of possession or personality—to soul, separated from body: but the objection is equally applicable to soul in the body; for whilst there it is as distinct in its nature from the materials of body as if it was disembodied, and quite as incapable of individual personal fruition.

2. That is, in the race of princes of Mithilā.

3. The term Yoga (योगः), which is that used in the text, in its literal acceptation signifies ‘union’, ‘junction’ from युज ‘to join’: in a spiritual sense it denotes ‘union of separated with universal soul;’ and with some latitude of expression it comes to signify the means by which such union is effected. In the Bhagavad Gītā it is variously applied, but ordinarily denotes the performance of religious ceremonies as a duty, and not for interested purposes. Thus Kṛṣṇa says to Arjuna, योगस्थः कुरु कर्माणि सां त्यक्त्वा धर्मंजय सिद्धासिद्धो समोभूत्वा समत्वं योग उच्यते। “Engaging in Yoga, perform rites, Dharañjaya, being indifferent to success or failure: such indifference is called Yoga.” II. v. 48. It is elsewhere defined, ‘exemption from the contact of pain’ दुःखसंयोग विद्योऽन् योगसञ्जितः VI. v. 23. The word has been accordingly rendered ‘devotion’ by Wilkins, and ‘devotio’ by Schlegel, in their translations of the Gītā. In this place, however, it is used in a less general sense, and signifies, as is subsequently explained, reunion with spirit through the exercises necessary to perfect abstraction as they are taught and practised by the followers of Patañjali.

4. This illustration is however only to a limited extent, explanatory of the nature of Yoga; for though the loadstone and iron unite, by virtue of a community of kind, yet the union that takes place is only that of contiguity, Saṁyoga (संयोग), not that of identification or unity, Tadaikyam (तदैक्यम्). Some further explanation therefore is required.

5. The first stage is the Ātma prayatna, the practice of moral and religious restraint, Yama, Niyama, &c. When the novice is perfect in these, then he is fit to attain the perfectibility of an adept, through the especial practices which treatises on the Yoga prescribe. When the mind has attained the state which can alone be attained through them, then the union with Brahma, which is the consequence, is called Yoga: आत्मप्रयत्नसापेक्षाविशिष्टाया मनोगतिः। तस्या ब्रह्मणि संयोगो योग इत्याभिधीयते॥ The Ātma prayatna is defined to be that which has Yama, &c. for its objects, यमनियमादिविषयः। The next phrase, तस्यापेक्षा, is explained तदधीना ‘depending upon, or relating to, such control.’ मनोगति is the same as मनोवृति condition or state of mind which is विशिष्टा perfected: of that state of mind, union with Brahma, is Yoga. Union with Brahma is the abstraction that proposes the identity of the living with the supreme spirit of the Jivātma, with Brahma; जीवात्मब्रह्मैक्यविषयत्वं and Yoga is understanding of the identity of the contemplator and the object contemplated; ध्यातुद्येयैक्यत्वैः। A text of Yājñavalkya is quoted to this effect: ज्ञानं योगात्मकं विद्धि योक्षाशाङ्गसंयुतः संयोगो योग इत्युक्तो जीवात्मपरमात्मनोः। ‘Know holy wisdom to be the same with Yoga’ (the practice of) which has eight divisions. That which is termed Yoga is union of the living with the supreme soul.’

6. Viniśpannasamādhi is the expression of the text, which can scarcely be regarded an appellative. The commentator terms the adept Brahmajñānī, 'He who knows Brahma.'

7. After three lives, according to the Vāyu Sanhitā, as quoted in the comment.

8. There are various postures in which the Yogi is directed to sit when he engages in meditation. In the Bhadrāsana he is directed to cross his legs underneath him, and to lay hold of his feet on each side with his hands.

9. सवीजो बीज एवच। It is itself figuratively the seeds of the fruit, which is meditation; but it is to be accompanied with what is also technically called Bija, or seed, inaudible repetition of certain prayers, and meditation on the visible form of the deity, termed likewise Ālambana, and presently mentioned.

10. Prāṇāyāma is performed by three modifications of breathing: the first act is expiration, which is performed through the right nostril, whilst the left is closed with the fingers of the right hand; this is called Rechaka; the thumb is then placed upon the right nostril, and the fingers raised from the left, through which breath is inhaled; this is called Pūraka; in the third act both nostrils are closed, and breathing suspended; this is Kumbhaka; and a succession of these operations is the practice of Prāṇāyāma.

11. Ālambana is the silent repetition of prayer.

12. आश्रयश्वेतसो ब्रह्म द्विष्ठा तच्च स्वरूपताः पूष मूर्त्यमूर्ते च परं चारमेव च॥ The Brahma that is without form (Amūrtta) may be Para or Apara. Supreme formless spirit is without attributes of any kind. Secondary formless spirit is invested with the attributes of power, glory, truth, perfection. Spirit embodied, or with form in his highest state, is, according to our text, Viśnu and his manifestations. Spirit in an inferior or secondary series of bodily forms is Brahmā and all other living beings.

13. The term is Bhāvanā, defined to be, 'function to be engendered by knowledge;' ज्ञानजन्यः संस्कारः। the mental impression of apprehension following upon knowledge. Here it implies in particular the formation of a fixed idea by the Yogi of the object of his contemplations. It is also termed Bhāvabhāvana, 'apprehension of the being, the existence, or substantiality, of the objects; the thing contemplated.' भावो वस्तु तद्विषया भावना भावभावना।

14. The term used throughout is Śakti (शक्ति), 'power,' 'ability,' 'energy.' By the first kind, or Parā, is understood knowledge able to appreciate abstract truth, or the nature of universal soul; by the second, ability to understand the nature of embodied soul; and by the third, inability to discern one's own nature, and reliance on moral or ceremonial merit. These different kinds are called energies, because they are the energies or faculties of the supreme spirit, or according to the Vaiśnavas, of Viśnu, accompanying soul in all its various conditions of existence.

15. The first, which has been intended to be described in the foregoing passages, was the universal, visible form of Viśnu; the second is his formless or imperceptible condition.

16. Sat (सत्), 'what is being.'

17. Retention, or holding of the image or idea formed in the mind by contemplation: from Dhṛ (धृ), 'to hold,' literally or figuratively.

18. The explanation of Dhāraṇā given in the text is rendered unnecessarily perplexed by the double doctrine here taught, and the attempt to combine the abstraction of Yoga theism with the sectarian worship of Viśnu.

19. The two last implements are from the comment; the text specifies only six.

20. They are, 1. Yama &c., acts of restraint and obligation; 2. Āsana, sitting in particular postures; 3. Prāṇāyāma, modes of breathing; 4. Pratyāhāra, exclusion of all external ideas; 5. Bhāvanā, apprehension of internal ideas; 6. Dhāraṇā, fixation or retention of those ideas.

21. The result of the Dhyāna or Samādhi is the absence of all idea of individuality, when the meditator, the meditation, and the thing or object meditated upon, are all considered to be but one. According to the text of Patañjali: 'Restraint of the body, retention of the mind, and meditation, which thence is exclusively confined to one object, is Dhyāna: the idea of identification with the object of such meditation, so as if devoid of individual nature, is Samādhi,' देहव्यञ्जित्वं धारणा तत्प्रत्ययैकता नता व्यानं तदेकार्थात्रनिर्भासं स्वरूपशूल्यमिव समाधिः॥

22. The expressions of the text are somewhat obscure, nor does the commentator make them much more intelligible, until he cuts the matter short by stating the meaning to be, that 'discriminative knowledge enables the living spirit to attain Brahma': विज्ञानं जीवात्मानं ब्रह्म प्राप्यतीत्यर्थः॥

23. The text is very elliptical and obscure. Having stated that embodied spirit (Kṣetrajña) is the Kakraṇī, the possessor or user of the Karaṇa, which is knowledge, it adds, तेन तस्य तत्! literally, ‘by that, of that, that;’ i.e. Tat, ‘that which is;’ and Brahma, or supreme spirit, is the attainment of that spirit which abides in body by that instrument, or discriminative knowledge, of which it has become possessed through perfect meditation: क्षेत्रज्ञः करणी ज्ञानं करणं तेन तस्य तत्! निष्पाद्य मुक्तिं कार्यं कृत कृत्यान्निवर्तते॥ विज्ञानं निवर्तते॥

24. The commentator, in order to explain how Khāṇḍikya should have given what he did not possess, states that it is to be understood that Keśidhvaja relinquished to him the kingdom; or the term Rājā may denote merely, master of, or acquainted with, mystic prayers, or Mantras: यद्वा राजानं मन्त्रस्वामिनं कृत्वा। hearing it, the imperishable Vaishṇava Purāṇa, which is destructive of all sins, the most excellent of all holy writings, and the means of attaining the great end of man. If there is any thing else you wish to hear, propose your question, and I will answer it.

Parāśara said— I have related to you this Purāṇa, which is equal to the Vedas in sanctity, and by hearing which all faults and sins whatever are expiated. In this have been described to you the primary and secondary creation, the families of the patriarchs, the Manvantaras, the regal dynasties; the gods, Daityas, Gandharvas, serpents, Rākṣasas, Yakṣas, Vidyādhara, Siddhas, and heavenly nymphs; Munis endowed with spiritual wisdom; and practisess of devotion; the distinction of the four castes, and the actions of the most eminent amongst men; holy places on the earth, holy rivers and oceans, sacred mountains, and legends of the truly wise; the duties of the different tribes, and the observances enjoined by the Vedas. By hearing this, all sins are at once obliterated.

The repetition of his name with devout faith is the best remover of all sins, destroying them as fire purifies the metal from the dross. The stain of the Kali age, which ensures to men sharp punishments in hell, is at once effaced by a single invocation of Hari. He who is all that is, the whole egg of Brahma, which Hiraṇyagarbha, Indra, Rudra, the Ādityas, the Asvins, the winds, the Kinnaras, the Vasus, the Sādhyas, Viśvadevas, the celestial gods, the Yakṣas, serpents, Rākṣasas, the Siddhas, Daityas, Gandharvas, Dānavas, nymphs, the stars, asterisms, planets, the seven Ṛsis, the regents and superintendents of the quarters, men, Brāhmaṇas and the rest, animals tame and wild, insects, birds, ghosts, and goblins, trees, mountains, woods, rivers, oceans, the subterrene legions, the division of the earth, and all perceptible objects— he who is all things, who knows all things, who is the form of all things, being without form himself, and of whom whatever is, from mount Meru to an atom, all consists— he, the glorious Viṣṇu, the destroyer of all sin— is described in this Purāṇa.

पुराणस्यास्य विप्रवेष! केशवार्पितमानसः॥ ३२॥

Hearing this Purana but once is as efficacious as the offering of oblations in a perpetual fire for a year. The man who with well-governed passions bathes at Mathurā on the twelfth day of the month Jyeṣṭha, and beholds (the image of) Hari, obtains a great recompense; so does he who with mind fixed upon Kṛṣṇa attentively recites this Purāṇa.

समध्यर्च्छ्युतं सम्पूर्णं मथुरायां समाहितः।
अश्वमेधस्य यज्ञस्य ग्रान्तोत्यविकलं फलम्॥ ३३॥
यमुनासलिले स्नातः पुरुषो मुनिसत्तमः।
ज्येष्ठामूलेऽमले पक्षे द्वादश्यामुपवासकृत्॥ ३४॥

The man who bathes in the waters of the Yamunā on the twelfth lunation of the light fortnight of the month in which the moon is in the mansion Jyeṣṭhā, and who fasts and worships Acyuta in the city of Mathurā, receives the reward of an uninterrupted Aśvamedha.

आलोक्यर्द्धमथान्येषामुनीतानां स्ववंशजौ।
एतत् किलोचुरन्येषां पितरः सपितामहाः॥ ३५॥
कश्चिदसम्तुले जातः कालिन्दीसलिलाप्लुतः।
अर्घ्यिष्यति गोविन्दं मथुरायामुपोषितः॥ ३६॥
ज्येष्ठामूले सिते पक्षे येनैवं वयमप्युत।
परामृद्धिमवाप्त्यामस्तरिताः स्वकुलोद्भवै॥ ३७॥

Beholding the degree of prosperity enjoyed by others of eminence, through the merits of the descendants, a man's paternal ancestors, his parents and their parents exclaim, "Whosoever of our descendants, having bathed in the Yamunā and fasted, will worship Govinda in Mathurā, in the light fortnight of Jyeṣṭha, will secure for us eminent exaltation: for we shall be elevated by the merits of our posterity!"

ज्येष्ठामूले सिते पक्षे समध्यर्च्छ्यं जनार्दनम्।
धन्यानां कुलजः पिण्डान् यमुनायां प्रदास्यति॥ ३८॥

A man of good extraction will present obsequial cakes to his fortunate ancestors in the Yamunā, having worshipped Janārdana in the light fortnight of Jyeṣṭha.

तस्मिन् काले समध्यर्च्छ्यं तत्र कृष्णं समाहितः।
दत्त्वा पिण्डान् पितृभ्यश्च यमुनासलिलाप्लुतः॥ ३९॥
यदाजोति नः पुण्यं तारयन् स पितामहान्।
श्रुत्वाध्यायं तदाजोति पुराणस्यास्य भक्तिमान्॥ ४०॥
एतत् संसारभीरूपां परित्राणमनुज्ञम्।
दुःखप्राशनं नृणां सर्वदुष्टुनिवर्हणम्॥ ४१॥

But the same degree of merit that a man reaps from adoring Janārdana at the season with a devoted heart, and from bathing in the Yamunā, and effecting the liberation of his progenitors by offering to them on such an occasion obsequial cakes, he derives also from hearing with equal devotion a section of this Purāṇa. This Purāṇa is the best of all preservatives for those who are afraid of worldly existence, a certain alleviation of the sufferings of men, and remover of all imperfections.

मयापि तु श्वयं मैत्रेय? यथावत् कथितं त्विदम्।

This Purāṇa, originally composed by the Ṛṣi (Nārāyaṇa), was communicated by Brahmā to Rbhu; he related it to Priyavrata, by whom it was imparted to Bhāguri. Bhāguri recited it to Tamasitra⁶, and he to Dadica, who gave it to Śārasvata. From the last Bhṛgu received it, who imparted it to Dhṛtarāṣṭra the Nāga king, and to Purāṇa of the same race, by whom it was repeated to their monarch Vāsuki. Vāsuki communicated it to Vatsa, and he to Aśvatara, from whom it successively proceeded to Kambala and Elapatra. When the Muni Vedaśiras descended to Pātāla, he there received the whole Purāṇa from these Nāgas, and communicated it to Pramati. Pramati consigned it to the wise Jātukarṇa, and he taught it to many other holy persons. Through the blessings of Vasiṣṭha it came to my knowledge, and I have now, Maitreya, faithfully imparted it to you. You will teach it, at the end of the Kali age, so Śāmika⁷.

इत्येतत् परमं गुह्यं कलिकल्पषनाशनम्।
यः शृणोति नरः पापैः स सर्वैर्द्विज! मुच्यते॥ ५०॥

पितृपक्षमनुष्येभ्यः समस्तामरसंसुतिः।
कृता तेन भवेदेतद् यः शृणोति दिने दिने॥ ५१॥
कपिलादानजनितं पुण्यमत्यन्तदुर्लभम्।
श्रुत्वैतस्य दशाध्यायानवोपोति न संशयः॥ ५२॥

Whoever hears this great mystery, which removes the contamination of the Kali, shall be freed from all his sins. He who hears this everyday acquires himself of his daily obligations to ancestors, gods and men. The great and rarely attainable merit that a man acquires by the gift of a brown cow, he derives from hearing ten chapters of this Purāṇa⁸.

यस्त्वेतत् सकलं शृणोति पुरुषः कृत्वा मनस्यच्युतं, सर्वं सर्वमयं समस्तजगता माधारमात्माश्रयम्।
ज्ञानं ज्ञेयमनन्तमाद्यरहितं सर्वामराणां हितं
स प्राप्नोति न संशयोऽस्त्विविकलं यद्वाजिमेधे फलम्॥ ५३॥

He who hears the entire Purāṇa, contemplating in his mind Achyuta, who is all things, and of whom all things are made; who is the stay of the whole world, the receptacle of spirit; who is knowledge, and that which is to be known; who is without beginning or end, and the benefactor of the gods— obtains assuredly the reward that attends the uninterrupted celebration of the Aśvamedha rite.

यत्रादौ भगवांश्चराचरगुरु मध्ये तथान्ते च सः,
ब्रह्माजनमयोच्युतोऽखिलजगन्मध्यान्तसर्गप्रभुः।
तच्छृण्वन् पुरुषः पवित्रपरमं भक्त्या पठन् धारयन्,
प्राप्नोत्यस्ति न तत् समस्तभुवनेष्वेकान्तसिद्धिर्हरिः॥ ५४॥

He who reads and retains with faith this Purāṇa in the beginning, middle, and end of which is described the glorious Achyuta, the lord of the universe in every stage, the master of all that is stationary or moveable, composed of spiritual knowledge, acquires such purity as exists not in any world, the eternal state of perfection, which is Hari.

यस्मिन्यस्तमतिर्न याति नरकं स्वर्गोऽपि यच्चिन्तने,
विष्णो यत्र निवेशितात्ममनसो ब्राह्मोऽपि लोकोऽल्पकः।

मुक्तिं चेतसि यः स्थितोऽमलधियां पुंसा ददात्यव्ययः,
किं चित्रं यददं प्रश्राति विलयं तत्राच्युते कीर्तिंते॥५५॥

The man who fixes his mind of Viṣṇu goes not to hell: he who meditates upon him regards heavenly enjoyment only as an impediment: and he whose mind and soul are penetrated by him thinks little of the world of Brahmā; for when present in the minds of those whose intellects are free from soil, he confers upon them eternal freedom. What marvel therefore is it that the sins of one who repeats the name of Achyuta should be wiped away?

यज्ञैयज्ञविदो यज्ञन्ति सततं यज्ञेश्वरं कर्मिणो,
यं यं ब्रह्मप्रयं परापरमयं ध्यायन्ति च ज्ञानिनः।
यच्च प्राप्य न जायते न मिथते नो वद्धेति हीयते,
नैवासन्न च सद्ब्रवत्यति ततः किं वा हरे: श्रूयताम्॥५६॥
कव्यं यः पितृरूपधृग् विधिहुतं हव्यञ्च भुइत्के प्रभु।
देवत्वे भगवाननादिनिधनः स्वाहास्वधासंज्ञितम्।
यस्मिन् ब्रह्मणि सर्वशक्तिनिलये मानानि नो मानिनाम्,
निष्ठायै प्रभवन्ति हन्ति कलुषं श्रोत्रं स यातो हरिः॥५७॥

Should not that Hari be heard of, whom those devoted to acts worship with sacrifices continually as god of sacrifice; whom those devoted to meditation contemplate as primary and secondary, composed of spirit; by obtaining whom man is not born, nor nourished, nor subjected to death ; who is all that is, and that is not (or both cause and effect); who, as the progenitors, receives the libations made to them; who as the gods, accepts the offerings addressed to them; the glorious being who is without beginning or end; whose name is both Svāhā and Svadhā⁹; who is the abode of all spiritual power; in whom the limits of finite things cannot be measured¹⁰; and who, when he enters the ear, destroys all sin? who is substance that knows not change.

नानोऽस्ति यस्य न च यस्य समुद्भवोऽस्ति
वृद्धिर्न यस्य परिणामविवर्जितस्य।
नापक्षयञ्च समुपैत्यविकल्पवस्तु, यस्तं नतोऽस्मि पुरुषोत्तममाद्यमीशाम्॥५८॥

I adore that ever inexhaustible spirit, who assumed sensible qualities; who, though one, became many; who, though pure, became as if impure, by appearing in many and various shapes; who is endowed with divine wisdom, and is the author of the preservation of all creatures.

तस्यैव योऽनुगुणभूग् बहुधैक एव,
शुद्धोऽप्यशुद्ध इव मूर्तिविभागभेदैः।
ज्ञानान्वितः सकलसत्त्वविभूतिकर्ता
तस्मै नतोऽस्मि पुरुषाय सदाव्ययाय॥५९॥

I adore him, who is the one conjoined essence and object of both meditative wisdom and active virtue; who is watchful in providing for human enjoyments; who is one with the three qualities; who, without undergoing change, is the cause of the evolution of the world; who exists of his own essence, ever exempt from decay.

ज्ञानप्रवृत्तिनियमैक्यमयाय पुंसो
भोगप्रदानपट्टवे त्रिगुणात्मकाय।
अव्याकृताय भवभावनकारणाय वन्दे
स्वस्त्रपमभवाय सदाजराय॥६०॥

शब्दादिभोगविषययोपनयक्षमाय।
पुंसः समस्तकरणैरूपकारकाय
व्यक्ताय सूक्ष्मविमलाय सदा नतोऽस्मि॥६१॥

I constantly adore him, who is entitled heaven, air, fire, water, earth, and ether; who is the bestower of all the objects which give gratification to the senses; who benefits mankind with the instruments of fruition; who is perceptible, who is subtle, who is imperceptible.

May that unborn, eternal Hari, whose form is manifold, and whose essence is composed of both nature and spirit, bestow upon all mankind that blessed state which knows neither birth nor decay!

NOTES

1. The term is Brahmanī layah (ब्रह्मणि लयः), which means, 'a melting away,' 'a dissolution' or 'fusion,' from the root Li (ली), 'to liquefy,' 'to melt,' 'to dissolve.'

2. Or with Viṣṇu in the four modifications described in the first section, spirit, matter, form, and time; see Bk. I. Ch. II.

3. Or Śakti, noticed in the last chapter Ch. VII.

4. Or Bhāvaṇās, also described in the preceding section, Ch. VII.

5. This month is also called Jyeṣṭhamūla, which the commentator explains to mean, the month, of which the root or cause (Mūla) of being so called is the moon's being full in the constellation Jyeṣṭhā: but it may be so termed, perhaps, from the lunar asterism Mūlā, which is next to Jyeṣṭhā, falling also within the moon's passage through the same month.

6. This name is also read Tambamitra. One copy has Tava-mitrāya, 'to thy friend,' as if it was an epithet of Dadhīcha; but the construction of the verse requires a proper name. 'Bhāguri' gave it to Tambamitra, and he to Dadhīci: भागुरिस्तंभमित्राय दधीचाय स चोक्तवान्।

7. A different series of narrators has been specified in the first book, Bk. I. Ch. I.

8. This seems to be an injudicious interpolation; it is not in all the copies.

9. The words or prayers employed in presenting oblations with fire.

10. The text has, यस्मिन् मानानि नो मानिनां निष्ठायै प्रभवन्ति। Māna commonly means 'pride,' but here it seems most appropriately rendered by its radical import 'measure:' the measures which are for the determination of measurable things are not applicable to Viṣṇu.
